WHEREAS MILTON VAN DYKE UNmarried, of the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, as mortgagor, did, on the 14th day of December A. D. 1889, duly execute and deliver to the "Union Central Life Insurance Company" a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Ohio and having its principal office in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, as mortgagee, his mortgage bearing date the 14th day of December A. D. 1889, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagee the following described lands situate in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, viz: The west half (1-2) of section thirty-four (34) in township one hundred and forty nine (149) north of range forty-three (43) west, containing 320 acres of land; and which mortgage was, with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for Polk County, Minnesota, on the 16th day of December A. D 1889 at four o'clock and 20 minutes in the afternoon in book "48" of mortgages on pages 182, 183, 184 and 185. And which mortgage was given to secure the payment of one thousand ($1000) dollars and interest thereon at eight per cent per annum payable on the 1st day of January of each year, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with interest coupons attached made by said mortgagor and payable to the order of said mortgagee and which note became due on December 14th, 1899.

And whereas default having been made in the payment of the sum of eighty dollars due as interest upon said mortgage on the 1st day of January A. D. 1893 and the said interest is still unpaid and due.

And whereas it was stipulated by and between the parties to said mortgage that if the maker of said note shall fail to pay any of said money, either principal or interest, when the same becomes due, or to conform to, or comply with, any of the conditions, or agreements, therein contained, to be kept and performed by said mortgagor that the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage shall become due and payable at once.

And the said mortgagee having declared the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable and it does hereby declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable.

And whereas there is now due and payable on said mortgage the sum of one thousand one hundred twenty-eight ($1128) dollars at the date of this notice, and no action or proceedings at law, or otherwise, having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the Statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The west half (1-2) of section thirty-four (34) in township one hundred forty-nine (149) north of range forty-three (43) west, containing 320 acres of land, situated in Polk County, Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston in said county and state, on the 28th day of August A. D. 1893 at 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

FIFIELD VISITED.

WISCONSIN TOWN NEARLY DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Forty Buildings Burned—Loss Will Probably Reach $100,000—Considerable Damage Also Done at Prentice.

PHILLIPS, Wis., July 29.—Great excitement prevailed here about fires in the neighboring towns of Prentice and Fifield. About 4 o'clock a call for assistance came to B. W. Davis, secretary and manager of John R. Davis Lumber company, from Prentice. In about 15 minutes he had the company's engine coupled on two freight cars with hose and 60 of the business men and his employes proceeded to Prentice, where after two hours' vigorous work, the fire was got under control, with the exception of the Soo railway company's coal sheds at Prentice.

About 5 o'clock call for assistance came from Fifield, but as so many were absent at Prentice no one could go. The fire at Fifield was much more serious than at Prentice, starting in the Lintheus' shed at the Clifton House and swept away 39 business buildings and a few dwellings, taking all the business portion of the town. No estimate can be made of the loss at this time, but it must reach over $100,000. Rain came during the night, which for the present will check forest fires that have been doing considerable damage.

FIRED THE STRIP.

The Cherokee Conutry Now a Vast Sea of Flames.

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—A special to The Tribune from Hennessey, O. T., says:

The United States cavalry is reported to have fired the Cherokee strip and it is now a vast conflagration destined to create great loss. The burning prairies make a thrilling scene. Cattlemen started their cattle on a dead run, causing the earth to fairly tremble as they flew before the rapidly approaching flames. Wagons with horses on the gallop, and men with pale faces watched the impending danger as it neared them. Jack rabbits in great numbers, prairie dogs by the score, made haste, driven by instinct, to find a place of safety. This will be a blow to the boomers who have intended to take claims in the strip, as it will destroy the last vestige of fodder for their animals. While the flames were at their height another demon of destruction, the cyclone, came sweeping down from the northwest, carrying the fire and spreading it for miles around.

POOR CROPS THE CAUSE.

A Wisconsin Farmer Murders His Wife and Three Young Children.

ANTIGO, Wis., Aug. 1.—William Nonemacher, a farmer living nine miles southeast of Antigo, murdered his wife and their three children and then made an unsuccessful attempt to take his own life. At the inquest Nonemacher made a full confession. He said that crops were poor and he was afraid of starving. His wife's parents were in Quebec, where they had come all the way from Germany and wanted money, and he had none to send. After the family was aleep he went out and got an axe and returned to do the deed. He said he killed his wife first by three swinging blows on the left temple. He then went into the next room and killed Joseph, 6 years, and Willie, 4 years old. He struck both boys on the head twice. Returning to the room where his wife laid he picked up his 1-year-old baby, held her in one arm and struck her on the top of the head. He then went to the barn, climbed on the roof and jumped 20 feet to the floor of the pigsty, sustaining injuries to the spine and paralyzing his lower extremities.

KILLED HIS WIFE.

A Contractor at Rhinelander Becomes Jealous and Shoots.

RHINELANDER, Wis., Aug. 1.—George W. Smith, a well known contractor, shot his wife, killing her instantly, and inflicted two fatal wounds on himself. Jealousy was the cause. The couple had not lived together for some time and recently Smith had made many requests for her to return to his house. She refused them and he went to her house with the intention of killing her.

Increase in Women Voters.

TOPEKA, Aug. 1.—Returns received at the headquarters of several women's political organizations in this city show that the female vote at the school elections in the country districts of Kansas last Thursday shows an increase of about 100 per cent. The Woman Suffragists claim that this is a great victory for them, proving that the large majority of the women of the state are desirous of a full election franchise.

Must Obey the Health Board.

LANSING, Mich., Aug. 1.—The United States court at Marquette has denied the application of the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie railroad for an injunction restraining the state board of health from enforcing its rules to the alleged inconvenience of that road. Attorney General Ellis was formally notified.

Old Rates in Effect.

OMAHA, Aug. 1.—Judge Bundy in the United States court has granted a temporary injunction restraining the enforcement of the maximum freight law which was to have gone into effect today. This restores the old schedule of rates until the case is heard on its merits in October.

Portugal Included.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—The president has issued a proclamation including Portugal within the benefits of the international copyright act.

WILL CLOSE.

Farmers' Elevators Not to Operate Under the Nelson Law.

HENNING, Minn., July 31.—The board of managers of the Farmers' Elevator association here has decided to close their elevators rather than operate under the rules promulgated by the railroad commission under the Nelson law. This action was taken in pursuance to a consultation held between representatives of the farmers' elevators at Clitherall, Vining and Henning. The closing of these farm houses is arousing a good deal of feeling against the governor and railroad commission. There is talk of putting up platforms for track buyers, but no definite action has been taken.

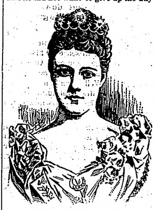
HANDSOME AND ARISTOCRATIC.

The Wife of Chatfield-Taylor, Chicago's Social Dictator.

Chicago as a very new city has not yet had time to grow a real Four Hundred, since that requires three generations of wealth and culture, but she is making a fine start. There are, according to the New York Herald, a "double dozen of Chicago women who are preeminently the leaders of the fashionable set." Among these are Mesdames Potter Palmer, H. O. Stone, Florence Pullman, F. S. Winston, A. J. Caton and others, but the one just now most discussed is Mrs. Howard Chatfield-Taylor.

Her husband succeeded to the wealth of his Uncle Chatfield on condition of taking the latter's family name. His own given name was already Chatfield, and he did not want to give up the Taylor, so he hyphenated and is now Mr. Howard Chatfield Chatfield-Taylor, and as such acquired national fame by acting as the social mentor of Princess Eulalie while she was in Chicago. His wife is the daughter of ex-Senator Farwell and therefore an heiress. She is also remarkably beautiful and brilliantly intellectual, and as the wife of a prominent club man, scholar and diplomat she naturally holds the highest social rank.



MRS. CHATFIELD-TAYLOR.

Mrs. Chatfield-Taylor is very tall and slender, with the figure and bearing attributed by poets and artists to Lady Clara Vere de Vere. Her violet eyes are shaded by long lashes, and her hair is of a soft light chestnut shade. Her complexion is a little too pale, but is relieved by a slight color in the cheeks, and altogether she has what most people call a decidedly aristocratic appearance. And she certainly lives up to it. She is said to be a charming and amiable woman among her intimates, but they are few, and even they do not venture to be very free with her.

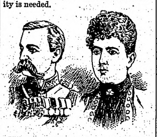
The country seat of the Chatfield-Taylors at Evanston is one of the show places of the west. It was there that Augustin Daly's company gave the famous outdoor performance of "As You Like It," and there many of the titled ones of earth have been entertained.

ON HIS WAY TO SIBERIA.

But He May Be Said to Have Been Banished With Honor.

General S. M. Donkhovskoy, newly appointed governor general of Siberia, who recently visited the World's fair on his way to his province, is a man of medium height and soldierly bearing, with hair and mustache as white as snow, though he is but 53 years old. The fact that rumors of nihilistic plots followed him all the way across the continent led to an unusually searching inquiry into his history, and it turns out that he is a pretty good fellow for a Russian governor.

Originally of a family of but moderate rank, he rose rapidly in the military service and won great honor as commander in the Caucasus during the Russo-Turkish war. Having been promoted and received many honors from the czar, he married the beautiful and talented Princess Barbara Golitzin, who is a member of one of the oldest and best families in the empire and a relative of the czar. He was for many years chief of staff in military charge of 40 provinces, which gave him almost despotic power over the soldiers therein. He performed the duties of this office with such skill and moderation that the czar has sent him to govern Siberia, where, above all other regions in the empire, a rare mixture of firmness, self control and humanity is needed.



GENERAL DONKHOVSKOY AND HIS WIFE.

Now the Russians have not only built the longest railroad in the world eastward along the backbone of Asia from the Caspian sea, but have begun another which is to traverse Siberia to the Pacific. So they will soon be our neighbors on the west. The governor therefore decided to come this way and study routes and institutions, so as to be well informed about us. With him were his wife, his military attache and a number of friends, and the whole party was entertained right royally everywhere they went.

Siberia covers a little matter of 4,826,829 square miles and is not altogether a land of misery. The southwestern provinces have a climate as mild as that of New York and contain some very decent people. It is in the cold central and more northwesterly sections that the convicts and other exiles are. Russian officials are hated so bitterly that when they travel in other countries they are secretly guarded, and the Russian ships while in New York harbor maintained extraordinary vigilance.

THE minister to Nicaraugua, Lewis Baker, finds his job quite different from running the Globe, for there the people shoot back at him. On the Globe he did all the shooting.

THE disasters are not all on the farmer's plate this year. Speculators have caught it pretty rough all round, the last one being Cudahy, the great Chicago pork man, who fails for several million. The farmers can regard these things complacently.

THE Minneapolis Journal does not seem to be much affected by the "era of hard times" that we read so much about in these days, that is, if one may judge from appearances, for it seems to put in just as much expense to keep ahead of all competitors as though times were flush. Its reports from the World's fair are unexcelled, its cartoon service not to be beaten, its Northwestern news service "out of sight," and its general make up better, if possible, than ever. The Journal is the first evening paper we read every morning on arrival of our mail from the south.

The Army Worm.

The following item from the Norman County Index is the first indication of the appearance of this pest that we have seen:

"Wm. Neukome came in from his farm late last evening and stated that the army worm had made its appearance in Martin Rude's, Lou Story's and his own field and had done a lot of damage. The worm was first noticed on Mr. Rude's field of wheat by the disappearance of the leaves and the bare appearance of the stalk. Upon close examination it was found that the worm, which is about an inch long and of a black and yellow color, had eaten off the tip end of the covering of the kernel, leaving it bare. This is where Mr. Neukome thinks the damage will come in as very few of the stalks have toppled over. All of the above gentlemen had very fine looking grain but a few days ago and it will be very unfortunate indeed if it is ruined at this late date."

We find the following little chunk of wisdom in the Warren Register:

"The country is full of eminent cross-roads statesmen and cheap John demagogues financiers, who can tell you all about the great financial questions of the day; how the currency question should be settled and how the complicated governmental machinery ought to be managed. They know "a heap," they do. And yet nine out of ten of these great men cannot make a comfortable living unless he can get into office. He knows all about how to run this great government and everybody's affairs, except his own. This class of patriots are not confined to any one party. They are found in all parties."

The Fertile Journal makes the following cold-blooded, heartless assertion in regard to Brer Hunt of the McIntosh News:

"W. G. Hunt, of McIntosh, was in Fertile Saturday night and put in most of his time discussing county division. He hoped the scheme would carry as it would be the making of McIntosh, of which he is the largest lot holder. Mr. Hunt thought his lots would double in value if McIntosh gets to be a county seat, and besides thinks his work for that end would place him in one of the county offices. Great is Hunt with his schemes."

THE COUNTY FAIR.

free-for all trot was won by Jessie Green, with Billy B. second, and Ned S. third. Time 2:34. This gave Jessie Green first money, Billy B. second and Ned S. third.

In the one-mile trot for farmers horses there were four starters: Geo Barlow's Buckskin, Jos. Capistran's Tige, F. Bivins' Belle, and O Capistran's Brandy. The latter horse is a heavy animal, and looked unlike a trotter, but he jogged right along, and won second money. Buckskin taking first money, Belle third, and Tige fourth. Time 3:12, 3:14, 3:15. A protest was made against the Buckskin horse, as it was claimed he was not a farmer's horse.

The one-mile running race was the most exciting event of the day. There were three entries: Buster, entered by J. J. Fant, East Grand Forks; Nellie Kennie, by W. R. Elliott, East Grand Forks; and Little John, by G. Beaulieu, St. Paul. The first two ran neck and neck, and came under the wire almost together each time. The first and second heats were won by Nellie Kennie, with Buster second and Little John third. Time: 1:56, 1:56.

Two heats of the gentlemen's driving race were trotted. There were eight starters, and they had to be started in two rows. But the speedy ones soon forged ahead and had plenty of room, and came under the wire in the following order: F. Fournet's Prince, Chris Greenhalgh's Black Bess; J. H. Gervais' Charlie G; W. G. Fuller's Jim; Ed. Shraeder's Rob: Ed. Ralston's Sleepy Dick; J. Warninger's Dakota Girl, and Hugh Thompson's Maud. Greenhalgh was set back from second place for driving across in front of another horse. Time: 3:08. In the second heat Prince was first, Black Bess 2nd. Sleepy Dick 3rd, Charlie G 4th, Jim 5th, Rob 6th. Time: 3:18½.

BICYCLE RACE.

In the one-mile bicycle race there were three competitors: W. H. Olds, W. H. Winchester and H. Ducharme. Little Ducharme started off like a whirlwind, and the others took it easy. But after going once around the track they began to pull out and left the little fellow behind. Olds then took the lead and held it until near the finish when Winchester spurted and came in a foot or two ahead. Time: 2:40.

THE PARADE

Of all the horses on exhibition was one of the best features of the fair. Headed by Dave Morrow's stallion Sanquhor, and led by the Fosston band, a procession about three-eighths of a mile long, marched around the track. It was a grand sight, and it was the universal expression that so many fine horses had never been seen together at a county fair in the northwest before.

THE PULLING MATCH.

Teams were entered by Wm. Sampson, Geo. Young, Job Dongherty and Theodore Greenhalgh. About 6300 pounds of stones were placed on a stoneboat, and Sampson's team hitched on. They moved it a few inches, and then each of the other teams were given a trial, but could not move the load. Sampson's team again drew the stoneboat and were awarded the premium.

SATURDAY.

On Friday afternoon it was found that many of the awards had not been made and it was impossible to get through that day, so it was decided to continue the fair another day and reduce the price of admission to 25 cents, while children and carriages were admitted free, and access to the grand stand was free.

BASE BALL.

The Fisher team were not satisfied with the result of the game on Friday and challenged the C. O. D's to play for a purse of $30. This in addition to $20 offered by the association, a meerschaum pipe valued at $35, given by H. F. Brown, and a box of select cigars given by F. W. Markman, made quite a stake to play for and lent additional interest to the game. Fisher has a good team, but their pitcher's arm gave out at the end of the 6th innings, and the Crookston boys got in nine runs, which placed them in the lead and they didn't play their last inning, the score standing 10 to 21 in favor of the C. O. D's. Umpires: Will Cleary for Crookston and Dr. Lankester for Fisher. The following are the names of the players, and the score by innings:

THE RACES.

The unfinished 2:44 trot was put on and resulted in giving Billy B. 1st money, Ned S 2d, and Maud J 3d. Time 2:41.

Two heats of the gentlemen's driving race were trotted to finish the race. First heat: Sleepy Dick 1st, Black Bess 2d, Charlie G 3d, Prince 4th, Jim 5th, and Rob 6th. Time 3:13. Second heat: Prince 1st, Sleepy Dick 2d, Charlie G. 3d. Jim 4th, Black Bess 5th, and Rob 6th. Time 3:10. This gave Prince 1st money, Sleepy Dick 2d, Black Bess 3d, and Charlie G 4th.

A special ½ mile running race best two in three, was run by J. N. Kirsch's Patsey and F. Helmich's Little Joe. The horses were about evenly matched, but Patsey won the 1st and 3d heats and got the purse. Time 59½, 59, 59.

A one-mile run for horses that hadn't won a purse during the races resulted in giving G. Beaulieu's Little John 1st, F. Holmes' Nancy 2d, and Varity's Black Bess 3d. Time 2:02½, 1:55½, 1:59. The time made in the first heat showed there was something wrong, and the riders were called up by the judges and told to let their horses go next time or they would get no money. The next heat was 7 seconds better, and showed that the judges were right.

For the best matched and mated carriage team, there was only one entry, that of Archie McKinnon's Star-Bashaw colts. They are little beauties and no mistake.

THE MUSIC.

On Thursday the Queen City band, under the leadership of Prof. Spain entertained the visitors at the grounds with many of their musical selections, and on Friday the Fosston band livened up things between races. The Queen City band wanted $75 for their services for three days, which the directors thought was reasonable enough, but only engaged them for one day, as they were afraid the attendance would not warrant this extra expense.

THE JUDGES.

R. B. Vining of Thief River Falls, acted as starter during the entire four days, and it is needless to say that he performed his duties well for he is thoroughly "onto his job." No "foxy" horseman can get the best of him.

On Wednesday the judges were A. Kaiser, and Dan O'Conner Jr; Thursday, Ed Love and T. J. McAdam; Friday and Saturday, T. J. McAdam, and Wm. Carleton.

The time-keepers on Wednesday, Thurday and Friday were Tom Morris and John McKinnon; and on Saturday Tom Morris and J. H. Brannon.

THE RECEIPTS.

Wednesday—Gate, $400, grand stand, $31.

Thursday—Gate, $450; grand stand, $93.

Friday—Gate, $360; grand stand $72.45

Saturday—Gate $69.

THE TRANSPORTATION.

Stanley Collins, who was appointed by the directors to look after the transportation, had an abundance of teams engaged and they all did a big business—at ten cents per passenger each way. The hacks also had all they could draw at 25 cents per passenger. Everybody in the transportation business made money, and were well enough satisfied that the price had been put down to 10 cents, although a good deal of kicking had been indulged in previous to the fair in regard to this move.

Notes.

Ed. Love has a stentorian voice, as evidenced by the manner in which he made several announcements from the judges' stand on Thursday, when a strong wind was blowing.

A. D. Wishard and Will Averill took care of the grand stand, and looked after the coin and the comfort of the people.

Felix Fournet has got a three-minute horse all right. He drew a top buggy a mile in 3:08—and never sweat a hair.

E. M. Walsh and Geo. McLean sold tickets at the gates and Dan McKinnon and Al. Glenn acted as gatekeepers.

If you missed the fair you missed an event never before equalled in this county. It was a grand success in every particular and as an educator stands without a peer.

Thursday and Friday the farmers were out in great numbers—the rain of Wednesday night rendering work in the hay-field impossible, thus giving those who are haying an opportunity to attend the fair. On Friday morning the horses and colts were brought out before the judges and such a lot of youngsters as these young colts are never met before in this county and it was a puzzle for the judges to decide which was the finest. In yearlings and two-year olds, there was also a fine display that would do credit to older counties than Polk. If any farmer could look that grand display over and not be inspired with a desire to beat it he is not much of a farmer and the sooner he gets into other business the better for him.

Horticultural hall proved altogether too small to accommodate all the stuff that was brought in for exhibition and will have to be greatly enlarged for the next year.

Judge Ives shut down on the gambling games on the grounds on Wednesday.

Laframboise' stag hound was very uneasy in the absence of his master from the fair grounds. One of the lady superintendents was heard to remark: "Well, that, hound may not get the first premium, possibly, but he seems to be a howling success all the same."

It is said that president Thompson's match at 5:30 p. m., was the closest on the program of Thursday's events. L. E. Gossman acted as starter while Thompson gave the bride and groom away (by not kissing the bride) at the finish. Time about 2:40 in front of grand stand.

Earnest Rolsch's coons attracted a great deal of attention.

Joseph Laframboise's Scotch hound was a howling success, as it were, at any rate he was howling most of the time.

Crookston people turned out in great shape and contributed in no small degree to the financial success of the fair.

Barring the exclusion of cereals and vegetables the mid summer fairs seem to be a success in every way—it certainly is more of a success from a financial point of view than have been the attempts hitherto made to hold a fair in the fall, and this fair would have been a greater financial success only for the fact of the existing financial stringencey in the money markets. To be perfectly successful an agricultural fair must have the earnest and hearty co-operation of the farmers and it would seem that in the fall the farmers are too busy with their plowing and threshing to take the interest in it that is necessary, and yet there are many and strong reasons why the fall is the best time for the fair.

Out of fifteen paintings entered by Mrs. Edward George she got ten first premiums—an excellent showing.

Prof. Strawbridge made a creditable exhibit of penmanship and book-keeping from the Crookston Business College.

Walter Walker, the rider of Black Bess, was expelled from riding on association tracks for one year, for not trying to win the one-mile running race on Saturday, and for "sassing" the starter when reprimanded.

Mrs. W. A. Robertson got nine premiums out of eleven exhibits.

Ever since the association was organized it has not been able to pay its secretary a salary—owing to heavy expenses and lack of support—and the JOURNAL hopes that the directors will be able to at least pay Secretary Wyatt for his services in connection with the fair.

One of the most attractive exhibits on the fair grounds was the pet coons of Earnest Ralsch. The little rascals attracted a great deal of attention.

The display of Larsen, Carpenter & Co., was immense. They handle agricultural machinery and are not afraid of a little expense in letting the farmers know what they have.

What We Saw.

Among the notable things on exhibition in the women's department that our reporter saw was a sample of embroidery in turkey red on a towel, also a crazy patchwork quilt, silk, by Mrs. Teal, of Edna, a lady 75 years old; a picture by Lydia Barb, 15 years old. This young lady has had very little instruction and the picture is wholly hers in design and execution; a log cabin worsted quilt, by Mrs. E. Hammond, a lady 72 years old; one of papa's stockings darned by Fern Lancaster, a little Miss of 4 years; an oil painting by Miss Maude Leguee, 15 years of age; a sample of woolen cloth spun and woven in Crookston by Mrs. Y. Hanson; a picture in water colors by Miss Cora Leguee, 13 years of age; an elegant sample of paper flowers by Miss Clara Bullan; a crocheted flounce, spider-web performed by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, one in particular being that of a little daughter of a Church of England minister. The child was literally covered from head to foot with a red and exceedingly troublesome rash, from which she had suffered for two or three years, in spite of the best medical treatment available. Her father was in great distress about the case, and, at my recommendation, at last began to administer Ayer's Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which effected a complete cure, much to her relief and her father's delight. I am sure, were he here to-day, he would testify in the strongest terms as to the merits of Pretty Cold Weather.

Two boatmen on the Ohio river were talking about cold weather and of a certain severe winter. "It was just awful," said one of them. "At Cincinnati the river was froze tight, and the thermometer went down to 20 degrees below Cairo."

"Below which?" asked his puzzled companion.

"Below Cairo, you blubberhead! You see, when it freezes at Cairo it must be pretty cold, so they say so many degrees below Cairo."

But light was bursting in upon the other. "No, they do not," he exclaimed eagerly. "You've got it all wrong. It's so many degrees below Nero. I do not know what it means, but that's what they say when it's dreadful cold."—Harper's Young People.

Two Strange Meetings.

At table d'hote in a New York hotel two strangers met about a year since. An interesting conversation ended by hearty pledges of mutual friendship. Precisely six months later to the day and almost to the hour they again met, without the slightest prevision or prearrangement, at the same hotel and the same table. During the interval each had traveled around the world, one eastward, the other westward.—Exchange.

Experiments With Durable Woods.

In some tests made with small squares of various woods buried one inch in the ground, the following results were obtained: Birch and aspen decayed in three years; willow and horse chestnut in four years; maple and red beech in five years; elm, ash, hornbeam and Lombardy poplar in seven years; oak, Scotch fir, Weymouth pine and silver fir decayed to a depth of half an inch in seven years; larch, juniper and arbor vitæ were uninjured at the expiration of the seven years.—Chicago Times.

TEST THE MACHINERY.

World's Fair Reapers and Binders to Be Tried In North Dakota Wheat.

ST. PAUL, July 31.—Chief W. I. Buchanan of the department of agriculture and machinery at the world's fair, has addressed a letter to the North Dakota world's fair commission, suggesting that the field trials for agricultural machinery at the world's fair be held in the great wheat fields of the Red River valley, as the most suitable place for them. The trials will probably be held under the joint auspices of the national board and the North Da kota board of world's fair managers at some suitable point on one of the large farms in the valley where the grain will be ripe at the time of the trials, which will be set for between the 15th and 20th of August.

Among the points suggested are the 10,000-acre wheat field of Hon. N. G. Larimore at Larimore, where much of his wheat promises a yield of 35 bushels per acre, and in the fields surrounding the city of Grand Forks, which are expected to be fit for the reaper at that date. The competitive tests for harvesters, self binders and threshing machines will be participated in by nearly all the great machinery firms, and a special train will be run from Chicago to Grand Forks to accommodate the crowds of machinery men and judges who will pass on the merits of the various machines.

WILL SEE THE SIGHTS.

Foreign World's Fair Commissioners to Visit the Northwest.

ST. PAUL, July 26.—A large number of distinguished foreigners will be in St. Paul next month as the guests of President J. J. Hill of the Great Northern railway. A few days ago a letter was written to the various commissioners to the world's fair of the leading foreign nations, asking them to come to St. Paul and view the beauties of the city and the tributary country beyond. It is understood that this invitation will be generally accepted, and Aug. 28 is set as the date of the visit. When the visitors arrive here they will be shown the city and will be tendered an excursion to the famous Red River valley, where they will witness the harvesting of the wheat crop in the greatest wheat fields in the world. President Hill, it is understood, will place a special train at the disposal of the commissioners, and it goes without saying that they will be well taken care of as his guests.

Decision on the Geary Act.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Aug. 1.—Federal Judge Ross has delivered a lengthy decision on the Geary act in the case of the United States vs. Wong Dip Ken. He decided that section 4 of the Geary act, providing for the imprisonment at hard labor, was in contravention of the constitution of the United States and an unjust and infamous punishment where no crime was committed. The Judge held that the balance of the act was valid and ordered the Chinaman deported. He denied a stay of execution asked by the defense.

Think the Jury Was Hasty.

CHICAGO, July 26.—It is quite possible that Daniel H. Burnham and Fire Marshal Murphy will soon be released from the finding of the coroner's jury. State Attorney Kern is convinced that the coroner's jury acted hastily and he will advise the grand jury that the case against them be thrown out.

EMBALMING BODIES.

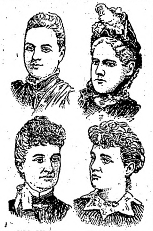
STRANGE OCCUPATION FOLLOWED BY MANY AMERICAN WOMEN.

They Are Adepts at Ministering In the House of Mourning—Modern Developments of the Ancient Egyptian Art of Embalming the Dead.

Very few Americans know that the ancient art of embalming has been completely restored and improved, though not in the ancient way. Not only are bodies now preserved far more perfectly than at any time by the Egyptians, but all the unpleasant, not to say revolting, incidents of their practice are avoided.

At the outbreak of our civil war it was taken for granted that speedy decay was the fate of all the dead, and it was only by such rude appliances as ice and salt or the most pungent drugs that any of the bodies of those slain in battle could be taken home for burial. The demand suddenly created set hundreds of physicians and undertakers to investigating, but such is the natural reverence for all that is old that people generally spoke of enbalming as a lost art, and even the scientific declared that in this climate it would be impossible to preserve a corpse as in ancient Egypt.

At the very beginning of the war one Confederate and several Federal surgeons began to study methods of corpse preservation, and the net result of all their labors and those of many other gentlemen may be summed up in one sentence. All the old, barbarous methods are discarded, and in their stead arterial injection and other processes which do not mutilate the corpse in the slightest degree are employed.

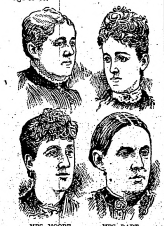


MRS. RUSS. MRS. YOUNG.
MRS. GREENSLADE. MISS GARDNER.

The business of embalming seems like a queer occupation for the gentler sex, but it is an interesting fact that there are now nearly 300 ladies in the United States engaged in undertaking, and several of these are very skillful embalmers. Mrs. J. L. Young of Vinton, Ia., began as her husband's assistant, but soon developed such a mastery of it that he gave her entire control. She is a native of New York, born Miss Fellows.

Mrs. James T. Brett of Milwaukee, a native of Boston, developed early in life a peculiar aptitude for ministering in the house of mourning and is now a truly scientific ladies' embalmer. She is also a writer of ability, a lady of refinement and high social position. Mrs. Fred H. Russ of Chicago, of the firm of "Mr. & Mrs. Fred H. Russ," as it is now established, is also a skillful embalmer and very graceful writer. Mrs. John Greenslade of Bellevue, O., studied embalming under the instruction of Professor Renonard and has been in the practice two years. Mrs. Heaton Dart was the first lady embalmer in New York city and state, took a thorough course of study and has been in the business over 10 years.

Miss Fannie Gardner of Vincennes has the honor of being the first lady undertaker in Indiana. She has also taken a course in the study of embalming and is entering on the work. Mrs. Ellen Moore of Reading, Pa., began to serve as an undertaker in 1851, and at date of her last report had laid out 5,438 bodies. Another very old practitioner is Mrs. George F. Wildman of Bridgeport, Conn., who began in 1845 at the age of 16.



MRS. MOORE. MRS. DART.
MRS. BRETT. MRS. WILDMAN.

It goes without saying that every city and considerable town should have at least one lady well informed on the subject, for so long as present ideas prevail the corpses of both sexes will be embalmed.

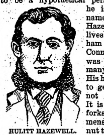
A HAPPY HERMIT.

He Lives In a Tree Because Grant Was Elected President.

The "man up a tree" has been located at last. He has been generally presumed to be a hypothetical personage, but he is not. His name is Hulitt Hazewell, and he lives in Windham county, Conn., where he was born a good many years ago. His house is hard to get at, but is not unpleasant. It is built in the forks of an immense old chestnut tree and is 20 feet above the earth. It has a shingled roof and clapboarded sides and contains three small rooms. A ladder leads up to the front door, and another ladder leads down inside the tree, which is hollow, to a cellar beneath the roots.



HULITT HAZEWELL.

Hazewell affirms that he likes his strange habitation better than ordinary houses. It is sheltered from the sun and rain in summer by the surrounding foliage, and in winter it is above the snow, and the branches protect it from the cold winds. Before he went to live there Hulitt suffered greatly from ague, but he never since has had a symptom of the disease. He makes friends of the birds and the squirrels and cares for no other company, but is quite happy and not of a morose disposition, though he is certainly an odd character.

His oddness is inherited. His father lost his reason trying to invent a perpetual motion machine, but Hulitt never wasted time on things like that. He is a shoemaker and has a snug bank account, besides owning the farm on which his queer dwelling is located. He has lived in his tree for 25 years, and during all that time has not looked into a newspaper or manifested any interest in current news.

Hazewell's selection of his dwelling place was the result of a rash anti-election promise. It was during the Grant-Seymour campaign of 1868. Hazewell was a Democrat and whooped things up for Seymour. The postmaster was a Republican and talked as strongly for Grant. The two men had many an ardent discussion, and at the close of an argument one day the postmaster said he'd be darned if he wouldn't leave the country if Seymour were elected.

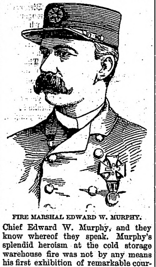
"Well," said Hazewell, "I won't leave the country, but if Grant is elected I'll climb a tree and stay there."

Grant was elected, and Hazewell climbed his tree, and there he has lived the life of a hermit ever since, only coming down to do his farm work and transact other necessary business.

OUT OF THE JAWS OF DEATH.

The Man Who Has Saved More Lives From Fire Than Any In America.

A man must be brave indeed when other brave men complain that he leaves them no chance to show what is in them. But that is exactly what some of the firemen of Chicago say about Battalion Chief Edward W. Murphy, and they know whereof they speak. Murphy's splendid heroism at the cold storage warehouse fire was not by any means his first exhibition of remarkable courage. Since he became a fireman in 1875 he has saved more people from death by fire than any other man in America. He has been eight times honorably mentioned for bravery in general orders written by Chief Swenie, who is not lavish of his praise.



FIRE MARSHAL EDWARD W. MURPHY.

He was the first winner of the Lambert Tree medal, which is given every year as a token of honor for the most courageous act done by a Chicago fireman. But for the rule that prevents a man taking the medal twice he might have had it each year since, for not a twelvemonth has gone by in which some brave deed was not recorded of him. He has been twice dangerously hurt on his way to a fire and has had many narrow escapes from death by suffocation.

At the recent fire, when his white helmet disappeared behind a cloud of smoke, the people who watched thought he was surely going to his death. But while they shuddered with apprehension below he was staggering across the burning roof with the broken body of his comrade in his arms. With Captain Kennedy and Fireman Rehfeldt, who had gone to his assistance, he shared the mighty shout of applause from the crowd that welcomed his appearance, but he was the last man to descend the ladder, and there were tears in his eyes as he saw the ambulance bearing away the man he had done so much to save.

The Champion Cat.

"Baby," a cat belonging to Mrs. Cragin of Worcester, Mass., is believed to be the giant of the domesticated feline race. It is 2¼ feet long, 16 inches high and weighs 30 pounds.

The ex-Empress Eugenie of France is the godmother of 8,834 French children who were born on March 16, 1856.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Montana' Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, he Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. CHAPTER XI.

It were useless to dwell longer on the dread notes of war, to speak of the high enthusiasm of the young, brave hearts that panted to rush to the conflict of the no less determined but saddened mood of the parents, of Lillian's earnest sympathy and ever ready aid to all, or Alfred's regret that youth debarred him from the field. Imagination can call up all that is left untold, but it cannot portray the transformation a few short hours had made in Rose. From a bright, sportive, sunny child she had passed at once into a noble woman.

But the next morning saw Rose at her regular work, self possessed, but bearing unmistakable evidence of some strange change, of a hard battle fought and victory won. Her face was paler than usual, and the merry laugh or cheerful carols that always heralded her approach were hushed, but no trace of gloom or sadness could be seen. A high and holy light burned in her eyes, a lofty purpose, a consecration of all her powers to serve the noble work spoke in every movement. She conversed as unhesitatingly as ever, was as thoughtful of others' happiness, more so if possible, but underlying every word and act was the visible evidence that her mind was working out some plan for future action. Her friends had agreed that no questions should be asked. Time and her own wishes were to decide.

When the morning's work was all disposed of, and the family gathered together for some consultation before dinner was served, Rose quietly told her parents that as Eustace and her brothers were to join the same regiment the next day she was exceedingly desirous that Lillian's marriage should take place before they were separated. She begged that this, which must be their natural wish, should not be delayed out of any needless delicacy on her account. The past, as far as she was concerned, must remain a sealed book to all forever, but if they would help her they must let her see that their happiness was secured as far as human foresight could secure it.

Eustace then acknowledged that he had urged Lillian to consent to such an arrangement, feeling sure that her parents would think it advisable, going as he was into imminent danger, that they should be united before they left. So the two were quietly married. The ceremony ended, the family all escorted the three young men to the camp, not far from the city, a far different bridal tour than Eustace and Lillian had often pictured.

Eustace had far more knowledge of military science than most young men who had not intended to make it their profession, and George's tastes and education had inclined him to become familiar with engineering. As soon as it was known they were ready to enter their country's service in any capacity they were sought after to fill important positions in various regiments then banding together. Eustace was placed as colonel, and that they might be together in the same camp George accepted a captaincy and Ralph a lieutenancy under him rather than to enter into the more desirable positions that had been offered and be separated. This arrangement, highly gratifying to the parents, was planned in part as a just tribute of the estimation in which Mr. Newton was held, but aside from this the intrinsic worth of the young men and their capacities for guiding and organizing volunteers made them a most valuable acquisition where raw troops were liable to be called into immediate action.

In the excitement and hurry of this startling call for volunteers Eustace had not forgotten to arrange his business securely, and to leave also in case of his fall a will by which his property was placed under Mr. Newton's care in trust for Lillian, his wife.

A clause in the will was also executed, known only to Lillian and placed in her hands, securing the Montgomery property to Mr. Newton and his heirs in case of its present owner's death.

Lillian, immediately after her marriage, assumed the entire care of little Jennie Le Barron, and with her husband's approbation withdrew her from the city school and placed her in an institution near her father's.

Of Estella Le Barron little was known. It was supposed she had embarked for Europe immediately after her ill advised marriage without learning of the desolation of her parents' house. Some weeks after her father's death a draft from Paris on him had been received at the bank where he had so often done business and of course rejected, by which it would seem that up to that time De Courtney still supposed that his wife was a millionaire's daughter. A report was also current that De Courtney was but an obscure adventurer, and when he found how he had been overmatched in duplicity by the crafty Estella he had deserted her, saying that his wealth and high titles were but imaginary and that a wife and children waited for him in America.

This information had been communicated to Mr. Newton by Freeman, the former partner in the old business, and anxious to ascertain if there was any foundation for the report he made inquiries.

Nothing satisfactory could be learned, however. That Maud had received some tidings of her sister was apparent, but equally so that her husband was quite unwilling her former friends should learn anything from them of her condition. On this point for once Maud coincided with her husband. She cherished too bitterly the memory of her sister's dishonorable desertion to allow one emotion of pity for her disappointment to find a place in her heart.

The splendid equipage, costly furniture and magnificent attire with which Varney had bought his bride lost their value, and her heart cried out for the love she had so madly thrown away. And other sources of unhappiness opened before her. It took not many weeks for her to learn that an imbecile and superannuated husband was not so safely scorned and slighted as she had fancied. Her extravagance he could well afford and easily overlook, but contempt and insults unhesitatingly cast upon him he would not brook, and the misguided woman was shortly made to feel that an old man's unrestrained exhibition of vindictive wrath was not the least miserable part of her existence.

Already had the call for hospital stores reached every town and village, and many active and energetic women were banded together to work for the sick and wounded among our brave defenders who might soon be needing this aid.

The letters that comforted our friends from their absent ones almost daily kept them very thoroughly informed of the privations of the soldiers, and every moment they could be spared from necessary labor was conscientiously devoted to preparing articles for those so well deserving the care.

One evening when the ladies were quietly at work sewing, scraping lint or knitting army mittens and Alfred diligently improving the precious hours in study Mr. Newton came in from the village with papers and a letter from George, saying:

"Our boys will not complain much longer of inactivity, I think. There is every indication of some important movements, and if our generals lead the men into the field efficiently we may hope that this sad rebellion will soon be quelled and peace once more bless the land."

George's letter was written in the hurry and excitement of preparing his men for action the next day. It was short, but full of zeal and courage. He spoke in high praise of the men under his command.

"You will have no cause to blush, dear ones, if we bear ourselves half as gallantly on the field as these privates will do. A set of more earnest, determined men I never saw.

"It would be glorious if our generals were as ready to give themselves as unselfishly to their country's service as are our common soldiers, but I greatly fear that at the beginning our work will be retarded and the war protracted for months, when weeks should end it, by the maneuvering of those in command, some of whom appear to be thinking far more of their own petty political ambitions than of the glory and honor of our country.

"My dear Lillian, if all our leaders were as kind, yet firm, as trustworthy and pure hearted as your noble husband, I feel that a very short time would suffice to bring peace and good will once more to bless our land."

Tears were falling silently when the letter was ended, but Rose's eye alone was undimmed. After a moment's pause she stepped softly to her mother's side, saying:

"I waited but for this, dear father and mother, and now I must reveal my intentions and crave your blessing, feeling sure you will raise no objections to that which I solemnly believe to be a call of duty. I wish to offer myself as a nurse and secure a place near my brothers, and if possible I would be there before any battle, that I may be near whatever be their fate. Will you let me leave tomorrow?"

"Why, my dearest Rose," exclaimed her mother, "you could not be ready even if it were wise for you to undertake such a mission. Think how little you know of nursing, my dear girl; how little you have been accustomed to such deprivations as you must meet in that situation; how little you have seen of wounds and pain and agony."

"More reason, mother, that I should now learn. As for deprivations, have I not known as much as have my brothers before they left us? Our men must risk life and limb in this struggle, and have our women no sacrifices to make? For some time I have been trying to find something that I could do, and for a time I felt my sex shut me off from every earnest manifestation of love for my country that required any self denial. But within a few weeks Lillian made my path clear before me when she so earnestly besought her husband and parents to allow her to do what I should have done before and would do now. The reasons that sustained her will not hold in my case. Some must 'stay by the staff' at home, for we all know that work absolutely necessary to the comfort and strength of those who go out from among us is to be done here as well as in the field."

Rose had spoken clearly and without excitement, such as was visible among all her listeners. All were much surprised, and after she ceased they remained silent for some moments. Then her father, turning to Mrs. Newton, said:

"I do believe, my dear wife, that Rose is right, and hard as it will be to send her from us, yet I am impressed with the idea that God has put it in her heart to do her part in this great work."

"But, my dear Edward, our child has no experience in a sickroom—not the least—and has she, so tenderly nurtured, so lovingly shielded—has she nerve to witness the shocking scenes that must meet her eye daily?"

"Ah, my child, you could not bear it."

"Some one must, mother, and why should I be exempt? I seek it not for pleasure or to gratify my taste, and yet I may find more satisfactory and abiding peace in this holy work than I ever experienced before."

"Again, wife, I must say I think our child judges correctly. I do not fear that she will be injured by the mission."

"What says Lillian? Does she approve of her sister's plan?"

"Most decidedly, and I would gladly join her myself could I gain yours and my husband's consent. I have been longing to repeat my first petition every hour."

"No, no, your mother must not be left without one daughter. We cannot spare you both unless there are more emphatic calls than we have yet had for assistance."

"Dear Rose," said Mrs. Newton, with some reluctance, "you must pardon me if before I give any answer I remind you that should you take this step you may have your feelings sorely tried by hearing or seeing more of Grenville than will be for your peace of mind."

A deep flush overspread her face for a moment, but she answered calmly: "I understand you, my kind mother. I have thought it all over. I make no boast of coming through this trial unscathed. There is a sore spot still at my heart. I have been for some time making all needful preparations to start at a moment's notice, and now, mother, give me your blessing and permission to start tomorrow."

"My darling child, I dare not refuse it your heart is so moved toward this work lest I be found fighting against the direct teaching of Providence. I have tried to give up my children cheerfully to this good work, but I have not thought that my daughters might be called as well as my sons, not but what my sons are as precious," said the mother, her eyes resting lovingly on Alfred.

"But, Rose, you cannot take this journey alone, and there are some preliminary steps to be taken at Washington before you will be allowed to go as nurse to your brother's camp."

"I will go with our girl and see that all is safely arranged before I leave her," said Mr. Newton. "But on second thought, my child, I do not see how you can leave as early as you desire. You will need money. I have but little."

"No, father, you need not trouble. You know I have not used my pony for months and shall have no further use for her. I told Alfred some time ago to try and find a purchaser for her. He has sold her for $300."

"But, sister," said Lillian, "this sacrifice must not be made. You surely will not hesitate to let your brother Eustace defray all your expenses."

"It is no sacrifice, sister mine. I have not seen Fairy since—that day" (Grenville had bought the horse at Mr. Newton's sale and presented it to Rose) "and do not wish to."

"Well, my Rosie, you shall leave tomorrow, and our God will have you in his holy keeping."

Mr. Newton had no difficulty in securing a nurse's position for his daughter or of obtaining permission for her to locate near her brother's station.

There was great rejoicing in Dunbar's camp when these unexpected guests arrived and appeared before the brothers. They said Rose was just the one needed. There were many then in the hospital sick and pining for a kind word that could cheer their hearts.

A comfortable apartment was procured for Rose in a cottage near to her chosen labor, and then Mr. Newton reluctantly bade his children farewell and hastened back to the anxious friends at home and the increasing labors of the farm.

The planting was accomplished, fruit trees blossomed and set, promising an abundant harvest, and the strawberries already showed bright, ruby fruit in rich profusion. At a suggestion from some horticultural friends Mr. Newton early in the spring made very satisfactory arrangements for the prompt sale of all the fruit he wished to dispose of, and that encouraging and remunerative beginning dispelled all fears for the success of the new enterprise in which they had embarked.

The war and the absence of their children were the only shadows over their household, and but for that Mrs. Newton and Lillian often said they should have been too happy. They were naturally enthusiastic lovers of the country, and their freedom from the shackles of fashionable life and the change to the useful and common sense occupation of their present position were so much more congenial that they looked to the past with no cravings or regrets.

So sped on the days at the farm. Active labor by day for all (for Lillian insisted on bearing her full share as strictly as before her marriage had given her competence if not wealth); at night books and papers for the men and the busy needle for the women.

The papers and news from the army were the first chosen and tidings from the loved ones eagerly looked for. The expected battle, which had so excited our friends, was still delayed, to the great disgust and vexation of those who had given up home and its comforts to work for their country.

In a letter home Rose wrote:

"My life is as different from your own, my sister, as one can well imagine, so unlike anything I have ever experienced that I scarcely realize that I am an inhabitant of the same world I once lived in.

"Many a poor fellow committed to my inexperienced care would be so much comforted if there was some one here to speak to him from a mother's heart. To see a fair, young boy—for many are but boys—with a broad, white brow that a mother's lips have often kissed, and the bright brown curls clustering around it that some fond sister has fondly played with, as I used to with Ralph's—sick, wounded or dying, and hear him when his mind wanders or the death film closes his eye, call, 'Mother! mother!' Then I am so powerless. My voice but mocks his longing! Such scenes I, who never saw death before, have witnessed often within the last month, and at times my heart is full of agony.

"Ah, Lillian, my sister, you do not yet know what a noble husband God has given you. He is the idol of his regiment. Most deservedly so. I wish you could see his camp. It is the admiration of all beholders. George and Ralph are great favorites here. Ah, father, you may well be proud of such sons.

"In a few days, or I greatly mistake the signs, there will be a stout battle here. I am not revealing any secret. It is freely spoken of, as it has been often before, and nothing came of it. But this time there can be no mistake. Everything indicates such an event more clearly than ever before, and our men are full of enthusiasm in consequence. But be not overanxious, my beloved ones; we know that our cause is the right one."

Thus wrote Rose, and the tone of this and other letters gave comfort and confidence to the family at home. Even her mother acknowledged that her daughter had done wisely in entering on such duties and felt she could in no way have risen so bravely above the shock Grenville's treason had given her as by laboring for those who were true to their country.

"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap," and Mr. and Mrs. Newton, while they were accumulating riches for their children, had also sown good seed in their hearts and watered and nurtured it with their prayers. The wealth had vanished, but the fruit of the spirit was ripening into an abundant harvest. They had put their "trust in the Lord, and verily they had not been disappointed."

CHAPTER XII.

And now there came frequent tidings of one battle after another, but always followed speedily by telegrams from Rose to assure the anxious home friends that, although the first in the conflict and the last to leave the field, her brothers thus far had been mercifully preserved unharmed. Dunbar's horse had once been shot under him, but he escaped without injury. His brave men, however, had suffered terribly. More than 20 of George's gallant 100 had fallen, and 12 more were now in the hospital, watched over by their gallant captain's sister with a tenderness and hearty sympathy that made her like an angel in their midst.

Then came another pause, during which the regiments had leisure to fill up their broken ranks, recruit their exhausted strength and restore order again in their camps. But it was only the quiet of the tempest while it gathers force to burst again upon the earth with fury and desolation.

Our friends at the farm had enjoyed one of those quiet, delightful Sabbaths that July sometimes bestows after a severe thunderstorm. Toward evening all were on the veranda watching the shadows falling over the clover fields, while the sun edged the grand old hills with fire as he slowly sunk to rest behind the dark mountains that overlooked the placid lake.

Just then a horse's hoofs were heard, and the next moment a horse and rider were seen rapidly approaching the house. It was an uncommon occurrence on the Sabbath, and every face betokened alarm. As the rider halted at the steps Mr. Newton rose and received a dispatch. The boy lingered one moment and then rode quickly away. To how many does the sight of a telegram bring fear and forebodings of evil, even when from business necessities they are of frequent occurrence, and how one not accustomed to receiving them shrinks from the first glance of the contents! Thus stood Mr. Newton, while every eye turned anxiously toward him. His own face was very pale and his hand trembled when at last he opened it. As his eyes took in the message a heavy groan burst from his lips, but he instantly controlled himself as his wife and daughter exclaimed:

"Oh, my boys!" "My husband!"

"Be brave, my dear ones. It is from Rose. A fearful battle at Bull Run. We are shamefully beaten. Eustace slightly wounded, but George and Ralph are missing. Come—come to me quickly!"

Ah, was not this a bitter cup? How will they bear it? The noble father, the tender mother, the loving bride and sister and the dear younger brother! Their faith and trust in God must be strong indeed to carry them safely through these deep waters!

Lillian was the first to speak.

"We must go at once, dear father. Eustace will be well cared for, but Rose needs counsel and support immediately."

"Yes, my darling. But there is no train that we can reach till early Monday morning.

"My dear wife, you are not well. I dread this rapid and exciting journey for you. Will you not remain at home, leaving Lillian and myself to do what we can for our children, yet keeping you informed by daily telegrams?"

In the early morning Alfred returned.

"Good news. I telegraphed to Rose as soon as I reached the city and received this answer not 10 minutes before I was obliged to leave," handing the dispatch to his father.

"George safe with us. Eustace doing well, but Ralph is a prisoner. Let Alfred come with Lillian. Father and mother can do nothing toward Ralph's release."

Great was the joy at this release from part of their fears, but it was with difficulty that the mother could be persuaded to relinquish the idea of going herself. She at last consented on one condition—that her husband should accompany Lillian, leaving Alfred to supply his father's place at home.

Mr. Newton and his daughter reached the camp without any delay, sending back by the magic wires an immediate report of their safe arrival and the comfort their presence gave the anxious children.

At noon the next day came the following:

"Ralph is safely with us. Expect a letter the next mail."

The letter came in due time, as follows:

"Dunbar's wound in the left arm, from a bayonet thrust, was slight, and would not have kept him from his work a day, but at the same time he was knocked from his horse, rescued by his men and carried from the field.

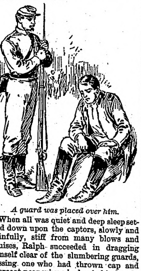
"George and Ralph have been wonderfully preserved. Their regiment was among the most fearless and daring."

In a letter to his wife Mr. Newton thus describes how Ralph appeared in the Union lines:

"Yesterday afternoon as we were seated in Eustace's tent a loud shout from his men outside brought us all upon the grounds. Great excitement was manifested by all, and repeated cheers, from the front sounded strangely out of place where all but a moment before had been quiet, moody or despondent. As the men saw the colonel leave his tent they made way for us to pass toward the front, and in the distance we saw that a horseman riding furiously was the occasion of the excitement. The instant Dunbar espied him he exclaimed: 'Look! Surely I cannot be mistaken. That is Prince, but such a uniform—who can the rider be?' It was their colonel's well known horse the men had cheered so heartily, but they now stood anxiously waiting for a nearer approach to recognize the rider.

"It was but a moment's suspense before, without checking his headlong speed, he stripped the rebel coat from his shoulders, threw it from him and raising the cap from his head tossed it high in the air to fall in the ditch beyond, with a full, joyous 'Hurrah!' which was answered by the most deafening cheers. We all recognized that voice. Rose sprang forward, crying 'Ralph! Ralph! my darling brother!' as he dashed into our midst flung himself from the panting horse and clasped her in his arms."

The letter still further explained that on the first night of Ralph's capture those who had charge of the prisoners encamped in a wood not many miles from Bull Run, being unable to proceed farther and confident that our army had been too greatly dispirited to rally sufficiently to regain what they had so needlessly lost. From the first Ralph was determined to escape before he reached their prison house. A guard was placed over him, who abused and insulted him in the most heartless and unnatural manner. He assumed meanwhile a weary, dispirited manner, and at last appeared to sink into the heavy sleep of great exhaustion. This after a time relaxed their vigilance, and they yielded to fatigue and whisky, which soon completely overpowered them.



A guard was placed over him.

When all was quiet and deep sleep settled down upon the captors, slowly and painfully, stiff from many blows and bruises, Ralph succeeded in dragging himself clear of the slumbering guards, passing one who had thrown cap and overcoat near where he lay in his drunken stupor. It took but a moment to disguise himself in a rebel's uniform, and greatly rejoicing to find a loaded revolver in the pocket silently passed beyond the guarded tent. Then the rash boy, remembering that he had seen a number of captured horses fastened near by as he marched to the prison tent and sure that he recognized Eustace's horse among them, delayed till he could judge by his ear of the position, then crept skillfully among the trees to the spot where they were tethered. Prince's low, welcoming whinny revealed him before Ralph, by the fitful moonlight, could be sure of his exact locality. Instantly unfastening the halter he sprang into the saddle, which remained as the master had fallen from it, and dashed fearlessly away.

Evidently the sentry was half asleep or had not distinguished the little noise he made from the stamping and restlessness of so many weary and unfed horses around him, but leaving the swamp where they were tied and passing, as he must, the tents a guard sprang forward, presenting his musket, and demanded the countersign. Not daring to use his pistol lest he should too soon rouse the sleepers within, the only answer he returned was a well directed blow, which staggered the man, giving Prince freedom to rush forward. The sentinel recovered himself immediately and fired, but with an unsteady hand. It was sufficient, however, to rouse the men, and in a few minutes he could hear the confused and fierce call to arms. Many random shots were fired, but the good steed carried the brave boy gallantly, and he was soon beyond their pursuit.

Early in the morning after this dark and perilous ride Ralph once ventured to halt at a house by the wayside and ask for a piece of bread and a cup of milk, which were given him, whether out of respect for his borrowed uniform or from a kindly heart he could not judge, and twice he stopped to give the faithful Prince a good feed of grass and draft of pure water. When at last the camp with Eustace's regimental colors flying opened on his sight, it was the happiest moment of his life.

Twice had Dunbar in the midst of a furious assault been brought face to face with Grenville. The first was but a passing glance as in the rush of battle they swept past each other. The last was only a few moments before Eustace's fall. A rebel aimed full at him while giving an order, but in a moment a cavalry officer dashed to the soldier's side, threw up his arm by a quick movement of his sword, as if by accident, and with a sad look raised his cap to Eustace and wheeled off in an opposite direction. That officer was Jasper Grenville. Ralph had also seen him, and burning with indignation, guided only by the impulse of the moment, endeavored to reach him and in that rash attempt was surrounded and taken a prisoner.

Mr. Newton and his daughter returned to the farm, and time sped on, bringing weekly reports from absent ones and meting out full measures of quiet enjoyment for those at home, crowning their toil with great success and more than the hoped for remuneration. The harvest had been carefully garnered, and the sales were rapid. The family were beginning to look forward to the winter as a period of less severe toil, bringing leisure for much reading, and, of more value than all else, a reasonable hope that their children might be able to secure a few days for home, as the slow and seemingly sluggish efforts of the various corps and divisions to recruit would indicate there was little expectation of active service during the winter.

One cold and snowy evening the family were gathered around the cheerful fire, when without a word of warning Rose and Ralph walked in and were clasped in their parents' arms. Some minutes of joyful greeting and glad surprise passed before Lillian could gain an answer to her inquiries after her husband. Then she learned that neither Eustace nor George could be spared, as their regiment was ordered to join the army at Vicksburg, with 10 days for preparation. The brothers had urged Ralph to obtain a short furlough and accompany his sister on this visit, bearing their loving greetings, while they tarried behind to expedite arrangements.

A real home supper was prepared for the beloved guests, and while seated at the familiar board all care and anxiety was dismissed from their minds. If Lillian's heart yearned for her husband's presence and the parents missed George's thoughtful attentions, it was carefully concealed during this meal. Once more gathered in the cheerful parlors, questions flowed continually, but not so absorbingly as to prevent the parents from giving Rose's looks and words careful attention. They were soon satisfied that no corroding sorrow was preying upon their darling's peace. True, she was in many respects greatly changed. The strange, sad experience of her hospital life had given a maturity of thought and expression that was singularly contrasted with her bright, girlish face and figure. Years of home life could never have developed the strength and enthusiasm of her character as the last two months had done.

The bond between herself and twin brother was even stronger than when in their home life. No shadow of concealment ever came between them, and without words they seemed to understand each other's hearts instinctively.

When it was time to retire, Rose said: "Stay a moment longer, please. I have a few words to say before retiring.

"I know, my dear parents, you have had much anxiety on my account and many fears that I might not be able to rise above the cruel disappointment that came so suddenly upon me. I do not pretend that I have not suffered very bitterly. But it was the pain of misplaced confidence, the knowledge that what I had thought a priceless treasure was worse than dross, a thing to loathe and scorn. It takes time to banish regrets for such impoverishment, but the love so unutterably squandered can never be renewed. From the hour that Jasper Grenville joined himself to traitors against his country his power over me ceased. He is now a prisoner, taken by a scouting party in the rash attempt to obtain a clandestine interview with me. I am thankful that it did not fall to my brothers to capture him, but it is well that his efforts against our country are ended, at least for the present.

"Lillian, my sister, you look at me in sad surprise that I speak of him so coolly. You think me hard and unfeeling!"

"Ah, no, Rosie! But I cannot understand how a love so strong as yours was can be so totally annihilated, even if the object prove, as Grenville has, utterly unworthy."

"Ah, dear sister! If this had been of the common order of sin or worthlessness, there might have lingered some shades of tenderness, but for the son who would trample upon his mother, the traitor who would betray and destroy his country, there can exist no feeling but entire indifference. Yes—a stronger one than that—detestation."

"And what," interrupted Ralph, "do you imagine that Grenville hoped to gain by a disguised entrance into my sister's presence? Why, to persuade her to leave us and allow the first rebel chaplain to marry them and then convey her to his southern home! Or, if she thought that was asking too much, to secure her promise to be his when the south had subdued us."

"How did you learn this?" asked his father in amazement.

"When captured, he was marched close by our camp and urged his guard to procure an interview with our colonel. Eustace met him and brought back an earnest petition for one word with Rose. Suspecting Grenville imagined our sad reverses had somewhat disheartened us, and that he might also flatter himself that a sight of him would revive her love, our little heroine consented to go with Dunbar. It was well that I was off on a scout. I could not have borne his assurance so quietly as Rose and our Eustace did."

"Well, he understands me now, my dear parents, and will never, I am sure, entertain so wild a hope again. That he suffers I do not doubt, and for the suffering, though deserved, I am sorry. But he chose this crooked path against all our entreaties and has no one to blame but himself. We will not waste this short reunion by any more words of him. I thought it best to tell you this at once that all the rest of our time might be undisturbed. One of the old good night hymns, papa, if you please, and then we will go to rest that we may be prepared for great pleasure tomorrow."

While Rose and Ralph were on their visit home Dunbar had been sent with a strong force to disperse an encampment of rebels who had stationed themselves inconveniently near our lines. He was successful in his mission, had routed them completely and taken many prisoners. During the time that this party waited about the union station they had with them many females of the baser sort, who had often been surprised in attempting to lure our men outside the lines, but great watchfulness and strict regulations had given them little encouragement.

Mrs. Durand returned this week from a visit with relatives in Wisconsin.

Will Carlton, not the poet, but the Angus granger, took in the fair on Saturday.

Mrs. E. O. Flanders returned on Saturday morning from a long visit to Canada.

Neil Grogan returned from Superior Friday and took a hand in the ball games on Friday and Saturday.

Rev. J. G. Smith preached at Mentor and Fertile Sunday. He expects to start for Chicago next week to attend the World's fair.

A. L. Mitchel came in this week for a few days visit at the old stamping ground. He is now on the road and will make Crookston every 60 days.

Ole Johnson Stalmo, Jr., a farmer living almost a mile south of Fisher, had his barn and one horse burned last Saturday. The fire caught from a smudge.

W. H. Averill, Al. Kaiser, Sam Sutor, O. L. Larson, Louis Soderberg, E. S. Marters and Peter Casper were among the Fosstonites who attended the fair.

On Monday four horses belonging to Wm. Kruger, and mortgaged to Sam Bearns, were sold by Constable Holt at Schraeder's barn.

E. O. Flanders has a fine piece of corn, about five acres which looks now as though there would be an extraordinary yield. It looks rank enough to have grown in some Southern climate.

John McKinnon's little girl has been qute ill with brain fever and for a time her life was despaired of, but she seemed better up until Wednesday a. m. when her condition was such as to give little hope of recovery.

The Fosston band received many well deserved compliments on their fine appearance and excellent music. Each night of their stay in our city they gave open air concerts and if there was one inhabitant of Crookston who did not turn out to listen to them he was either sick or out of town. Verily Fosston has a band to be proud of.

Ed. Love in the Kittson County Enterprise says: "Messrs Thompson and Wyatt are deserving great credit for the efficient manner in which they have managed the whole affair. It is a credit to the Red River Valley. Another year, it is understood the fair will be open to competition from Kittson and Marshall county."

The JOURNAL was favored with a case of pop from Peterson's factory during the heated spell and we are prepared to say that they are making the finest summer drink there is going—no feller need have anything finer to make him completely happy. Pop—ulists have been heard to say that the Crookston factory beats Donnelly or any other pop factory in the state.

The entertainment at the Grand on Friday evening was a very good one though poorly attended. The violin exercises of Miss Mae Winters was exceedingly good and the "Farmer Thistlepod" of Edythe Alcott Strong was inimitable. Miss Muriel Parrett's highland fling was received with evidences of great approval and the audience seemed unwilling to let her go off the stage.

T. G. Thompson: Have I got any news? Well, not of much importance, I guess, but I hear that O. J. Barnes contemplates moving over onto Sampson's Woodland condition, near Jupiter Epluribus Morrisey. If he does that, he would, hereafter better write his name in full—Ole Johnson Bjarnes, on the principle of "when in Rome do as the Romans do."

The entertainment at the opera house on Thursday evening was gotten up under difficulties that seldom fall to the lot of man and many there are who would have given up the job, but when Frank Arnold advertises a show—really sets to work to get up a show you needn't be afraid to risk every dollar you have over a million that there will come pretty near being a show about the time specified and it will come pretty near being a good one. Had everybody who promised fulfilled the promise the thing would have been dead easy but "freaks" and "attractions" kept dropping off until at 7 o'clock over one-half the promised events had melted away and their place had to be supplied by something else—and it was and every body seemed well satisfied with the show.

Hans Clausen says he has oats that he will cut this week.

Jay Durand returned last week from a visit in Wisconsin.

Alley & Konzen, of Hallock, had a fine colt entered in the races.

Ed. Love was down from Kittson county with a world-beater for the races.

Eight or ten farmers from Norman county were in attendance at the fair on Friday.

The weather during fair week beat all previous records being all that could be desired neither too hot nor too cold.

George Crawford, an employe on the Times, had a finger taken off in the job press on Thursday. It will lay him off some time.

Gus Ackerland informed our reporter that he was going down to the Lockhart farm to attend to some carpenter-work there for two weeks.

Alvah Newland and his sister, Miss Jennie, returned from a five week's visit to relatives in Wisconsin on Sunday morning. They spent a week with friends in Iowa.

A small notice in the JOURNAL of last week and the week previous of Jersey cows for sale brought many responses and some sales. I have yet remaining several choice young heifers that appearances indicate will make grand cows. Address H. E. COOKE, JOURNAL office.

C. H. Saake's brother Freidrich, who is on his way to Crookston from Germany, telegraphed from Chicago Tuesday that he would be here today.

Last Tuesday Larsen, Carpenter & Co. received a car load of binding twine from the state's factory at Stillwater—which they will sell at bottom prices to the farmers.

A. D. Wishard, who was out to Red Lake Falls Saturday, says that Walker's logs had passed that point and will probably all reach here by Saturday next.

Louis Gooler went to Terrebonne Saturday to take charge of a school.

Mrs. W. E. Slocum and cousin, Edith Willey, went to Maple Lake Tuesday for a week's outing.

Postmaster Dawley is greatly disappointed at a letter which he has just received from the post-office department at Washington "regretting that lack of funds will prevent the establishment of a free delivery service in Crookston." Under the law Crookston post-office is entitled to free delivery and it should established at once.

Hon. Wm. Carlton informs the JOURNAL that he has been over the north part of Polk county quite extensively and he estimates the average yield at eight bushels per acre. He says that while he saw some pieces that will do much better there are some that will have to be plowed up as the grain is no good. Some early pieces he saw were well headed out and good long heads.

Hallock News: "Alley & Konzen took their two year old 'Eulalie' to Crookston to compete for the two year old purse. Eulalie had a walk-away and came out ahead without effort. Besides making a record to start on, she captured a hundred dollar purse. Alley & Konzen have just cause to feel satisfied with their investment in fast stock if it continues to 'pan out' at this rate."

Speaking of Rev. R. H. Battey's work in the training school now going on at Hallock the News says: "Rev. R. H. Battey who is conductor of the training school took hold of his work like an old veteran that he is. Mr. Battey has been prominently connected with educational work for many years so he feels perfectly at home and has the ability of making others feel the same. The work is being carried on with a vigor and enthusiasm that insures good results."

On Saturday evening as one of Ole Bjoin's teams was returning from the grounds with a merry party of girls, the Misses Copeland, Marin and Martin, when near the N. P. depot crossing, a tug unfastened which allowed the pole to drop. The horses became unmanagable and ran. At the Presbyterian church the carriage was overturned throwing the occupants violently to the ground and the horses freed from it dashed along to Main street, from thence to Fletcher street, along that to Broadway where, in front of the Montreal house, they collided with a buggy in which was Mrs. M. E. Bartlett and Miss Lizzie Arnold, fortunately doing no further damage than to give the ladies a lively scare, thence they ran into the alley between the Montreal house and Vine's new block where they were secured. No one was seriously hurt in the whole escapade, but Miss Edith Copeland sustained a severe sprained wrist. It seems almost miraculous that no more extensive damage was done as there were many vehicles on the street liable to collide with the runaway.

When you trade at Sture's you don't have to bother your head about it if your dollar happens to be silver instead of gold—silver is as good as the gold with Sture.

Mrs. J. R. Barb did not wait for the institute to come along and instruct her how to raise raspberries but for several years she has been selling bushels of berries in this market, raised in her own garden, and they prove the most profitable crop on the farm. She has bushels and bushels of them every year and always finds a good market for the berries in this city, and such luscious berries—it fairly makes your mouth water just to look at 'em! And right in the face of the stubborn fact we have heard men say: "This country is no good for raising berries, you can't never raise no berries here no-how!" It requires some work some skill and some patience but it can be did it seems.

Of the minstrel company that will appear at the opera house on Friday evening, Aug. 4th, the Boston Globe says:

Duncan Clark's Lady Minstrel Company, with a large coterie of specialty artists thrown in, forming a double company, as it were, is the attraction at the Windsor Theatre this week. That it is worth seeing is shown by the two tremendous houses which greeted the performance yesterday. The first part a lady minstrel scene, introduced 30 pleasing young ladies in attractive costumes. The afterpiece was a burlesque on "Ermine," "The Arrival of Sullivan," etc., and introduced the entire company. A feature was the dudes' parade, and the costuming throughout was thoroughly in good taste. The programme is one that cannot fail to pack the cosy South End theatre afternoon and evening for the balance of the week.

Rev. C. V. Billings of Hartford, Conn. will preach in the Congregational church next Sunday, Aug. 6th. Services at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. Everybody made welcome.

Fires were lighted in the big saw mill on Tuesday and on Wednesday the welcome sound of the big whistle was heard. At the time of going to press it was said that sawing would commence on Thursday or Friday.

Last Saturday District Attorney Eugene Hay arrived in the city enroute for Stephen to try a case. He managed in some way to miss the north train so he went to S. L. Collins for a team to drive up, then went to breakfast, after which Collins started out and overhauled the train at Euclid. MORAL.—If you miss a train all you have to do is to get a rig at Collins' stables and you can catch any train out of Crookston.

Mr. Edward Lanctot returned on Friday from a visit to the old home in Canada, having visited the World's Fair en route. Mr. L. was taken sick while on the return journey and has been quite under the weather since his arrival home. It is nothing serious, however and he may be expected to be around again in a short time.

The Cleveland house did a rattling business during the fair—from 40 to 50 transients every day. That hotel always does business, however.

Will Hoch: I saw barley in the shock on the old Baine place north of the city when I was out that way on Sunday. That is the first grain cut in Polk county this year I think.

It may be that Polk county will not yield more than 8 bushels of wheat per acre this year but that is better than almost every other county in the state and better than most wheat localities.

To Advertise Their Fair.

One of the most enjoyable features of the fair was the music by the Fosston band, which arrived on Thursday evening. They gave a street concert on Thursday evening and played on the grounds Friday, gave another concert in the evening, and went home Saturday morning. They came down to see and help our fair and to advertise their own. They were under the leadership of W. B. Sheffield, and headed by that peer of drum majors and prince of good fellows, B. S. Bennett. They make a fine appearance in their handsome uniforms, and play good selections. After they had played in front of the exposition building, on Friday, the ladies of the woman's department presented each member with a badge, upon which was printed: "Polk County Fair; Souvenir from Department I." On Friday afternoon the band marched around the track in front of the stock parade, the drum major twirling his baton as expertly as a Japanese juggler. The management of the fair feel under obligations to the band for services rendered, and hope to be able to return the compliment when the Fosston fair is held—October 4th, 5th and 6th.

The roster of the band—as taken from the St. Louis hotel register—is as follows: W. B. Sheffield, leader; Lewis Lohn, 1st cornet; Ole Lestned, 2nd cornet; J. Fogelberg, clarinet; E. A. Umland, solo alto; H. Bostad, 1st alto; Ove Olson Bb tenor; Anton Kvistad, tuba; Ole Valer, baritone; S. S. Stadsvold, snare drum; John Hanson, base drum; B. S. Bennett, drum major; and A. Klabo, mascot and general duffer.

Came Home in Sections.

On Monday evening the Times announced that Deputy Sheriff M. Losey arrived from Chicago that (Monday) morning. The JOURNAL announced that he arrived on Sunday morning. The Tribune announced that he arrived on Tuesday morning by which it would seem that he came home in sections. But he didn't, for, as usual the JOURNAL was right.

Mr. H. J. Mayers, of Oakland Md., says: "I have sold thirteen bottles of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to-day and am literally sold out. This is the largest sale on record of any one preparation in a day over our counters. It gives the best satisfaction of any cough medicine we handle, and it leads all other preparations on this market." for sale by S. A. Wallace

The success of Mrs. Annie M. Beam of McKeesport, Pennsylvania, in the treatment of diarrhœa in her children will undoubtedly be of interest to many mothers. She says: "I spent several weeks in Johnstown, Pa., after the great flood, on accoun tofmy husband being employed there. We had several children with us, two of whom took the diarrhœa very badly. I got some of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy from Rev. Mr. Chapman. It cured both of them. I knew of several other cases where it was equally successful. I think it cannot be excelled and cheerfully recommend it." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace.

That Tired Feeling

You will not have if you travel via the Burlington Route. It is good advice to "brace up," but not on "tanglefoot," "forty-rod," "bitters," of innumerable names and composed of the Lord knows what, and it is not much better to fill your system with nauseating drugs even on a physician's prescription. A more agreeable tonic is a relaxation from the cares of business. If it is winter you can journey to Florida, the Gulf Coast or Southern California. In summer the lovely lakes of Minnesota or the grand mountain scenery and salubrious air of Colorado or Montana will give health and happiness. To reach any of these take the Burlington Route—buy your tickets over the Chicago, Burlington & Northern R. R. For full information on these matters address W. J. C. KENYON, Gen. Pass Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

A Remarkable Bedstead From Bombay.

A Bombay man has constructed a bedstead priced at 10,000 rupees. It is thus described: "It has at its four corners four full sized, gaudily dressed Grecian damsels—those at the head holding banjos, while those on the right and left foot hold fans. Beneath the cot is a musical box which extends the whole length of the cot and is capable of playing 12 charming airs. The music begins the moment the least pressure has been brought to bear from the top, which is created by one sleeping or sitting, and ceases the moment the individual rises. While the music is in progress the lady banjoists at the head manipulate the strings with their fingers and move their heads, while the two Grecian damsels at the bottom fan the sleeper to sleep."

Brief, but Full of Feeling.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson once paid an enormous price for a Shorthorn bull. When the animal died he put this epitaph over its grave:

Here lies Baron Oxford 5th,
Quiet and cool,
Bred by a duke and
Bought by a fool.

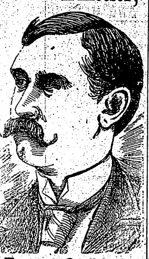
RETURN VISIT

Prof. Whittier,



Expert Optician,

After an absence of a few months, will have rooms
AT THE PALACE HOTEL, CROOKSTON. FOR ONE WEEK, COMMENCING

MONDAY, AUG. 14.

He can be consulted free of charge, whether it be for spectacles or otherwise. Office hours from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. Don't fail to consult me about your eyes. I am able to tell on the first examination any ailment of your failing sight and give you glasses to suit the defect of the eye, which will aid in restoring and strengthening the eyesight of the young and old.

As errors of refraction, defects of the sight of the eyes are daily assuming more importance and engaging more attention of our most able and scientific oculists, I have made the adaptation of

SPECTACLES A SPECIALTY.

Certain forms of eye trouble, which were formerly looked upon as diseases of the inner covering of the eye are to-day relieved by scientific test of the eye, and by using such glasses to correct the errors of refraction and accommodation as the examination will prove.

As many eyes, on careful examination, are found to be of different focus, it is found necessary that such eyes should be fitted by a competent optician on examination with the opthalamascope, as the ordinary test with the optometer or test types cannot be relied upon in such cases. I correct the most difficult cases in the various forms of Hypermetrophia, or far sight; Myopia, or near sight; Diplopia, or double sight; Asthenopia, or weak sight; Amblyopia, or loss of accommodation; Presbyopia, or old sight; Astigmatism or blurred sight; Stabismus, or cross eyed.

ARTIFICIAL EYES INSERTED WITHOUT PAIN. If you have lost an eye, by accident or disease, be sure to call on me and I will insert an artificial eye which will move and look like the natural eye and improve your looks.

The following good item is going the rounds of the press:

Suppose wheat is worth 60 cents a bushel this fall. And a certain farmer raises 2,000 bushels. Then he goes to work and sells 200 lbs. to each of 600 customers, then delivers the 200 pounds in lots of about four pounds each week to each customer for a year. That would be getting down to a pretty large business in small lots. If you were a customer would you feel offended if the farmer wanted his $200 in advance? Wouldn't he have to hustle to get his pay at the end of the contract? Would you think he would do wrong to dun you for his pay after he had delivered the goods as well? That is the way the local newspaper man sells his crop. [illegible]

THE MESSAGE.

Full Text of the President's Message to Congress, Delivered Last Tuesday.

It is Brief and to the Point—Advises the Repeal of the Sherman Law.

Recommends That Congress act at Once—Says the Tariff Can wait.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The president's message was delivered to congress shortly after noon. Its reading was proceeded with. It is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The existence of an alarming and extraordinary business situation, involving the welfare and prosperity of all our people, has constrained me to call together in extra session the people's representatives in congress, to the end that through a wise and patriotic exercise of the legislative duty with which they solely are charged, present evils may be mitigated and dangers threatening the future may be averted.

Our Financial Plight

is not the result of untoward events, nor of conditions related to our natural resources; nor is it traceable to any of the afflictions which frequently check national growth and prosperity. With plenteous crops, with abundant promise of remunerative production and manufacture, with unusual invitation to safe investment and with satisfactory assurance to business enterprise, suddenly financial distrust and fear have sprung up on every side. Numerous moneyed institutions have suspended because abundant assets were not immediately available to meet the demands of the frightened depositors. The surviving corporations and individuals are content to keep in hand the money they are usually anxious to loan, and those engaged in legitimate business are surprised to find that the securities they offer for loans, though heretofore satisfactory, are no longer accepted. Values supposed to be fixed are fast becoming conjectural, and loss and failure have invaded every branch of business.

Chargeable to Legislation.

I believe these things are principally chargeable to congressional legislation touching the purchase and coinage of silver by the general government.

This legislation is embodied in a statute passed on the 14th day of July, 1890, which was the culmination of much agitation on the subject involved, and which may be considered a truce, after a long struggle, between the advocates of free silver coinage and those intending to be more conservative.

Undoubtedly the monthly purchases by the government of 4,500,000 ounces of silver, enforced under that statute, were regarded by those interested in silver production as a certain guaranty of its increase in price. The result, however, has been entirely different, for immediately following a spasmodic and slight rise, the price of silver began to fall after the passage of the act and has since reached the lowest point ever known. This disappointing result has lead to renewed and persistent effort in the direction of free silver coinage.

Evil Effects Accumulating.

Meanwhile, not only are the evil effects of the operation of the present law constantly accumulating, but the result to which its execution must inevitably lead is becoming palpable to all who give the least heed to financial subjects.

This law provides that in payment for the 4,500,000 ounces of silver bullion which the secretary of the treasury is commanded to purchase monthly, there shall be issued treasury notes, redeemable on demand in gold or silver coin, at the discretion of the secretary of the treasury, and that said notes may be re-issued. It is, however, declared in the act to be "the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio or such ratio as may be provided by law."

Prevents Discretion.

This declaration so controls the action of the secretary of the treasury as to prevent his exercising the discretion nominally vested in him, if by such action the parity between gold and silver may be disturbed. Manifestly a refusal by the secretary to pay these treasury notes in gold, if demanded, would necessarily result in their discredit and depreciation as obligations payable only in silver, and would destroy the parity between the two metals by establishing a discrimination in favor of gold.

Up to the 15th day of July, 1893, these notes had been issued in payment of silver bullion purchases to the amount of more than $147,000,000. While all but a very small quantity of this bullion remains uncoined, and without usefulness in the treasury, many of the notes given in its purchase have been paid in gold. This is illustrated by the statement between the first day of May, 1892, and the 15th day of July, 1893, the notes of this kind issued in payment for silver bullion amounted to a little more than $54,000,000, and that during the same period about $49,000,000 were paid by the treasury in gold for the redemption of such notes.

The policy necessarily adopted of paying these notes in gold has not spared the gold reserve of $100,000,000 long ago set aside by the government for the redemption of [illegible] exported to increase the financial strength of foreign nations. The excess of exports of gold over its imports for the year ending June 30, 1893, amounted to more than $7,500,000. Between the 1st day of July, 1890, and the 15th day of July, 1893, the gold coin and bullion in our treasury decreased more than $132,000,000, while during the same period the silver coin and bullion in the treasury increased more than $147,000,000. Unless government bonds are to be constantly issued and sold to replenish our exhausted gold, only to be again exhausted, it is apparent that the operation of the silver purchase law now in force, leads in the direction of the entire substitution of silver for the gold in the government treasury and that this must be followed by the payment of all government obligations in depreciated silver.

Must Part Company.

At this stage gold and silver must part company and the government must fail in its established policy to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other. Given over to the exclusive use of currency greatly depreciated according to the standard of the commercial world, we could no longer claim a place among nations of the first class, nor could our government claim a performance of its obligation, so far as such an obligation has been imposed upon it, to provide for the use of the people, the best and safest money.

If, as many of its friends claim, silver ought to occupy a larger place in our currency and the currency of the world through general international co-operation and agreement, it is obvious that the United States will not be in a position to gain a hearing in favor of such an arrangement so long as we are willing to continue our attempt to accomplish the result single handed.

Resulted in Lack of Confidence.

The knowledge in business circles among our own people that our government cannot make its fiat equivalent to intrinsic value, nor keep in force our money on a parity with superior money by its own independent efforts, has resulted in such a lack of confidence at home in the stability of currency values that capital refuses its aid to new enterprises, while millions are actually withdrawn from channels of trade and commerce to become idle and unproductive in the hands of timid owners. Foreign investors, equally alert, not only decline to purchase American securities, but make haste to sacrifice those which they already have. It does not meet the situation to say that apprehension in regard to the future of our finances is groundless, and that there is no reason for lack of confidence in the purposes of the government in the premises.

Should Not Be Disregarded.

The very existence of this apprehension and lack of confidence, however caused, is a menace which ought not for a moment to be disregarded. Possibly if the undertaking we have in hand were the maintenance of a specific known quantity of silver at a parity with gold, our ability to do so might be estimated and gauged, and perhaps in view of our unparalleled growth and resources, might be favorably passed upon. But when our avowed endeavor is to maintain such parity in regard to an amount of silver increasing at the rate of 50,000,000 of dollars yearly, with no fixed termination to such increase, it can hardly be said that a problem is presented whose solution is free from doubt.

Entitled to a Sound Currency.

The people of the United States are entitled to a sound and stable currency, and to money recognized as such on every exchange and in every market of the world. Their government has no right to injure them by financial experiments opposed to the policy and practice of other civilized states, nor is it justified in permitting an exaggerated and unreasonable reliance on our national strength and ability to jeopardize the soundness of the people's money.

This matter rises above the plane of party politics. It vitally concerns every business and calling and enters every household in the land. There is one important aspect of the subject which especially should never be overlooked. At times like the present, when the evils of unsound finance threaten us, the speculator may anticipate a harvest, gathered from the misfortune of others, the capitalist may protect himself by hoarding or may even find profit in the fluctuation of values.

The Wage-Earner Defenseless.

But the wage-earner, the first to be injured by a depreciated currency and the last to receive the benefit of its correction, is practically defenseless. He relies for work upon the ventures of confident and contented capital. This failing him, his condition is without alleviation, for he can neither prey on the misfortunes of others, nor hoard his labor. One of the greatest statesmen our country has known, speaking more than 50 years ago when a derangement of the currency had caused commercial distress, said: "The very man of all others who has the deepest interest in a sound currency and who suffers most by mischievous legislation in money matters, is the man who earns his daily bread by his daily toil."

These words are as pertinent now as in the day they were uttered, and ought to impressively remind us that a failure in the discharge of our duty at this time must especially injure those of our countrymen who labor, and who, because of their number and condition, are entitled to the most watchful care of their government.

Should Act at Once.

It is far the most important that such relief as congress can afford in the existing situation be afforded at once. The maxim "He gives twice who gives quickly," is directly applicable. It may be true that the embarrassments from which the business of the country is suffering arise as much from evils apprehended as from those actually existing. [illegible] responsibility of the government for its existence. Whatever else the people have a right to expect from congress they may certainly demand that legislation condemned by the ordeal of three years disastrous experience shall be removed from the statute books as soon as their representatives can legitimately deal with it.

Tariff Can Wait.

It was my purpose to summon congress in special session early in the coming September that we might enter promptly upon the work of tariff reform which the true interests of the country clearly demand, which so large a majority of the people as shown by their suffrages desire and expect, and to the accomplishment of which every effort of the present administration is pledged. But while tariff reform has lost nothing of its immediate and permanent importance; and must in the near future engage the attention of congress, it has seemed to me that the financial condition of the country should at once and before all other subjects, be considered by your honorable body.

Recommends Prompt Repeal.

I earnestly recommend the prompt repeal of the provisions of the act passed July 14, 1890, authorizing the purchase of silver bullion, and that other legislative action may put beyond all doubt or mistake the intention and the ability of the government to fulfill its pecuniary obligations to money universally recognized by all civilized countries.

DISTRICT COURT.

The Adjourned Term Convened in This City Last Monday Morning.

There Are About Fourteen cases on the Calendar—All Court Cases.

The Case of E. C. Davis vs. The Crookston Waterworks Co, is Now on Trial.

Court convened Monday morning to finish up the business left over from the May term. There are twelve or fourteen cases on the calendar yet to be disposed of—all court cases. It will probably take about two weeks to dispose of everything this time. The judge says he wants to make a good clearing up, leaving nothing over. The first case taken up after convening, and the most important case on the calendar, was the case of E. C. Davis vs Crookston Waterworks P. & Light Co., and Hugh Thompson intervenor. H. Steenerson appeared as counsel for plaintiff, E. M. Stanton for intervenor, and Montague & Bucklen and W. F. McNally for the defendant.

This action was brought by Mr. Davis to recover $7052.27, the one half of the contract price, which he claims is yet due him from the defendant, for building the new power house.

In the spring of '92 the Crookston Power and Light Co., and E. C. Davis and Henry Nolan, entered into a contract, under which Davis and Nolan were to build the said power house for the defendant. The building, according to the contractor, was to be completed by August of that year, if not delayed by high water and certain materials not being furnished the defendant. To carry out the contract it appears that Mr. Nolan was to furnish the money and Mr. Davis the experience, but Mr. Nolan failed in his part and it was necessary for Mr. Davis to get money somewhere elese in order to complete the contract and save his bondsmen. Mr. Hugh Thompson came to his aid and furnished money, taking as security an assignment from Mr. Davis for all moneys to be earned under said contract by Davis and Nolan. Thus Mr. Thompson comes in as intervenor. The work was begun on or about May 1st and completed on or about Dec. 24, 1892.

One-half of the contract price was to be paid upon the building being built above the main or gear floor, and the joists and flooring laid.

A portion of the first payment (half of contract price) was paid about last of November and sometime later the balance of the first payment was made.

The plaintiff claims that he was delayed on account of the failure of the defendant to furnish certain materials in due time, thus necessitating his laying off his men and retarding the progress of the work and also on account of high water, and changing the original plans enough to extend the original time of completion, Aug. 1st, to the time he did complete it.

The contract provides for a forfeiture of $25 per day to the defendant for each and every day the plaintiff used to complete the building after the contract date, unless prevented as aforesaid, by high water, change of plan, or failure of defendant to furnish certain material.

The case is being ably conducted on both sides. The testimony is voluminous and took till Wednesday noon to furnish the evidence.

Harvest Wages.

The question of harvest wages is one of vast importance to our farmers just now. With the prospects for an extremely low price for wheat it becomes an impossibility for farmers to pay the wages that have ruled in former years, and the question "where to get help" is an important one. One prominent farmer informs the JOURNAL that he sent to an employment agency at Duluth and procured all the men he wants at $1.25 per day through harvest and threshing. Duluth is said to be full of men out of employment who would be only to glad to get work even at those figures and they will come here if assured of the work. It would be simply ruinous for the farmers to offer the prevailing wages of former years for it is not in the wheat this year.

POINTERS TO VISITORS.

Twenty-five Things To Be Seen at the Fair.

BY THOSE WITH LIMITED TIME.

A List of Exhibits Which One Who Has Been at the Exposition Constantly Since the Opening Thinks Are the Most Noteworthy—Something Which May Prove of Assistance to You.

WORLD'S FAIR, Aug. 4.—[Special.]—Today I met one of my friends from Washington, who had but a few days to spend in the exposition, and he asked me, inasmuch as I had been here some time, to name for him the twenty-five things most worthy his time and attention. "I can see at the first glance," said he, "that this fair is too big for me. I can't take in a tenth part of it. I don't want to waste any time running about aimlessly, and when I start out I want to know just what I am after. So if you will sit down and tell me about twenty-five of the most interesting things to be seen here you will do me a great favor." I said to my friend this was easier to talk of than to do, and besides, if I were to try to give him such a list it might not suit his tastes at all and in the end he would blame instead of thank me for what I had done.

Again, there was an objection to the plan in that I might name for him too many things that had come from foreign countries, while he might be more interested in American works. To this he replied that he would take his chances on my judgment, and as to the foreign articles and displays, that was just what he cared most to see, and if I had made a study of the imported wares so much the better. In this way I was led to attempt a feat which naturally I should not undertake. Below will be found the list which I gave to my friend, with some of the reasons therefor, and if it shall prove any assistance to the intending visitor to the fair I shall be glad.

To my motion the twenty-five most interesting things which the foreigners have to show here are as follows:

1. The Dore vase in French section of Manufactures building. It is a noteworthy work of art, without doubt the finest bronze to be found in the exposition. It is not only large in size, majestic in proportions and a notable casting judged purely from the mechanical point of view, but it is wonderfully beautiful in its design and in the figures with which its surface is literally covered. Gustav Dore, the artist, is dead, and the great vase is for sale for the benefit of his family. The price is $20,000.

2. The street in Cairo is a splendid example of the art of transplanting an Oriental scene to the midst of western civilization. Though a mere showman's trick, the Cairo street, with its shops, its mosque, its dromedaries, donkeys, theater, temple, savage camps and other accessories is a bit of realism which is not surpassed in the exposition for genuine human interest.

3. The loan galleries in the Fine Arts palace. In these rooms are displayed several score of masterpieces by foreign artists, now owned in America. Here are the best pictures of the exposition. But for their presence several of the foreign schools, notably that of France, would be so poorly represented as to be almost failures.

4. The laces made in Belgium, in France, in Italy, with their artistic value about in the order named. All women love laces and many men after beholding these airy, fairy, film-like creations, wish that fashions might change so as to permit them to wear laces. Fabrics at a thousand dollars a yard are costly, but the beauty is there in a degree which you have never dreamed of.

5. The marble statues and statuettes in the Italian section, Manufactures building. These are not supposed to be the highest types of the art of sculpture—for these you must go to the Fine Arts palace—but they are the works which please the masses. They are expressive, they are pictures in stone, they have life and action rather than lofty ideals. They are in immense variety and of amazing cleverness.

6. The Javanese village as an example of the simple, almost dainty life and peaceful industrial pursuits of an interesting people from the other side of the world. They have here a village with forty or more structures in it, representing all their forms of architecture and all manners of life. A cleanly, industrious, lovable, skillful people they are, and their small stature makes them seem more like children than men and women grown.

7. The gowns and millinery in the French section, Manufactures building. There are no such dressmakers, no such milliners, elsewhere in the world. In Paris these trades approach the fields of high art.

8. Work in silver to be found in Russian and Danish sections, Manufactures building. The Russians excel all other nations in the use of enamel. Some of their wares are surprisingly beautiful and difficult of execution. In repouse silver the Danes appear to lead. Compare these silver works with those in the Tiffany and Gorham exhibits, United States section, and note that America is attaining not only fine workmanship but character in design.

9. The carvings in the Japanese and Italian sections, Manufactures building. These two peoples are the earth's greatest carvers. The Italians are surely ahead of all rivals, with the Japanese a good second.

10. The Gobelin tapestries in the French section, Manufactures building—rare old pictures in fabrics, famous pieces from the last century and the century before. See also the tapestries in the Belgium section.

11. German chemistry, Manufactures building. The Germans excel all other peoples in chemistry, which is the art that stands at the base of all arts and industries. The display of chemicals here is the most comprehensive and important the world ever saw.

12. The Doulton pottery and Royal Worcester ware from England, also the Cauldon china from the same country, in comparison with the delft ware from Belgium, the Royal porcelains from Austria, and Germany, the terra cottas and porcelains from Denmark, and the cloisonne and porcelains of the Japanese. These are the ceramic nations of the earth, and the visitor who studies their products will see all in this line that is worthy his attention.

13. The English railway train and locomotive, Transportation building, in comparison with the French locomotives and German cars and American locomotives and trains which stand near by. No such opportunity to study the railway transportation methods of various countries was ever offered before.

14. The Krupp guns, special pavilion, and heavy forgings for other purposes, especially the great steamer screws and steam hammers.

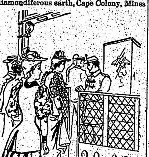
15. Instruments of measurement and precision made by Germans and shown in the first floor and gallery of the Electricity building. The skill that man has attained in this direction, measuring electric currents, temperatures, illuminating the interiors of human bodies and organs, is almost beyond belief.

16. Bohemian glassware as the very finest possible product of the art of glass making. The Austrian empire has no rival in glass, unless it be the Venetians; and in cut glassware the Americans make a specialty and the best works.

17. Hatfield hall, nearly full sized model, British section, Manufactures building, as showing one of the most magnificent interiors and typical British decorations and service of two centuries ago.

18. Swiss watches, hand-made, marvels of ingenuity and workmanship, Swiss section, Manufactures building. Compare these with American made watches, in which machinery plays such an important part, two or three blocks down Columbia avenue.

19. Diamond cutting, from imported diamondiferous earth, Cape Colony, Mines building. Here we see the big Zulu guards, attired in a costume which other men envy on hot days, the manner in which the diamond pebbles are formed in the earth; how they are sifted out, dressed and perfected.



ENTRANCE TO TIFFANY EXHIBIT.

20. The exhibit made by the City of Paris in the French building, lake front, of the manner in which that great metropolis is governed, cleaned, lighted and cared for in all the departments of a model municipal organization—the streets, sewage, gas, hospitals, police, detection of crime by means of photography, even the morgue with its ghastly scenes, the reformatory schools and farms in the suburbs.

21. Models of foreign merchant and naval vessels, Transportation building. There is a great number of these handsome structures, and they form one of the most interesting features of the transportation display, which good judges have declared to be the most thoroughly comprehensive and nearly perfect departmental building of the exposition. The makers of the models have so arranged them as to afford visitors a graphic idea of the rise of the world's shipping, the gradual increase of the size of the great merchant ships, the changes of forms, the growth of the art of marine architecture. Among all these models there is none that attracts more attention than that of the ill-fated battleship Victoria, which sank in a collision in the Mediterranean a few weeks ago. While looking at this model it is hard to realize that such a magnificent craft, equipped with all the most costly and presumably most effective safety appliances, was sent to the bottom of the sea in twenty minutes by an injury to one of its parts.

22. The displays of the world's valuable woods in the Forestry building, particularly the giant redwood trees and cedars of California, our own oaks and walnuts, the bamboos of Asia and the South seas. The biggest tree here is not in the Forestry building, by the way, but may be seen in the Government building, where it occupies a position in the great rotunda. It is a part of the exhibit of the department of the interior.

23. Inasmuch as the greatest thing in life is the home, all visitors will be interested in the furniture exhibit, and the furniture displays most worthy attention may be found in the Italian section, where the carvings are superb, in the German section, where the pieces are rich and massive, in the English section, where oak is made the most of, in the French section, where graceful designs and elaborate ornamentation prevail.

24. La Rabida convent with its treasures of original and reproduced relics of Columbus and the Columbian era, the most admirable and comprehensive historical collection ever presented in a universal exposition.

25. Those greatest of historical relics, the three caravels and the Viking ship from Norway, which are anchored near the convent; and though visitors are not allowed aboard, the strange craft, with their mighty historical associations, may be well seen from the pier near by.

ROBERT GRAVES.

To Give a Corn Banquet.

Charles J. Murphy, a special agent of the agricultural department engaged in introducing corn into Europe, has been in Chicago for some weeks, and through his efforts there are now nine places on the exposition grounds where corn can be had in its different forms as appetizing human nourishment. Mr. Murphy hopes to round off his activities for corn in Chicago by an elaborate corn banquet, to be given in one of the state buildings best adapted for the purpose, probably New York. The foreign commissioners and principal foreign correspondents and commissioners from each state are to be invited guests. Corn is to be served in all its tempting forms, and literature is to be furnished each guest descriptive of the many uses to which the grain is put. Mr. Murphy holds that this is an ideal opportunity for showing the possibilities of corn and he believes that no exhibit in the entire exhibition will so strikingly impress the foreign guests.

Artificial Hens Are Busy.

Incubation in all its varied phases and possibilities is receiving much attention from the World's Columbian exposition. While this art, science, philosophy or pastime has reached its zenith of prominence in the Electrical building with lightning as the incubating power, an entire building in the back yard is devoted to this department. Around the sides are the artificial hens and down the center are stacks of patent food for chickens. A competitive race of the hatchers is being planned as a drawing card for the crowds.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Montana, Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

North American Review
YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND
The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.
THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.
THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallalieu, Foss, etc. etc.
THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

LIGHT OUT OF DARKNESS

By Mrs. HENRY WARD BEECHER.

[Copyright, 1893, by Godey Publishing Company.]

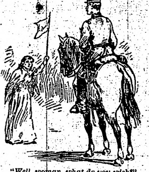
On their way back to camp the next day, having scattered the rebels, a woman, feeble and ragged, came out from the wood near the roadside, holding a dirty rag on a stick as a flag of truce. George, who first noticed her, halted. She advanced and stood before him, earnestly gazing into his face. She could not have been more than 22 or 23 years old and must have once been handsome. Meeting no look of recognition, she dropped her eyes for a moment, then raising them again with a half despairing, half defiant look she said:

"I would speak with your colonel. I have something to say to him."

George galloped to where Dunbar rode and reported this request. The regiment halted at a sign from their commander, who rode back with George to where the figure still remained like a statue, immovable. When they reached her, the searching look which had so disturbed George was fastened on Dunbar's face and with the same result. The men gathered near with looks of wonder, mingled with suspicion, that she might be acting as a decoy to some rebel ambush. She heeded them not nor turned her eyes from Eustace's face as if to compel a recognition. He remained silent, wondering to what this would tend, till, her strangely earnest gaze becoming irksome, he spoke abruptly:

"Well, woman, what do you wish? I have no time to loiter."



"Well, woman, what do you wish?"

"And do you not know me, Eustace Dunbar? Am I so changed by misery that you do not recall Estella Le Barron, or are you so proud and scornful you will not stoop to notice me in my misery and ruin?"

The men with natural delicacy fell back, for there were some among George's company who came from their home and knew of the Le Barron tragedy.

"Oh, Estella! And is it thus I find you? And how came you, with all your faults, among the enemies of your country?"

"I have no country, no friends. The villain for whom I forsook both has cast me out to destruction."

"Estella," interrupted Dunbar, when he saw how reckless she was of exposing her own shame, "come with us to our camp, and when there I can procure you a safe and respectable shelter where you can secure kindness and friends even yet if you choose to deserve them. I can no longer remain idle here. Will you come and trust an old friend?"

"I know not where you propose taking me, but I am sick, homeless, starving—I have no choice but submission to your direction."

She was really famishing and too feeble to walk. Eustace saw that food was given her and had her comfortably seated in an ambulance, then hastened their return to camp. To his great joy he learned that Rose and Ralph had just arrived. Rose at once assisted him to convey the wretched woman to the hospital and placed her immediately under the physician's care. The cold, hunger and exposure of the last few days had made fearful inroads upon her constitution. A fever was already upon her, and when the excitement and danger of her wanderings was over she sank under it, and there seemed little hope of her recovery.

Many days of imminent danger and severe suffering elapsed before Rose's kind and skillful nursing and the physician's unremitting attention were rewarded by any symptoms of convalescence, and then, though broken in spirit and weak as a child, her heart was apparently softened and ready to receive the good seed.

One pleasant morning, when first able to converse, she unfolded the history of her course after leaving her father's house. It was a sad and painful story, but unfortunately so common that it needs no repetition. Le Barron's supposed wealth had been De Courtney's attraction, and the same mistaken idea of his high position, dignities and unbounded riches had lured her on to that fatal step. Love had had no voice in this wicked compact. Not until they reached Paris and his draft on Le Barron came back protested did the fortune hunter learn the deceit that she had practiced upon him.

The stormy scene that might have been expected ensued, and then De Courtney informed her that their marriage was all a sham, and that his wealth and titles were equally fictitious. Thus deserted by the man with whom she had fled, not for love, but for selfish ambitions, and left to bear her troubles and disappointments as best she might, her fall was rapid. The money and jewelry she had so wickedly purloined from mother and sister that terrible night had been carefully concealed from De Courtney. For a short time it enabled her to lead a gay life, but with no protector in Paris her associations must of course have been of a class that [illegible] every kind of temptation, until at last she sank into abject [illegible] [illegible]. In this condition [illegible] her from the lowest depths of degradation.

And now, though she rallied for a few weeks, her days were numbered. The physician from the first gave no encouragement of recovery, and after a short period of comparative ease a speedy termination of her ill spent life was certain. When first compelled to realize her precarious situation, she was overwhelmed with terror and despair. The chaplain visited her daily. Under his unwearied teachings and Rose's gentle ministrations the darkness was gradually dispelled, and the hope that she, the most guilty, might find mercy through that atonement so freely offered to all, even the chief of sinners, began to comfort her.

As this hope brightened her heart yearned after friends and kindred. She had only heard vague reports of her father's death and was entirely ignorant of the condition of the other members of her family. It was a great trial to be called upon to reveal to the poor sufferer all the sorrow and shame that had overwhelmed her former home, but after her heart, so long cold and hard, was brought into a better state she would not rest until she had heard every particular. Her gratitude for the kindness that had shielded Robbie and Jennie from temptation was very touching, but Maud's perilous situation weighed keenly upon her mind. Feeling that her own reckless and unprincipled conduct from earliest childhood had led her sister into by and forbidden paths, which had now so blasted her life if not ruined her soul, she begged Eustace to seek out Maud and beseech her by her dying sister's example to seek the better life.

The Newtons, after leaving the city, had very little opportunity to hear of Maud's life. From the first she had steadfastly refused to see her little brother and sister and was even unwilling to receive any message from them, preferring, she said, that all memory of their father's family should die out of their young minds.

They now felt it important to see Maud, if possible, while Eustace was with them, and therefore, acting at once in accordance with their views of duty, Mr. and Mrs. Newton, accompanied by Eustace and Lillian, went next day to the city.

They learned from a friend that after two years of strife and bitterness, death had at last separated this miserable pair. Mr. Varney had been dead but a short time. At his marriage he settled a liberal sum upon his young wife and then made a will leaving her sole possessor of all his wealth at his death. Had she treated the foolish old man with even common kindness he was so infatuated with her beauty he would have made no change. But though she had sold herself and bartered all her hopes of happiness for riches she could not sufficiently control her loathing and contempt to secure that for which she had risked so much.

With his violent temper it took but a few short weeks to open her husband's eyes to his folly and to destroy all affection for and pride in her, and so his maudlin love turned to the bitterest hate. In his dotage he had become like some fierce animal in his anger, and her life was wretched past description. His cruelty she met by biting taunts and the most exasperating language till at length she so outraged him that for her own safety she left the house and went to reside at some fashionable resort.

Mr. Varney had long been failing, and when the excitement of her presence was over he sank rapidly. One of his last acts was to destroy the old will and make a new one, by which he deprived her of everything but what she could legally claim. So when summoned to his dying bed it was to find that the palatial home with its royal furnishings, the spacious grounds and splendid equipages had passed into strangers' hands and was beyond her reach. Her bridal settlement, in itself a fortune, and rich jewelry were all she could call her own.

This will she determined to contest on the ground that Mr. Varney at the time of making it was in no condition to make a valid instrument for the disposal of his property, and that the will that he made at her marriage was still binding. As soon as her husband was buried she sought legal advice, but there was sufficient evidence to prove that he was competent to dispose of his property according to his own wishes, even if the first will had not been destroyed by his own hand before his death. Her conduct had been too widely known for any to sympathize when she was compelled to descend to a humbler but very comfortable home.

Here her old friends sought her. The reader can easily imagine from their insight into Mrs. Varney's character that Mr. and Mrs. Newton were coldly if not rudely received. It was maddening to her proud spirit that these whose counsel she had despised should now find her so far beneath the position she then aimed at. When Mr. Newton apologized for calling by saying he had some information to communicate respecting her eldest sister, she positively refused to hear a word, charging Estella with the ruin of all the hopes she had ever nourished, saying that but for her mother and sister, long before her father's death, she might have been transferred to a peaceful, happy home, blessing and being blessed, instead of the wretched being she now was. Whatever Estella had suffered or was suffering, whatever her fate might be, she richly deserved all that could befall her, and from herself Estella need expect no pity.

Even while so rudely speaking it was evident that her heart was gradually softening—perhaps a little comforted by the sight of those who had always shown her kindness. Poor, desolate Maud! A gentle word, a kindly voice she had seldom heard since she so abruptly left these same friends on the morning of her ill fated marriage.

Mrs. Newton saw that it was best to wait patiently till the overburdened heart had had time to pour out the wild, vengeful feelings it had so long harbored. All self control seemed swept away, and in her ravings—for truly it was little less—it was evident she had never forgotten her early love. Her pride, the [illegible] of Sherwood's knowing of her father's crimes, had driven her from him into this rash marriage, thinking that with Varney's wealth she could close her heart against that love.

Vain thought! Every day by contrast she had loved the nobler nature that might have been hers more fondly instead of forgetting, and hardly conscious of the sin had begun to look forward to the time when her husband's death should leave her a rich widow as one more chance to win back her former lover, forgetting that her whole course, so publicly manifested, must have destroyed all Sherwood's respect and love. When at length conscious that her imprudent language had revealed all this to her friends with her, for a moment she was greatly shocked and alarmed, but suddenly all pride forsook her, and she burst into wild, hysterical weeping.

Mrs. Newton tenderly soothed her, and when exhausted by the struggle she quietly sobbed with her friend's arm lovingly around her. Then they quietly led the conversation back to Estella. Seeing indications of another outbreak, Mr. Newton beckoned Dunbar from the carriage, and in a few impressive words he narrated his meeting with Estella, sick, starving and deserted.

Before he had concluded Maud was again weeping, but softer, more unselfish, more human tears than before. Eustace urged her to go with him and see her sister and be reconciled before her death. To this she would not consent, but the violence of her anger had passed, and when, hoping if left to think alone she might relent, Mrs. Newton rose to leave the poor child cordially thanked her for her kindness and expressed a hope that she might see her again.

The day before Dunbar and George left Mrs. Newton received a grateful letter from Mrs. Varney, inclosing one for Estella, with the request that the colonel would carry it to her. He did so and had the satisfaction of learning that it contained a confession of her own doings and free forgiveness of Estella's sins toward herself, with the assurance that she was determined to try to lead a better life. She spoke tenderly of Mr. Newton's family and hoped to be still remembered by them. This letter was a great joy to Estella, who died a few days after, leaving Rose comforted with the hope that the poor girl's iniquities had been pardoned and her sins blotted out.

CHAPTER XIII.

Colonel Dunbar and Captain George Newton returned to their duties after this short furlough, leaving the friends at the farm greatly cheered and comforted by their brief reunion.

The winter passed with little apparent progress in our military labor, but with the mild spring weather and settled roads every week brought some startling account which increased the fears for the loved ones, with hope or despondency for our country, as the news hovered between victory and defeat. I will not attempt to follow their exciting fluctuations, which for so long a time kept the public mind in constant agitation.

For more than three years all at the Newton farm followed their brave sons with anxious thoughts and hourly prayers. Often when the battle raged the fiercest, while thousands fell around them, had these so fondly loved, surpassed by none in courage and noble daring, like the favored three, passed through the fiery furnace "with scarce the smell of fire on their garments." But when our treasures have been thus long pursued as one after another falls around how natural for the trembling heart to feel "my son may be the next," not because they have less faith in God's protecting power or mistrust the Father's watchful eye, but having fully offered this sacrifice to our country's cause we know at any hour we may be called upon to redeem the pledge!

So it was at Mr. Newton's. Every day they recalled with wonder and gratitude their children's many escapes and asked if they were now prepared to accept their portion of the sorrows which war was bringing upon so many of their friends around them. That is a hard question. Who can answer it affirmatively? Even when the object of our care is wasting with illness before our eyes there is a hope that never leaves the heart till the hand lies cold in our grasp and the love light of the eye is quenched in death.

Mrs. Dunbar was becoming restless and almost impatient at her husband's long absence and would most joyfully have gone to him, but a little boy of 8 months nestled in her bosom, and with pretty smiles and cunning ways bound her fast at home.

Meanwhile Colonel Dunbar was rapidly rising in the estimation of the leading military men, and no regiment won higher praise for bravery and effective daring. Their love for their commander bore them unflinchingly wherever he dared to lead, and when diminished by many a hard fought battle there was little difficulty in filling up the ranks under Colonel Dunbar. Many of his officers had fallen or become incapacitated for service, and by their fall George had become lieutenant colonel and Ralph the captain of his old company. Dunbar had been offered a general's command, but declined, saying that he had entered the army not as a profession, but simply to serve his country during the present emergency. His only wish was to remain with his present regiment, some of whom had been with him from the first, and he would guarantee that those must be brave men who would follow where that band led the way.

We pass now to that eventful day that ended the battle of Gettysburg. The first day had been fearfully disastrous, and gloomy forebodings were prevalent in many parts of the army. Dunbar and his men were placed in a position of imminent danger. The havoc of the previous day had been terrible, and the morrow's sun saw the enemy drawn up in great force before them ready to bear down on that [illegible]. To break through that force and carry that position appeared the only way to victory. But against what tremendous odds!

Dunbar rode among his men, saying briefly: "I have every confidence in the leader of this division, but we have seen too many such [illegible] not to be aware that we are in a critical position. If we can carry the [illegible] victory is sure. To do that many of us [illegible] to certain death, but that will not daunt you, my men! I know you well. With God's help we can, and will succeed! See! Our lines are moving! If I fall, stay not—leave me in God's care! A moment's hesitation may lose us the day! Remember what I say! Our battlecry is God and liberty! Now follow me."

The shout that rose to heaven as he ended bore witness that there would be no wavering there. At that moment the enemy opened upon them, and our men were not slow in replying. It seemed that the very strength and spirit of liberty was in every blow. The slaughter on both sides was terrific. At the point opposing Colonel Dunbar's regiment a slight confusion was manifest. Waving his sword, he cried: "They falter! Forward once more, my men!" As the word passed his lips a cannon ball removed his sword with the hand that held it. But raising his left hand on high, he shouted: "Remember! Forward for God and liberty!"

George sprang to his side, bound a handkerchief tightly around his arm. It was but a moment. One look of love and "Lillian." No other word, and like a rushing torrent they dashed forward to the head of the column together. Before these overwhelming billows the enemy gave way in the greatest confusion. But at that instant of certain victory a ball struck Dunbar in the chest. He fell and was borne from the field by his aids, while his men, remembering his last command, paused not for one look at their dying commander, yet no Scottish clan ever fought with fiercer determination to avenge their chieftain's death than did that band, led on by his mourning brother.

How the battle terminated needs no repetition. After the fight George and Ralph hastened to the spot where the beloved brother lay. He recognized them and calmly smiled, but could not speak. Life was almost over, but his earnest eyes spoke to George's heart, and kneeling by his side he replied to that look. "I will tell Lilly all you said last night, and as long as we live Ralph and I will always tenderly guard her and your boy! Will we not, Ralph?" The young captain pressed his lips to Eustace's brow and sobbed aloud. Many an older cheek was wet with tears. A few more faint breaths, and then the kind brother, the loving son, the devoted husband, the truly Christian patriot yielded up his life for his country!

I make no attempt to describe the mourning in the camp or the anguish at home when Ralph and Rose brought the remains of one so deservedly loved and honored back to the stricken family. Such sorrows are all too well understood.

Very grievous was this loss to Mr. and Mrs. Newton, who had given him a son's place in their hearts, but having unreservedly given him with their other sons to their country's cause, knowing that he went to face death, they could, while bitterly grieving, still say, "Thy will be done."

Of the wife, whose heart was knit to her husband's from earliest childhood, the young babe, who was never to know his father's face, I may not speak. Hers was a sorrow that mortal may not trespass upon. God only can bind up the broken heart. By his love her soul may—will—find rest and peace.

The night before this sad battle Eustace had sat for more than an hour with his brothers and Rose. She was to remain in a temporary hospital at a suitable distance from the field, ready to give care and attention to such of the wounded as the next morning's battle must bring her. From this sweet sister, who had so nobly followed them, they had no secret. They knew that the morrow was full of peril and would dawn upon one of the most fiercely contested fields of the whole war.

After some time spent in this discussion Eustace turned the conversation to the anxious hearts at home. He read them a letter he had received that evening from his wife, in which she spoke with a mother's pride of his little son and with much tender longing that he could see the child if only for an hour. Inclosed was a picture of the babe in her arms. Rose and her brother were enthusiastic in their expressions of delight at the evidently faithful picture of their loved sister and their little nephew. Their loving remarks were occasionally mingled with a laughing reproach of Eustace for concealing his possession of such a treasure.

But George, noticing that he had been unusually silent during this joyful, half playful conversation, which the letter and picture had caused, readily understood that the husband's and father's heart was yearning for one look upon those he so dearly loved, and doubtless thoughts of the coming struggle mingled with other emotions. A significant look from George sufficed to check Ralph's humorous speech and gradually change the conversation. But Eustace noticed the change and understood the reason. He looked up and tried to smile upon them in his old, loving way, but suddenly dropped his head upon the table beside him.

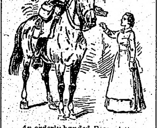
For many minutes all were silent. God only knew the storm that swept over that motionless figure, but when he raised his head the darkness had fled, the storm had passed, and a holy calm shone upon his face—a peace such as close communion with God only can bring had transfigured him, and years will never efface that expression from the minds of those who sympathized with what they knew must have been the agony that preceded it. Rose will tell you that from that hour she felt assured that the golden gates had opened, giving him a foretaste of the glory so soon to be realized.

After a moment's silence Eustace calmly referred to the great burden that had weighed upon his heart for hours and remarked that he had been under the impression that he should fall in the immediate struggle. He had been anxious to speak fully to them, but had waited till he could feel that his own heart was resigned to his Father's will. Now he could speak to them with composure [illegible]. He then urged upon his brothers the importance of entering upon the morrow's labors with every thought concentrated upon the work, prepared to banish all personal feeling, to know nothing save that the enemy were before them and with God's help must be defeated, even if it cost the dearest friend or their own lives. Entering upon the battle with this entire self abrogation and trusting to the Almighty arm for assistance, they were sure to conquer. If he fell, he looked to his brothers to lead his men.

He needed no response from the stern, pale faces before him. No word was spoken. Their hearts were too full. But the long embrace, as each brother left his tent and as Rose bowed her head one moment on his breast and then pressed a lingering kiss upon his lips, told more than words could have done how fondly and truly their hearts were with him in richest affection. The next morning an orderly handed Rose a letter inclosing one to her sister, evidently written after they parted the night before.

If I fall in the coming battle, Rosie, give the inclosed to my precious wife; if not, destroy it.
E. D.

With that sacred letter we have nothing to do. That the merciful Father was near this noble family in the hour of their deepest trial, as he had been when lesser clouds overshadowed them, we cannot doubt. It has not been my intention to manufacture a romance from the simple sketch of two families. I only wished to take some of the most prominent events transpiring at a crisis in our country's history that has tested the character, separated the "dross from the pure gold" more surely than any other period has ever done.



An orderly handed Rose a letter.

Honor, truth, industry and a full trust in our Father's unfailing care make courageous, self sacrificing natures and happy homes, not exhaustless riches or stately mansions. In this unsettled period of our country's history, when each day surprises us with sudden and startling changes, when the poor are exalted and the rich brought low, it may be wise to inquire if anything can more surely secure competence and permanent happiness, dispel repining and despondency, than cheerful industry and contentment.

I have hoped this simple narrative of life's vicissitudes with which every week is full might enable some young reader to understand that the loss of riches through no wrongdoing of its possessor has no power to diminish the respect or destroy the happiness of a pure spirit and well regulated mind.

Our country teems with just such characters as I have portrayed, but quiet and unobtrusive in their goodness because they are too fully occupied to "sound a trumpet before them." The lessons they might teach are learned only by the observant, careful searchers after the "right way."

THE END.

A Church on Wheels.

The chapel car Emmanuel, appropriately termed "the church on wheels," arrived at the Northwestern depot yesterday and left three quarters of an hour later for Denver, via the Northwestern, in the special Baptist train from Boston.

As the title would indicate, the car is used for disseminating the gospel among railroad men whose limited time precludes them from church attendance. The car is the second one built for this purpose, the first, the "Evangel," having been designed by John D. Rockefeller, and by him and his associates presented to the American Baptist National association. The new car is 70 feet long and 10 wide, with a seating capacity of 150. It embraces a chapel room, study and sleeping and dining apartments. The interior is beautifully finished in antique oak. A handsome lecturn and costly organ, both the gifts of the manufacturers, further enhance this missionary palace.

In charge of the chapel are the Rev. and Mrs. E. G. Wheeler, Oregon evangelists, and it is their intention to make the Pacific coast their field of operation. Oregon, Idaho, Washington and California will be their objective states.

The regular routine of the sanctuary is to be followed at every stopping place. Sermons, Sunday school and song services and prayer meetings will be combined. Where possible, churches will be organized and left as evidences of the chapel's work. In addition to the evangelical work thus described the car will in due time contain a complete library of the Baptist creeds, and Bibles and tracts will be distributed in profusion therefrom. The roads haul the car free, and the express and telegraphic companies frank all business connected with the service.—Chicago News-Record.

Reading of the Schoolboy.

Habits are contracted and characters formed early in life, and it is probable that the color of a person's reading is mainly determined during the time of hobbledehoydom, when he is in process of passing from the limp and lanky schoolboy to the set and rigid man. Just at this time is a most critical period in his career, for now it is that he obtains a new outlook into life. Previously he has been concerned with the miniature world of school and looked at the greater world only with the eyes of a schoolboy. But now, entering a business or a profession, he enters into a larger life and begins to look about him with an air of deeper inquiry. And the more he reads of contemporary literature the worse does he become, for the air is thick with controversy. Nothing is too sacred to be contradicted, and the spirit of "sweet reasonableness" seems to be dead.

SEA BATHS IN ITALY.

USE MADE OF THE BLUE WATERS OF THE MEDITERRANEAN.

Exhilarating Plunges In Nature's Great Lavatory—In the Water All the Reserved Etiquette of the Drawing Room Vanishes—Interesting Features.

Those who have been fortunate enough to glide from Italy's picturesque shores into the warm blue waters of the Mediterranean and float luxuriously in the salty sea among a perfect school of happy bathers will never forget it. Never! Venice, Naples, Capri, Amalfi! It makes one's eyes glisten at the very thought of it. To Italy's splendid title, "The Land of Poetry and Song," might also be added "The Land of Baths" were it not that the second name to some fastidious minds would detract from the beauty of the first.

The ancient Romans, borrowing as they did all the worthily imitable customs from their Greek and Egyptian neighbors, found the baths especially suited to their luxurious tastes and carried them to a degree of excellence which had never been attained, making them not only of immense benefit in a sanitary way, but establishing them as a favorite rendezvous for people of culture and talent as well as for the poorer classes, who also enjoyed the privilege of their own compartments. Look at the baths of Diocletian, which are estimated to have accommodated no less than 18,000 people at one time. And those of Caracalla at Rome. What wonderful ruins of a still more wonderful structure! In these walls bathing became a science. Cold baths, tepid baths, hot baths, oil baths, sun baths—every kind of bath! Why simply to visit the place was a rest and recreation. Statuary and paintings lent beauty on all sides. Music charmed. Orators and poets entertained.

What beauty in the remaining walls of the Pompeiian baths! The frescoes are as bright and beautiful as if they were done but yesterday, and the marble carvings and pavements which escaped the fury of the burning mountain have softened in color almost to an ivory.

Then the baths of Nero. Around the coast on the charming picturesque road leading from Pozzuoli to Baiæ one alights from the little carozzella and clambers up to a cave cut in the side of the mountain, wherein is a spring heated to a high temperature in its subterranean channels by veins of volcanic life which abound near Vesuvius. This spot suited well the comfort loving Nero, who made of it a favorite resort and caused the rough stone couches to be placed there, which still remain.

One reads little of sea bathing in those days. Every Roman colony thought to construct its baths as it thought of raising its temples. But now all Italy turns its face to its natural advantages, and with one accord cries as early as May, "Let us to the sea!" Not all the establishments are as convenient and as well constructed as the Lido at Venice and those of Posilipo at Naples, but they are all on the same general plan. Every place open to the use of the public is provided with a pavilion where people congregate to discuss the latest topics, or to devour with eager ears the latest gossip, while there is always music, from morning till night, if only one of those harassing "organettes" or portable pianos, which grind incessantly and seem always to be playing "Santa Lucia" or "Bella Napoli" and vary sometimes with the "Trovatore."

On either side of the pavilion are the "camerini," or dressing rooms—one side reserved for ladies, the other for gentlemen. These "camerini" are the roughest kind of little wooden boxes, carpeted with a mat of braided straw and furnished with four rude chairs for the four persons each is supposed to accommodate. Then there are the steps leading to the water. The fee for the use of each room is one franc fifty (or 30 cents), including the linen sheets, the price never varying whether there be one or four persons together.

Once in the water and presto! change! all the reserved etiquette of the Italian drawing room vanishes. Then and then only does liberty exist, and the pretty little signorinas, as well as the handsome signoras, in the very simplest kind of bathing costume, generally dark blue with a little white braid, transformed into veritable water nymphs, swim off with all the grace and alacrity of a fish, never fearing, never tiring, just as if they had been born to it. And there is no end to romance. Fancy a boat full of handsome young officers towing a trail of pretty, bright eyed girls to some quiet, picturesque spot, where all indulge in a jolly little luncheon. It doesn't seem so very much, does it? And yet one recalls that these same young officers may never have dared address the young ladies on land, or if they have had the good fortune to do so it was only under the watchful eye of the omnipresent chaperon, then we realize what it really means.

Then there are the quieter places, like the placid blue waters of Sorrento, away down under the high walls of rock, where one may float and gaze up at the beautiful villas and fragrant orange gardens. And Capri, where the wonderful blue grotto is free to all who can swim there, while the hurried traveler inevitably falls a victim to the merciless boatmen who shake their hands in one's face and demand "la tariffa," which never fails to exceed the fee regularly established.

Yes, the sea is a blessing to the Italians, open to all and appreciated as well by poor as by rich. Indeed one finds himself wondering what would become of the lower classes—take the Neapolitans, for instance—if it were not for this wise provision of nature. They are said to be constitutionally opposed to the use of water in winter on the grounds that it means certain death by cold, but in summer they fairly live in the sea, and the little street urchins frolic about and dive for the pennies of the "forestieri" without even the encumbrance of a bathing costume.—Chicago Tribune.

THE Minnesota Republicans in Congress are solid for the repeal of the Sherman silver act. Boen says he is in favor of repeal, but will not vote for it unless it secures free coinage of silver as a substitute.

THE new congressman from Hennepin, Loren Fletcher, catches on like an old stager and will be an efficient member of the House. "Your Uncle Loren" will bring his talents to bear upon the silver purchasing act—and it will have to go.

THE great and only Donnelly has been making himself conspicuous at the silver convention at Chicago. As usual he is (or aspires to be) the biggest toad in the puddle. If the old saying: "Speech is silvern but silence is golden" is true, Donnelly is right in it in a silver convention.

AT a republican senatorial caucus on Tuesday, Senator Washburn made a strong speech in favor of the repeal of the Sherman silver act, which has been highly commented on far and wide. The senator says that only 12 republican senators are opposed to unconditional repeal.

IT is said that H. A. Foss, who was the editor of the Independent at Grand Forks up till last spring when he bought a farm near Fosston, sighs to re-enter the newspaper work again and is on the lookout for a field. We would suggest that he try McIntosh as there are only three newspapers there at present and there seems to be as much of a "long felt want" there as ever.

THE extra session of congress got down to business on Monday and now we will see what will be done to benefit the financial situation. If they repeal the Sherman silver act, let the tariff laws remain as they are and adjourn, they will accomplish all that can be done at present—but they are not liable to do that, for it is the universal opinion that the extra session will spin out into the regular, and accomplish nothing of material benefit to the country.

IT is reported that Senator Washburn says that he does not intend to call up his anti-option bill during the extra session, as he considers the financial situation of the utmost importance just at present, but later on he will call up the substitute of Senator George instead of his own bill. He considers legislation of this kind more important than ever and desires to get an effective bill and one that the president will sign.

IT is amusing to read the comments of our exchanges on the Sherman silver act, showing what dense ignorance prevails even among the fraternity upon the living questions of the day; and now comes a Montana paper with the statement that "old John Sherman was a greater traitor to his country than Benedict Arnold." A man who pretends to know enough to run a newspaper ought at least to keep himself fairly well posted on political topics, but it seems this Montana man has yet to learn that the much abused Sherman act was a compromise measure. That only for that same "old traitor, Sherman" a far worse measure would have been passed. By this compromise measure, John Sherman saved the country from a financial crash far worse than the one that has occurred under this act. And yet there are some ignoramuses and demagogues who call John Sherman a traitor.

LET HIM ALONE.

"Last season the farmer was implored to hold on to his wheat, as the price would very soon be one dollar a bushel. The advice was heeded by thousands of farmers and the hold on was a dear grip. Then he was advised to feed wheat to the hogs, thereby obtaining upward of a dollar a bushel for his grain, and pork has collapsed and is selling at old-fashioned prices. It is thought that the farmer will next be advised to cease cultivating his farm, thereby causing a dearth of grain of all kinds and consequently a big advance in prices. The best advice for the farmer is to permit him to conduct his business according to his own idea."

The above from the Fisher Bulletin unconsciously strikes the key-note to the purpose for which the Farmers Alliance was organized—to permit the farmer to conduct his own business himself. Donnelly, and politicians of that stripe, who had for so long lived off the farmer (through his great sympathy (?) for the "suffering farmer,") saw that if the alliance object succeeded their cake would be all dough and their occupation gone, so they went to work to make a political machine of the alliance. The leading farmers of the state soon caught onto Donnelly's object and earnestly opposed him, knowing that his success would be the death of the alliance and the fight was a long and bitter one, and will be unless the alliance drops all these scheming demagogues and re-organizes on the old basis. The alliance, as a political organization should only be used as a balance of power, for in that way alone can it ever benefit its members politically—as a business organization pure and simple it would be a tower of strength.

THE president's message was the most sensible state document that ever emanated from that source. For once he seems to have somewhat overlooked the personal pronoun "I" and confined himself to business. He earnestly recommends the repeal of the silver act at once and says that the tariff can wait awhile. Which means that Grover does not really think the tariff laws as wicked and mischievous as he pretended to before election.

IN our telegraph columns will be found the full text of the Sherman law—the law which is said to be the cause of the present stringency in the money market. The perusal of the law will enable one to understand better what its repeal will mean.

NO LESS a personage than Governor Flower, of New York, says "the democrats will make the most if they let the tariff alone." That's where his head is level.

THE World's Fair test of harvesters will occur at Larimore, N. D., somewhere about the 21st inst.

The Minneapolis Journal says:

"J. Baker, a banker of Bismarck, N. D., says: "I think there will be plenty of money in circulation, not only in North Dakota, but in all Northwestern states. North Dakota alone will realize about $25,000,000 from her grains, live stock etc. The Northwest is all right. Per capita we produce more grain, cattle and sheep—which sell for cash—than any other part of the United States, and in 90 days the northwest will drain more hard cash from the East and Europe than any other section. This must improve the financial condition of this part of the country. I think the situation is more hopeful, and will continue to grow so as we near the time for making shipments." That's the way to talk. The Northwest is all right and the proper thing to do is to keep a stiff upper lip for a few weeks till the crops begin to move when money will be more abundant."

Two important articles on "The Finacial Situation" appear in the August number of the North America Review. The first is by the comptroller of the Currency, Hon. James H. Eckels, writes on "The Present Crises," and the second, Governor Pennoyer, of Oregon, is titled "After the Four Hundred Year—What?"

"The Stock Growers Journal takes great pleasure in chronicling a kind and charitable act on the part of a great corporation. The old saying that corporations are bodies without souls seems to be away off in this instance. Mrs. George Blanck, of Miles City, has recently received the sum of $500.00 from the Burlington Road. It will be remembered that her husband was killed last fall when going east in charge of cattle for the Phillips Company. President Scott, of the Stockgrowers Association and H. R. Phillips investigated the circumstances attending the death of Mr. Blanck and found found the railroad company was not liable as there was contributary negligence on the part of the deceased. However, in consideration of Mrs. Blanck's straightened circumstances, the Burlington, while recognizing no liability gave her through charitable motives, solely, the above mentioned sum. Such benevolence deserves to be chronicled and if should incite other corporations to like deeds of benevolence."

A cursory glance at The New Peterson for August is enough to show that it is one of the best of the month's magazines. "Days in England," by Mary Gray Umsted, describes all sorts of charming out-of-the-way nooks, and the accompanying illustrations are worthy of the text. "Professor Polycarp's Invention," by M. G. McClelland, is in that popular author's finest vein and is capitally illustrated. Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stuart's novelet, "Cæsar," is one of her best productions. "The Silver Plate," by Alice Maude Ewell, is an excellent story founded on a little known incident in the life of Paul Jones. "Under the Trees" is a new department made up of short sketches by Minot J. Savage and other prominent writers. Terms, two dollars a year. CONGRESS MEETS.

THE TWELFTH EXTRA SESSION CONVENED.

It Will Prescribe For the Financial Malady From Which the Country Is Suffering—Text of the Sherman Law, Which It Is Sought to Repeal.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The twelfth extraordinary session of congress in the history of the United States, which was called by the president for the purpose of curing the financial ills to which the country has fallen heir, convened promptly at noon, each branch in its respective chamber. The will of the caucus of Saturday night was promptly carried out in the house and Charles F. Crisp of Georgia was elected speaker, Mr. Kerr of Pennsylvania chief clerk, A. B. Hunt of Tennessee doorkeeper, and Herman W. Snow of Illinois sergeant-at arms.

A committee was appointed to wait upon the president to inform him that congress was organized and ready to receive any communication he might see fit to transmit. The biennial drawing for seats was then proceeded with, amid laughter, cheers and exclamations of pleasure and disappointment.

The house adjourned out of respect to the memory of the late William H. Enochs of Ohio.

The senate was already virtually organized, officers having been elected at the session in March.

The secretary-elect of the senate, Mr. Cox of North Carolina, had the oath administered to him and took possession of the office. The usual resolutions to notify the house and president were adopted and at 12:30 the death of the late Senator Stanford of California was announced by Mr. White of that state, and as a mark of respect the senate adjourned for the day.

THE SHERMAN LAW.

Full Text of the Silver Purchasing Act of 1890.

The following is a full text of the Sherman silver purchasing law of 1890, about which there has been so much discussion:

An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the sneate and house of representatives of the United States of America, in congress assembled: That the secretary of the treasury is hereby directed to purchase from time to time silver bullion to the aggregate amount of 4,500,000 ounces, or so much thereof as may be offered each month at the market price theirof not exceeding $1 for three hundred and seventy-one and twenty-five hundredths grains of pure silver, and to issue in payment for such purchases of silver bullion treasury notes of the United States to be prepared by the secretary of the treasury in such form and of such denominations—not less than $1 nor more than $1,000—as he may prescribe, and a sum sufficient to carry into effect the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 2. That the treasury notes issued in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be redeemable on demand, in coin, at the treasury of the United States, or at the office of any assistant treasurer of the United States, and when so redeemed may be reissued, but no greater or less amount of such notes shall be outstanding at any time than the cost of the silver bullion and the standard silver dollars coined therefrom, then held in the treasury purchased by such notes, and such treasury notes shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract, and shall be receivable for customs, taxes and public dues, and when so received may be reissued; and such notes when held by any national banking association may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve. That upon demand of the holder of any of the treasury notes herein provided for the secretary of the treasury shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, redeem such notes in gold or silver coin at his discretion, it being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio, or such ratio as may be provided by law.

Sec. 3. That the secretary of the treasury shall each month coin 2,000,000 ounces of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act into standard silver dollars until the 1st day of July, 1891, and after that time he shall coin of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act as much as may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the treasury notes herein provided for, and any gain or seigniorage arising from such coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the treasury.

Sec. 4. That the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the requirements of existing law and the regulations of the mint service governing the methods of determining the amount of pure silver contained and the amount of charges or deductions, if any, to be made.

Sec. 5. That so much of the act of Feb. 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal tender character," as required the monthly purchase and coinage of the same into silver dollars of not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion is hereby repealed.

Sec. 6. That upon the passage of this act the balance standing with the treasurer of the United States to the respective credits of national banks for deposits made to redeem the circulating notes of such banks and all deposits thereafter received for like purpose, shall be covered into the treasury as a miscellaneous receipt, and the treasurer of the United States shall redeem from the general cash in the treasury the circulating notes of said banks which may come into his possession subject to redemption, and upon the certificate of the comptroller of the currency that such notes have been received by him and that they have been destroyed by him and that no new notes will be issued in their place, reimbursement of their amount shall be made to the treasurer, under such regulations as the secretary of the treasury may prescribe, from an appropriation hereby created, to be known as national bank notes redemption account, but the provisions of this act shall not apply to the deposits received under section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, requiring every national bank to keep in lawful money with the treasurer of the United States a sum equal to 5 per centum of its circulation, to be held and used for the redemption of its circulating notes, and the balance remaining of the deposits so covered shall at the close of each month be reported on the monthly public debt statement as debt of the United States bearing no interest.

Sec. 7. That this act shall take effect 30 days from and after its passage.

Approved July 14, 1890.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

They Demand Coinage at 16 to 1 and Oppose Unconditional Repeal.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—The second day of the silver convention was devoted to speechmaking and resolutions. The committee was not ready to report at the opening of the convention and the delegates listened to Frank G. Newland, of Nevada, Senator Allen, of Nebraska and others.

At the afternoon session the resolutions committee reported. The resolutions were very long. After citing the consequences of demonetization of silver they conclude as follows:

Therefore, in view of all these facts, we declare that there must be no compromise of this question. All legislation demonetizing silver and restricting the coinage thereof must be immediately and completely repealed by an act restoring the coinage of the country to the conditions established by the founders of the nation, and which continued for over 80 years without complaint from any part of our people. Every hour's delay in undoing the corrupt work of Ernest Seyd and our foreign enemies is an insult to the dignity of the American people, a crushing burden on their prosperity and an attempt to place us again under the yoke from which George Washington and his compatriots rescued us. We protest against the financial policy of the United States being made dependent upon the opinions or policies of any foreign government, and assert the power of this nation to stand on its own feet and legislate for itself upon all subjects.

Free Coinage the Remedy.

We assert that the only remedy for our metallic financial troubles is to open the mints of the nation to gold and silver on equal terms, at the old ratio of 16 of silver to 1 of gold. Whenever silver bullion can be exchanged at the mints of the United States for legal tender silver dollars worth 100 cents each, that moment 412 1-2 grains of standard silver will be worth 100 cents, and, as commerce equalizes the prices of all commodities of the world, whenever 412 1-2 grains of standard silver are worth 100 cents in the United States, they will be worth that sum everywhere else, and cannot be bought for less. When it will be urged that such a result would enhance the price of silver bullion it is sufficient for us to know that a similar increase would immediately be made in the price of every form of property except gold and credits in the civilized world. It would be a shallow selfishness that would deny prosperity to the the mining industries at the cost of bankruptcy to the whole people. The legislation to demonetize silver has given an unjust increase to the value of gold at the cost of the prosperity of mankind; wheat and all other agricultural products have fallen side by side with silver.

Prosperity Will Follow.

We suggest that the maintenance of bimetallism by the United States at a ratio of 16 to 1 will increase our commerce with all the silver using countries of the world, containing two-thirds of the world, without decreasing our commerce with these nations which buy our raw material, and will compel the adoption of bimetallism by the nations of Europe sooner than by any other means.

We assert that the unparalleled calamities which now afflict the American people are not due to the so-called Sherman act of 1890, and in proof thereof we call attention to the fact that the same evil conditions now prevail over all the gold standard world. We are convinced that bad as is the state of affairs in this country, it would have been still worse, but for the Sherman act, by which the nation has obtained to some extent an expanding circulation, to meet the demands of a continent in progress of colonization, and run the business exigencies of the most energetic and industrious race that ever dwelt on the earth, and we insist upon the execution of the laws without evasion so long as it is upon the statute books upon the purchase of the full amount of silver each month that it provides for, to the end that the monthly addition to the circulating medium the laws secures shall be maintained.

After the adoption of the resolutions a committee on ways and means, one from each state, was appointed and the convention adjourned.

Boies Opposed to Third Terms.

DES MOINES, Aug. 5.—In a letter addressed to the chairman of the Democratic state committee, Governor Boies refuses to allow the use of his name in connection with the gubernatorial nomination, expressing himself as opposed to third terms. He also declares himself not in the race for the senatorship. He advocates the popular election of senators.

Warships Stopped the Fight.

APIA, Samoa, July 19, via San Francisco, Aug. 5.—War broke out between Malietoa's and Mataafa's forces, but warships of three powers intervened and stopped the fighting. Mataafa and his chiefs have surrendered. Mataafa's loss was 30 killed and 20 wounded.

Failed to Indict.

CHICAGO, Aug. 8.—The grand jury, after thoroughly investigating the cold storage warehouse fire at the world's fair, failed to return an indictment. The jury reported that no evidence of any criminality on the part of the owners, employes, firemen, or architects had been presented.

The Best Medicine.

J. O. WILSON, Contractor and Builder, Sulphur Springs, Texas, thus speaks of Ayer's Pills:

"Ayer's Pills are the best medicine I ever tried; and, in my judgment, no better general remedy could be devised. I have used them in my family and recommended them to my friends and employés for more than twenty years. To my certain knowledge, many cases of the following complaints have been completely and by the use of Ayer's Pills alone: Third day chills, dumb ague, bilious fever, sick headache, rheumatism, flux, dyspepsia, constipation, and hard colds. I know that a moderate use of Ayer's Pills, continued for a few days or weeks, as the nature of the complaint required, would be found an absolute cure for the disorders I have named above."

"I have been selling medicine for eight years, and I can safely say that Ayer's Pills give better satisfaction than any other Pill I ever sold."—J. J. Perry, Spottsylvania C. H., Va.

HARD WHEAT.

Its Importance to the Northwestern Farmers.

In its August issue Farm Stock and Home has the following able article on wheat:

There is no one thing that the local business men in the great hard wheat regions of the Northwest ought more actively to interest themselves in than methods of marketing that product that will contribute to the improvement of both its quality and quantity.

That region was endowed by the Creator with climate and soil conditions adapted to growing a wheat as distinctive in its way as the wool of Australia is distinctive and in some respects unlike any other wool in the world. That wheat, when carefully and intelligently produced will command a price in the markets of the world independent of and above that of ordinary wheats, because of its exceptional value of mixing with the softer sorts of other portions of this and other countries, precisely as the wool of Australia is higher priced because of its value for mixing with the coarser and less silky-fibered wools of other countries.

The reasons, and the only reasons, why the wheat has not made so distinctive and valuable a place for itself in the world are, first, it has not been allowed to enter the markets of the world in its native excellence and purity, but has been culled, mixed and juggled with to such an extent that its own mother would not know it away from home; and, second, the methods of home marketing have practically put a premium upon growing poor wheat, inevitably producing deterioration of quality, and consequent neutralizing of priceless natural advantages.

The hard wheat regions of the United States should not be the despised region of the country, nor its wheat growers its most despised farmers. A system of rotation and fertalization should be practiced there, but ever with a view to producing the largest possible amount of strictly hard wheat of fine quality. With such a crop, the best and only one of its kind in the world, its price would not be wholly dependent upon the prices of inferior sorts of wheat, and, quality maintained and ever improving, would make its price as distinctive and valuable as its quality. The better it can be made the more valuable for mixing purposes, and there cannot be so much of it produced but what the competitive demand for it would insure it a remunerative price every year.

Existing systems of marketing and handling this wheat are responsible for a deterioration in quality which is manifested in receipts at terminal markets of five to six per cent of No. 1 hard instead of from fifty to sixty per cent that grade a few years ago, and in the deterioration that such change implies the business men of that region are quite as much the losers as the farmers; and it is even more to the interest of the former than to the latter to work for changes in system that will augment the percentage of hard wheat. Absolute freedom of market and the ability to get the best wheat the region referred to can produce into the world's markets unmixed, are the only things required to make it the most prosperous and most widely celebrated agricultural region of the globe, making the Red River of the North rival the traditional Nile as the waterway of a region of marvelous fertility and wealth of produtt.

The splendid natural advantages of our own "valley of the Nile" are wholly unrealized by the toilers of its matchless soil, and therefore by the legitimate business interests located there. Those great natural advantages should be realized by others than railroads, elevator ring and wheat combines, and to that end business men and farmers must "get together," and harmonize and co-operate. Failure to protest against existing conditions or to manfully struggle for better ones makes men unworthy the natural heritages they enjoy. A few are profiting enormously through present practices; the many are suffering; the profiting should be more universal.

TREASURY GOLD CONTINUES TO PILE UP.

Over Two Million Dollars Free Gold Now In the Treasury—Big Premium Being Paid at New York For Small Currency.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The gold in the treasury is daily increasing. It now stands $102,291,895, or $2,291,895 above the reserve.

The net balance of the treasury, however, from the treasurer's statement, shows a decrease, attributed largely to a falling off in custom receipts. This balance is $15,989,722. The subsidiary silver in the treasury, made up of halves, quarters and dimes, amounts to $12,598,000.

So far this month the receipts in round figures amount to $5,000,000, and the expenditures to $7,750,000, of which $3,000,000 have been paid on the pension account. These large expenditures have eaten into the net balance and reduced it.

The fact that custom receipts are falling off, while it effects the government revenue from that source, has an opposite bearing on the general prosperity of the country, as it shows that less money is being expended abroad for imported merchandise.

The issue of standard silver dollars from the mints and the treasury offices during the week ended Aug. 5 was $1,274,340; for the corresponding week of last week, $452,225. Fractional silver coin for the month of July was $762,448, and from the 1st to the 5th inst., $103,604.

CURRENCY SCARCE.

Money Brokers Getting as High as 3 1-2 Per Cent for Big Lots.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—Aside from the meeting of congress and its possible action on the silver question, together with its probable effect on business in general and the stock market in particular, the principal subject of discussion during the day was the continued scarcity of all forms of currency notes and specie. In fact, according to well-informed bankers, that was in some respects the most serious question of the day, although many of them were of the opinion that the difficulty would right itself in a few days. Others said that the scarcity would not be relieved until confidence was restored; and that would not be until congress has repealed the silver purchase clause of the Sherman law.

Money brokers were paying as high as 1 1-2 to 2 per cent for currency, and were getting as high as 3 1-2 for it in big lots. Their offices were crowded all day, and they were evidently doing a big business. These money brokers are using every expedient to get currency out of the banks and the subtreasury. They are buying up all the drafts on the treasury, such as pension checks, post-office drafts, mint checks, etc., as well as big bills.

Distressing Accident on Lake George In Which Nine Lost Life.

TROY, N. Y., Aug. 5.—About 9 o'clock p. m. a pleasure party, while going to a dance at the lower end of Lake George, met with a terrible casualty. The steam yacht, which is owned by D. W. Sherman, proprietor of the Pearl Rock House, Lake George, was conveying 29 people up the lake, the little vessel was turned towards the One Hundred Mile Island House, and was gliding toward the landing when the passengers were thrown forward by a sudden shock. In the darkness the vessel had run upon a sunken pier, and before assistance arrived from the shore it sank. Nine persons were drowned, all of them ladies but one.

The Weight of Crowds.

The load which is produced by a dense crowd of persons is generally taken at 80 to 100 pounds per square foot and is considered to be the greatest uniformly distributed load for which a floor need be proportioned. That this value may be largely exceeded in an actual crowd was pointed out by Professor W. C. Kernot of the Melbourne university, Australia, in a paper before the Victorian Institute of Engineers. In an actual trial a class of students averaging 153.5 pounds each in weight were crowded in a lobby containing 1,823 square feet, making an average floor load of 134.7 pounds. There was still room to have placed another man, which would have brought up the loading to 143.1 pounds per square foot.

Professor Kernot also quoted from Stoney, who placed 58 Irish laborers averaging 158 pounds each in weight in an empty ship deckhouse measuring 57 square feet floor area. This was a load of 147.4 pounds per square foot. In another test, with 73 laborers crowded into a hut 9 feet by 8 feet 8 inches, Stoney produced a load of 143 pounds per square foot and estimated that two or three more men could have been squeezed in. It appears from these experiments that while the figures ordinarily assumed of 80 to 100 pounds are sufficiently correct for spaces on which there is no cause to induce the collection of great crowds, larger figures, say 140 to 150 pounds per square foot, should be used for railway stations and platforms, entrances and exits to places of public assemblies or of office buildings, bridge sidewalks, pavements over vaults and other places where dense crowds are likely to gather.—Engineering News.

The Yearly Income of a President.

There is a general idea that the president's salary of $50,000 a year is all that he receives, and that, when compared with the salaries paid the sovereigns of Europe, the sum is not enough. This is a mistake. In addition to his salary, the president receives $36,064 to pay the salaries of his clerks and subordinates. His private secretary has $3,250; his assistant secretary, $2,250; the stenographer gets $1,800; each of five messengers, $1,200; the steward, $1,800; each of the two doorkeepers, $1,200, while other employees are paid in proportion down to the man who takes care of the fires, who receives $864.

In addition $8,000 are allowed for incidentals, such as stationery and carpets; $12,500 for repairs and refurnishing; $2,500 for fuel; $4,000 for the greenhouse, and $15,000 for the stable, gas and other incidentals. In all the president and his house cost the country more than $125,000.—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Queen as a Gardener.

In former days the queen herself was fond of gardening. Each of her children had a little plot of ground to cultivate, and these tiny gardens are even now kept up carefully, just as the children left them. The queen was one day tending her flowers at Osborne with watering pot and rake in hand, when Mario, the great tenor, came along. He was on his way to sing in the palace at the command of the queen, and being delighted with the garden had sent his carriage ahead and was walking alone. Suddenly he came upon the lady with the watering pot. "Would you be so good as to direct me to the apartments of the queen?" he asked. "What can you want there?" said the lady. "I want the queen because I am Mario and am to sing for her." "Vous voila arrive. I am the queen," was the reply. Mario was her slave from that hour.—New York Sun.

Garbage Turned Into Light.

The introduction of garbage destructors is already working a revolution in municipal management in many cities. It has taken some little time to enable people to realize that not only need the refuse of towns and cities be not wasted, but that it can actually be turned into a source of very considerable profit. A destructor in the town of Widues, England, generates heat for an electric plant capable of lighting the town hall, market, free library, technical schools and part of the street lamps.—New York Telegram.

Identification In China.

In China a traveler wishing for a passport is compelled to have the palm of his hand brushed over with fine oil paint; he then presses his hand on thin damp paper, which retains an impression of the lines. This is used to prevent transference of the passport, as the lines of no two hands are alike.—Exchange.

To Whom It May Concern.

Alexandria, Minn., July 28th 1893.

Prof. Whittier fitted my eyes with glasses which I have worn continuously without the least trouble or inconvenience from pain or irritation to the eyes. My trouble was astigmatism. He also fitted Mrs. Jenks eyes for the same trouble (her eyes being different), with like beneficial result. Neither of us could ever see before as we ought though we did not realize the extent of the difficulty. I was for two years teacher in the Minn. State School for the blind and realize that the best treatment is the only kind which should ever be allowed about the eyes and cordially recommend Prof. Whittier as an optician. I think his methods of testing are perfect, necessitating a perfect correction of optical troubles as well in complicated cases, like mine, as in others.

The piscatorial exhibit, which has proved so popular for the last two seasons, will be repeated, with an enlarged display and increased facilities, at the Minneapolis Exposition, which opens September 6.

The fish are displayed in tanks wth glass fronts, lighted by electricity; so that they may be seen at all times. Every sportsman will be interested in this, and every boy who ever cast a line in lake or brook, will recognize his friends and favorites among the speckled beauties who are captives in the grotto.

An excellent portrait and phrenological description of the Earl of Aberdeen, the new Viceroy of Canada, leads in the August number of the Phrenological Journal and Science of Health, while the textual matter is noteworthy. Following this a graphic article on the importance of phrenological information to the managers of public institutions will arrest close attention because written by Mr. Stead, the editor of Review of Reviews. An elaborate delineation of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, from an examination, accompanies a fine portrait of that very well-known writer of poetry and story books. A profusely illustrated discussion of the vital temperament forms the installment in the series on How to Study Strangers, and an Analysis of Approbativeness on a fresh line of thought will impress the reader. In the series of phrenological biographies two important names appear this time, Dr. Coxe and Dr. Gleason, the latter of water cure fame. These biographies show one feature sharply enough, that scientific men who were in advance of their fellows readily accepted the teachings of Spurzheim and Combe. Several finely written articles appear in the departments of Child Culture and Health, the usefulness of which elicits general notice, and the wish that all the world could read them. Only 15 cents a number, or $1.50 a year. Address Fowler and Wells, No. 25 East 21st street, New York.

The success of Mrs. Annie M. Beam of McKeesport, Pennsylvania, in the treatment of diarrhœa in her children, will undoubtedly be of interest to many mothers. I got some of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy from Rev. Mr. Chapman. It cured both of them. I knew of several other cases where it was equally successful. THE DOG STAR RAGES

BUT THERE IS NO CAUSE FOR A PANIC ABOUT HYDROPHOBIA.

Popular Fallacies About Dog Days—Few Curs Go Mad In Hot, Dry Weather—Influence of the Imagination on Hydrophobia—A Few Notable Cases.

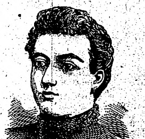
DOG days are here again, and it is in order to republish the regular annual statement that this is not the season when dogs go mad—that is, not often; also that good running water is just as pure and bathing in it just as safe as at any other season; that sound chicken meat is just as wholesome as in December (and likely to be a deal more tender), and that the usual appetite for whisky is not to be taken as an indication that a man needs it any more than in winter, but rather that, like Rip Van Winkle, he's "better without it." Nevertheless at this season we hear monstrous stories, some of which will be given further on.

Of course everybody knows by this time, for astronomy has been popularized more than any other science in the last 30 years, that by the apparent motion of the sun and fixed stars the former is at this season in the same part of the sky as Sirius, the dog star, which gives a name to the period. As, however, the sun and Sirius are in the same quarter for a long time, no exact measure is possible, and American almanacs usually put it from July 25 to Sept. 5 inclusive. In ancient days Sirius and the sun came together about the time those dreadful summer plagues and hot winds came to Mediterranean lands. As the sun, however, is but a little matter of 93,000,000 miles from us, while Sirius is at least 100,000,000,000,000, it is plain that their apparent conjunction cannot affect the dogs.

Nevertheless there is so much in a name that millions believe these are in truth mad dog days, and it is true that dogs can more easily be tormented into biting and boys are rather more aggravating. This also is the season when people are roaming all over the country and many will meddle with strange dogs. Of a truth, however, there is the least hydrophobia in the hottest weather and next least in the coldest weather, if it is both cold and dry. The maximum is in the wettest weather. Thus the records kept at the official medical stations in Europe show three times as many cases in April and November as in July and August. It is therefore a singular coincidence that in one week of July several dreadful and some curious cases occurred in New York city and vicinity.

Of these the most distressing was that of Miss Lizzie Byram, who suffered the most intense agony and yet retained her mental faculties almost to the last, warning her physician and lover to keep out of her reach even while she was snapping at their hands in the dreadful paroxysms. Miss Byram was the oldest child of Alphens J. Byram of Newark, N. J., and some time in April was playing with a pet dog, when it suddenly snapped at her, left a scratch on the back of her hand and at once dashed out of the house and yard and never returned.

As the skin was not broken so far as she could see, she thought nothing of the scratch—it was in truth only a red mark—and went with the family to pass the hot weather at Asbury Park. Without a warning or previous sickness of any kind she was suddenly seized with a nervous irritability that prevented her from sleeping. She was treated for a cold, as her eyes were inflamed and watery and other symptoms were present. Next day the convulsions began, and as Dr. J. H. Bryan approached her she cried out:



LIZZIE BYRAM.

"Doctor, I am mad. I believe I have hydrophobia. Keep your hands away or I shall bite you, and I would not do that for the world."

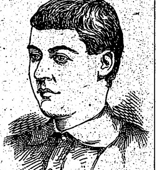
The young man to whom Miss Lizzie was to have been married in a few weeks was sent for, and for the remaining two days and nights of her life never left her bedside. The scene was too dreadful for description. She could swallow nothing. Her moans were like those of a dog in pain. She barked and snapped like a dog. In the brief intervals of rest she begged her weeping friends to keep away from her, and in one of her spasms scratched the arm of her lover, Mr. Matthew Applegate, which seemed to add to her grief. Convulsion then succeeded convulsion so rapidly that there was no interval for rallying, and three days after being taken sick she died of complete exhaustion.

And then the usual dispute arose. Despite the symptoms several physicians who studied the case declare that Miss Byram could not have had hydrophobia. It is alleged that although she looked as well as usual, her health and strength were really declining for other reasons, and when she heard that a dog resembling the one that bit her was killed a few miles away because it was supposed to be mad she gave herself up for lost. An active imagination and unusual hysteria did the rest. So say these doctors.

It is a curious fact that though leprosy and hydrophobia have been known from the earliest recorded times they are the two diseases of which physicians know the least, and their origin seems to elude all inquiry.

The second case, also in Newark, was equally dreadful at the start, but terminated favorably, from which the skeptical physicians draw important conclusions. Joseph Rhein, aged 10, was bitten in the thigh by a mongrel dog, and two hours passed before the wound was cauterized. He played till night with his usual cheerfulness, but on going to bed was suddenly taken with the first symptoms of hydrophobia—that is, fever, restlessness, pain in the head and back and inability to swallow. His mother called in a neighbor man and started for the doctor. She had no sooner left the house than the boy went into convulsions. In 15 minutes his face was transformed till its expression was frightful. He howled, snapped, bit the bedclothes and struggled so violently that three men held him only with extreme difficulty.

The physicians administered chloroform and after it hypodermic injections of morphine. About midnight the boy took a decided turn for the better. Toward morning he sank into a refreshing sleep and at 8 a. m. got up free from spasms, but very weak, and has slowly recovered. Fortunately the dog was not killed, and all who have inspected him declare he is not mad. Now, say the medical skeptics, this boy got well because he is too young and too matter of fact to have any great imagination, had never heard or read of a case of hydrophobia and for other reasons could not have hysteria. The case is considered important as proving how much mere terror may have to do with the dreadful affliction.



JOSEPH RHEIN.

A still more singular case is that of John Brassington, a lad of 18, whose convulsions first came on while his father, in a state of intoxication, was berating him. Thereafter the sight of his father immediately started him off in a fit, having all the symptoms of hydrophobia, and finally the smell of liquor on any man's breath would upset him—a peculiarly unfortunate condition in New York city. At length the boy had every marked symptom of hydrophobia and had to be strapped to his bed. In his lucid intervals he declared positively that he was bitten last spring by a rabid dog and treated at the Pasteur institute, which is all a delusion, as nothing of the sort occurred. At length he was taken to the state asylum at Poughkeepsie, where at last accounts he was recovering rapidly. The neighbors say that his father whacked him on the head with a club and that when he "came to" he at once declared he had hydrophobia, which gives a faint touch of grim humor to the case.

A third Newark case is that of Kate McCauley, a citizeness with a mixed record, who was bitten by a strange dog and at once had recourse to her favorite stimulant, believing apparently that the antidote was the same as for snake bite. She was walking leisurely and apparently in good health near the canal, and happening to look at the water at once went into the wildest convulsions. When Policeman Long took hold of her, she bit his coat and tore it to rags before she could be got to the station. Says he: "She hung onto that coat so tight that when I got it away it wasn't fit to wear to a dog fight. Do I think she had hydrophobia? If that wasn't hydrophobia in its most violent form, I'll resign tomorrow. Look at that coat."

All night she barked and snapped and howled till people in the vicinity thought the police had a wild beast caged, but in the morning she drank ice water by the quart, so the doctors were undeceived. The latest opinion is that her case is one of chronic alcoholism and acute hysteria, the hydrophobia symptoms being the result of her overheated imagination. Other and really fatal cases have occurred.

What the doctors don't know about hydrophobia would make a big book. It is certain that the dog, wolf, fox, jackal, hyena, dingo, indeed all animals of that genus, are liable to it, and that rare cases occur among cats and pigs; also that the bite of the weasel, marten, polecat, mink and a few other small animals is occasionally very poisonous, but does not produce true rabies. But as to the cause and the cure very little is yet conclusively proved.

J. H. BEADLE.

A Dangerous Practice.

Ladies who do a great deal of sewing frequently suffer a great deal from soreness of the mouth and lips and are often at a loss to ascertain the cause of the trouble. Half the time it is simply the result of biting off thread instead of using a pair of shears for cutting. In the case of silk thread the danger is quite marked, because it is usual to soak the thread in acetate of lead partly to harden it and give it a good surface, and also perhaps to increase its weight somewhat. If this practice is followed [illegible] and very much silk thread is used the results may be quite serious and [illegible] to lead poisoning [illegible]

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

WHEREAS MILTON VAN DYKE unmarried, of the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, as mortgagor, did, on the 14th day of December A. D. 1889, duly execute and deliver to the "Union Central Life Insurance Company" a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Ohio and having its principal office in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, as mortgagee, his mortgage bearing date the 14th day of December A. D. 1889, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagee the following described lands situate in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, viz: The west half (1-2) of section thirty-four (34), in township one hundred and forty nine (149) north of range forty-three (43) west, containing 320 acres of land; and which mortgage was, with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for Polk County, Minnesota, on the 16th day of December A. D. 1889 at four o'clock and 20 minutes in the afternoon in book "48" of mortgages on pages 182, 183, 184 and 185. And which mortgage was given to secure the payment of one thousand ($1000) dollars and interest thereon at eight per cent per annum payable on the 1st day of January of each year, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with interest coupons attached made by said mortgagor, and payable to the order of said mortgagee and which note became due on December 14th, 1899.

And whereas default having been made in the payment of the sum of eighty dollars due as interest upon said mortgage on the 1st day of January A. D. 1893 and the said interest is still unpaid and due.

And whereas it was stipulated by and between the parties to said mortgage that if the maker of said note shall fail to pay any of said money, either principal or interest, when the same becomes due, or to conform to, or comply with, any of the conditions, or agreements, therein contained, to be kept and performed by said mortgagor that the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage shall become due and payable at once.

And the said mortgagee having declared the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable and it does hereby declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage due and payable.

And whereas there is now due, and payable on said mortgage the sum of one thousand one hundred twenty-eight ($1128) dollars at the date of this notice, and no action or proceedings at law or otherwise, having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the Statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The west half (1-2) of section thirty four (34) in township one hundred forty nine (149) north of range forty three (43) west, containing 320 acres of land, situated in Polk County, Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt and interest and the taxes, if any, on said premises and fifty dollars attorney fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston in said county and state, on the 28th day of August A. D. 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law. [illegible]

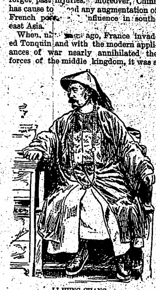
THE FRENCH IN SIAM.

THE FIRST NATION TO ESTABLISH DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS.

China's Interest In the Present Situation. Li Hung Chang a Progressive Statesman. The Siamese Minister of Foreign Affairs and the French Admiral.

The intense interest which China has manifested in the Franco-Siamese imbroglio may be attributed largely to the influence of Li Hung Chang, the viceroy and practically the ruler of the Celestial empire. China herself has suffered seriously from French aggression, and Chang is not the sort of statesman to forget past injuries. Moreover, China has cause to dread any augmentation of French power and influence in southeast Asia.

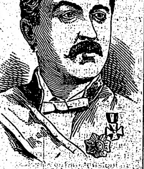
When, nine years ago, France invaded Tonquin and with the modern appliances of war nearly annihilated the forces of the middle kingdom, it was a case of warfare between the nineteenth and seventeenth centuries. In such a contest France had an immeasurable advantage. Now, however, the situation is changed, and in the event of active hostilities China would cut no mean figure in the fray.



LI HUNG CHANG.

The war in Tonquin was very humiliating to the Chinese viceroy, but it opened his eyes. He saw that it was idle for mere human strength to contend with the forces of nature which have been harnessed and directed by science. Li Hung Chang is a progressive statesman, and he immediately set about modernizing the military and naval equipments of the nation. As is usual in such cases, he sought the shipyards of Great Britain, which have furnished war vessels to nearly all the lesser powers of the world. German dockyards were also patronized, and under the instruction of European naval officers the Celestial navy has not only increased in size and power, but has improved in discipline and efficiency.

As a result China now has a navy which, though it cannot be compared to the formidable fleets of France, would prove quite effective for defensive purposes, particularly in the shallow waters of the Chinese and Siamese coasts. There are now in active service 3 ironclads, 7 cruisers, 35 ironclad gunboats and 9 torpedo vessels of the modern types, besides about 100 other war vessels, many of which were built in Shanghai and Foo-Choo. The army also shows the influence of modern European discipline and in its full strength would number about 1,200,000 men. While China appears content to attend to her own affairs and manifests no present purpose to wage aggressive warfare, she is making active and intelligent use of her opportunities, and the day may yet come when the yellow flag will float defiantly in waters remote from the Celestial Kingdom.



GUSTAVE ROLIN JACQUEMIN.

Li Hung Chang, who has for many years been the power behind the Chinese throne, was born in the province of Anu-Huei Feb. 16, 1823. He was governor of the Thiang-Sin province in 1860 and assisted actively in the suppression of the Tæping rebellion. From that time he advanced rapidly in office until after the Tien-Tsin massacre in 1870, when he was deposed from power on the charge of failing to assist the general in command. Two years later he was restored to the office of grand chancellor and has since retained the royal favor.

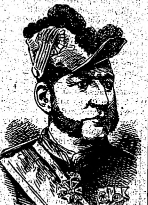
The defensive resources of Siam are insignificant compared with those of her northern ally. She has a standing army of 12,000 men, which might be augmented to 200,000 in an emergency. The military and naval establishments have for several years been in the charge of European drill masters, and a fair degree of efficiency has been attained. The navy consists of two screw steamers of 2,000 tons and eight guns each, a few gunboats in indifferent condition and a number of steam yachts.

Naturally enough the foreign affairs of the kingdom of Siam are under the direction of a foreigner, one Gustave Rolin Jacquemin, a Belgian by birth, a cosmopolitan by nature and a soldier of fortune by occupation. His career is curious and checkered. Educated for the bar, he developed a taste for politics and finally achieved the position of minister of the interior in the Belgian cabinet. Deposed from office by political reverses, he took up the study of international law and acquired some distinction in that specialty. Financial difficulties drove him from Belgium, and he went to Egypt, where he had a brief and unsatisfactory career as an international jurist. He then disappeared, and his European friends heard no more of him for several years, when he suddenly turned up as minister of foreign affairs at Bangkok.

Had it not been for the possibility of foreign interference and for the respect which is due to foreign commercial interests in Siam, France need not have made much ado over enforcing her claims on the peninsula. President Carnot has at his command one of the finest navies in the world and a military force that is well nigh invincible. In view of the ever imminent European war, it is interesting to note the warlike resources of France.

In 1891 the effective strength of the French army under colors was 508,686, with a gendarmerie of about 22,000 men. On a war footing the army numbers nearly 2,000,000 men, with 138,301 horses and 3,000 guns. At the same date the ironclad navy consisted of 186 vessels—40 ironclads, 49 cruisers, 41 dispatch boats and 6 gunboats—besides a large number of unarmored cruisers and troopships, with 1,927 officers and 37,933 men. The military and naval equipment is of the best, and of the discipline and courage of the French forces it is unnecessary to speak.

Rear Admiral Edgar Humann, in command of the French fleet before Bangkok, has 15 warships to enforce his demands. The flagship is the Triomphante, a single screw armored cruiser of 4,176 tons, carrying six nine inch and seven smaller guns. Then there are the Anamite, a transport; the Forfait, a wooden cruiser; the Inconstant, a single screw wooden dispatch vessel; the Alouette, a slow paddle dispatch boat, built of wood; the Lutin, Comete and Lion, single screw composite gun vessels; the Jacquin and Moulun, paddle gunboats, built of steel, and five steel twin screw gunboats, the Arquebuse, Caronade, Cimeterre, Estoc and Mutine.



ADMIRAL EDGAR HUMANN.

Admiral Humann was born in Paris in 1838 and has had a brilliant career in both the diplomatic and naval service. In 1887 he commanded the French fleet at Newfoundland and bore a conspicuous part in the settlement of the fisheries dispute with England in that year.

The English fleet in Asiatic waters is much more powerful than that of France and is particularly strong in small gunboats for river service.

It is a curious fact that France was the first European nation to establish diplomatic relations with the land of the white elephant. Louis XIV in the seventeenth century sent thither an embassador and received a Siamese embassy with great honors at Versailles. Louis sought to convert the king of Siam to Christianity. Unfortunately the present mission of the French in Bangkok is less philanthropic.

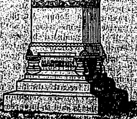
In Mrs. Harrison's Memory.

Ex-President Harrison has ordered a handsome monument to be erected in his family plot in Crown Hill cemetery, Indianapolis, where his wife is buried. The design has been chosen and the contract awarded, and the monument will be completed in a short time.

The design selected is one of a great number submitted for General Harrison's inspection and was especially prepared for him. The monument will be of Vermont granite, 10 feet in height, very massive and severely simple in outline. It will consist of four huge granite blocks, three of which will form the base to support a heavy granite die 4 feet square, with rounded corners. This will have a pyramidal top, and about it will be a carved astragal in bas-relief.



THE HARRISON MONUMENT.

The third or upper base will have handsome short columns at the corners, with carved capitals topped by a tasteful frieze. On the panel between the columns will be the name "Harrison" in large polished block letters. The monument will be erected in the center of General Harrison's plot and will be one of the handsomest in the cemetery [illegible] that marble in the whole [illegible]

THE CHARTREUSE PERES.

The Midnight Mass and the Rigid Life of This Silent Order.

I made a visit on the 16th and 17th inst. to the Convent La Grande Chartreuse, which lies off in the mountains south of Chambery and north of Grenoble. I staid all night in the convent and attended midnight mass. My bedroom (No. 18) was about half as big as that little bedroom you and I occupied at Jesi during our Italian trip, but more plainly furnished. As I couldn't sleep very well, I got up and went to mass at a quarter to 11, staid there nearly two hours and then went to bed at 2 a. m. At a few minutes before 11 the monks (peres, not freres) came filing in from their cells, each carrying a little lantern. Not one of them uttered a word for some time; then one of them made a slight noise as though with his knuckles on a desk, and the Latin chant of about four notes began and continued with slight interruptions for an hour and three-quarters. Then each relighted his little lantern, put out the light held in a little reflector on the breast to light up the book before him, and as silently as they came they went off to their cells.

There are 40 peres or pretres there and 44 freres. The peres are the more advanced, live in their cells from week's end to week's end, except for their church services at midnight and one meal together on Sundays and church holidays. These peres never speak to each other nor to any one whatever except when out on a promenade, which they take once a week. The freres do the business of the convent and are less restricted, though they never go outside of the 12 acre walled inclosure without permission. No woman is ever allowed to go inside of that walled inclosure except by written permission from the pope, and Queen Victoria was the last one having that permission.

My trip to this convent, through a beautiful mountainous country, and the last nine kilometers at the side of a mountain torrent, delighted me greatly. There was nothing but a mule path to this convent until 1854, and their idea of living "dans une solitude absolue" was well carried out for nearly 800 years. It is a strange idea of God and of the way to get to heaven that you should abandon the world and all its trials and duties so that you may please him and gain a happy hereafter. I used to call this bandbox virtue, but now I withdraw condemnation till I know their individual griefs and mental makeup.

It is at least better than suicide, for time is almost always curative, and reflection and study bring peace and mental equanimity. I will add that all the freres I met were pleasant, intelligent men, charging me moderately and treating me well, and when I left the convent between 8 and 9 in the morning a bright, intelligent brother guarding the outer door with a monster key said: "Bon jour, monsieur, et bon souvenir de la Grande Chartreuse," before he locked the door behind me.—Cor. Hartford Courant.

A Startling Contrast.

Two chorus girls came out of the stage door of Palmer's theater one evening. One was covered with satins and laces, and the diamonds which adorned her little pink ears made the electric lights ashamed of themselves. She slammed the old wooden door with a haughty air and waved a pretty white gloved hand. Her coachman was quick to see his signal, and a private victoria was soon beside the young woman. The driver got his orders in a low tone, and the carriage was whirled away. The other chorus girl was pale, thin and actually looked hungry. A cheap dress, evidently designed and made by its wearer, and a winter hat formed part of her costume. A bundle of sewing in her hand proved that she wasted no time between the acts.

While waiting for a car she counted the few pennies in her possession. She looked at an approaching car and at her bit of money, then resolved to walk. Manager E. E. Rice and a friend had been standing near the stage door. "What a remarkable contrast in the two pictures!" said the friend. "Both receive the same salary," explained the manager, as he shrugged his shoulders, "but it's the old story—the first one saves her money and the other doesn't."—New York Evening Sun.

Color and Nervous Diseases.

"The profession," says a specialist in nervous diseases, "has been interested in a mode of treatment recently tried in Italy for nervous disorders, in particular those allied with insanity. It is called the 'color treatment' and is merely the confining of patients in rooms where the walls are colored a certain tint, the light coming through glass of the same hue. Red, blue and violet are colors that have exercised a very perceptible and beneficial effect on disordered minds, especially violet. A raving patient suddenly put into a violet room became perfectly quiet at the end of an hour or two. The red rooms are said to have an excellent effect upon melancholia, brightening up the patients and making them almost cheerful."

Which at once opens a vista of furnishing possibilities that may be a part of the future housekeeper's curriculum.—New York Times.

A Lively Epitaph.

The most prominent paper at Tombstone, A. T., is called The Epitaph. It is edited by an Englishman named Coffin, and the name of its publisher is Sexton. It is said to be a pretty live paper, too, and rather singularly refuses to advertise undertakers, probably upon the principle that there are enough reminders of death connected with the paper.—Tampa (Fla.) Times.

Four California Mountains.

There are four famous mountains in Lower California, two of alum, one of alum and sulphur mixed, and one of pure sulphur. It is estimated that in the four mountains there are 100,000,000 tons of pure alum and 1,000,000 tons of sulphur.—St. Louis Republic.

Prof. Whittier is a graduate of one of the best ophthalmic colleges in the country; his diploma hangs in his office for the public's inspection. This coupled with fifteen years experience is convincing enough of his ability. The profession of optics is a special science, as denistry is, and should be so recognized. Prof. Whittier has the opinion that eyes are as precious as teeth, and yet many people would go long distances to consult a competent dentist, where for glasses they would patronize an ordinary peddler (calling himself an optician) that they never saw before and will never again. He will have rooms at the Palace hotel, Crookston, Minn., for one week commencing Monday August 14th.

A. D. Wishard, who was out on the St. Hilaire line Monday, reports a lively scrimmage between the trainmen and some farm hands who got on at Wylia. The conductor wanted to charge them the usual 10 cents extra for each ticket bought on the train, but the farmers wouldn't put up and had to be put off the train—hence the row.

Charlie Lauman was down from McIntosh last week. Charlie says: "They have put in another paper up there in hopes to run me out, but it only divides the small patronage the opposition has had and that is better for me. The more papers they put in for the purpose of crowding me out the better I shall like it. Hunt got out in good shape. He unloaded his old outfit upon the other fellows in great shape and I helped him plan it."

When Harry Norrie and family returned from the lake last week they found pandemonium reigning supreme. In some way or other the water-works business had got out of whack and let the water run all over the house till you could sail in a skiff most anywhere. Every carpet had to come up and a general house-cleaning time was inaugurated. Harry says no use to go out to Maple Lake when such things exist right at home.

J. McCaffrey, a prominent Lowell farmer has been all the summer looking for a boy to work on the farm, but it seems he has not cared to hire every boy that came along. On Tuesday morning of this week however, there arrived at his home a bright active lad weighing 14 pounds and McCaffrey at once decided to try and keep him though it is very little work the lad can do on the farm this summer—except, perhaps, to cradle some. By the way its the first child.

Sunday evening a couple of colored men, strangers in the city, while passing along the street near the N. P. depot, heard a little girl say to a companion "Oh, look at the nigger!" This enraged the colored men and they chased the little girls into the residence of W. L. Palmer, who came out to see what was the matter. The "niggers" then proposed to fight it out, and Palmer was about to argue the matter with a base ball club, when E. O. Flanders happened along and proposed take a hand in the scrap if the "black rascals didn't skip at once." They skipped.

George Truax left for Cleveland, Ohio, on Thursday last, where he expects to make his home in the future. Mr. Truax has been a Polk county citizen for many years and leaves many warm friends. He was a member of Col. Cobham Post—one of the kind who do not allow trifles to interfere with his regular attendance at the meetings, and his genial countenance will be missed there. Mr. Truax had much to contend with during his stay here, by the loss of his wife and several children, but always bore up with manly fortitude and has always striven to discharge his duties like a man in everything. He has secured a lucrative situation in Cleveland and the JOURNAL unites with his friends in the wish for a bright and prosperous future for him.

Robert Teal was in from Euclid last Friday. Says that harvest would be generally commenced up there this week. Rain badly needed.

Since the races Lachapelle's horse "P. J." has made a record of 2:40 and it is freely predicted that he will lower that to 2:30 before snow flies. You are right "he's a grand little horse."

Harvesting in barley was pretty generally commenced last week, and a few were cutting early wheat. Wheat harvesting will be pretty general this week. The hot weather seemed to rush the grain right along.

Jim Creighton has been nursing a finger for awhile. He went out shooting and shot it off. We have heard of people "shooting off their mouth" but this is the first case of shooting off a finger that has come under our notice. Pat Russell will have to look to his laurels.

A. J. Arnold is putting up a nice stock and hay barn on the farm of Aaron Cooke, in Fairfax. The barn will be 30x40, with 18ft. posts, will contain a good-sized hay-loft and have room for 12 horses and 15 cows and will have two or three box stalls in case of emergency.

A bunch of cigars reached this office last week with the compliments of P. J. Lachapelle "to help us celebrate the victory of P. J. on the turf, fair week." P. J. is a Crookston horse—born and raised in Crookston and Lachapelle justly feels proud to be the owner of such a valuable piece of horse flesh.

W. O. Wilson was rejoicing on Thursday last at the arrival of twins at his place—twin parrots. Wilson is the proudest man you ever saw and well he may be for those parrots are beauties for a fact and talk? Why the way they can talk suggests that they are nearer pirates than parrots—that is one of them for the other don't say much yet.

Phil. Porger and wife returned on Thursday morning from St. Paul where they had sold the cattle they intended to take to Chicago, so they gave up their trip to the World's Fair. Phil. bought a thoroughbred shorthorn bull calf of N. P. Clarke paying $125 spot cash for him and will take him out to Montana to surprise the natives. Phil. says he has made money out there but does not like it as a place to live and as soon as he can dispose of his interests there he will come back to Polk county to live.

Prof. Lugger was up to Stephen last week in response to a telegram stating that the army worm had appeared in great numbers and was destroying grain by the wholesale. Upon investigation the Prof. found the worm all right enough but found also that he was being exterminated by a parasite so rapidly that he told the farmers that the worms would all be dead in two or three days and before the Prof. left 95 per cent of the worms had been destroyed. He reported that very little actual damage had been sustained by the ravages of the worm.

Mark Murphy and his company of comedians will be seen here next Friday in "O'Dowd's Neighbors." There have been a good many farce companies launched upon a suspecting and unsuspecting public, but O'Dowd's Neighbors can take rank with any of them. It belongs to the same class as "Natural Gas", Evans and Hoey's "Parlor Match," John T. Kelley's "McFee of Dublin," etc. The principal characters of the piece do not intrude themselves too prominently, and the effect of a general vaudeville entertainment is sought, rather than any attempt to give a play with a story in which fun predominates.

E. J. Stilwell, of Wright, Barrett & Stilwell, spent the night in the city Wednesday last. He says: "It beats all how your city has improved since I was last here, about two years ago. Many substantial buildings have been built and other marked improvements. I always did predict for Crookston a bright and prosperous future and I see no reason to change my mind. Crookston has been a good business point ever since I knew it and it is bound to improve." Mr. S. returned to St. Paul on Thursday via St. Paul.

Nick Engel was in from Euclid on Monday, accompanied by his little boy that lost his leg in a mower a year ago. Nick says he finds in his wheat evidences of some kind of a grub working at the roots, that destroys the stalk and estimates from 25 to 30 per cent. loss from this cause. He says he believes one source of poor crops usually is found in the fact that farmers are not careful enough with their seed wheat. He [illegible] raise wheat for feed by garden growth and sow only large plump kernels. And he advises [illegible] the wheat in lime water [illegible] not ex-[illegible]

pect to see an average yield of more than six to eight bushels of wheat per acre in Polk county this year.

Tuesday morning the heated spell seemed to have exhausted itself and a cool wave arrived.

Rev. Mr. Billings of Ada and Rev. J. G. Smith of this city exchanged pulpits last Sunday.

Chris Eickholt and family spent the Sabbath at the farm of Julius Volker in the town of Fanny.

The extremely hot winds of Monday made farmers who have late wheat a little nervous.

Lots of hay coming to the market these days. Seems to be more than the demand requires.

The log-drivers are arriving in large squads. The Cleveland house is getting a big run of this trade.

Miss Maria Ralph of Red Lake Falls is visiting with her brother George in the city this week.

Mike Welsh who has been visiting his brother Bill in the city, left for Larimore on Monday morning.

The weather for the past week has been all right for haying, but rough on grain and potatoes. Too dry altogether.

Wm. Marin and L. H. Walker went out to Aaron Cooke's place on Monday morning to assist A. J. Arnold on the new barn.

The JOURNAL is informed that Jennie Carr, daughter of Comrade D. Carr, is ill at her home in Minneapolis with consumption.

W. L. Palmer received a letter from Minneapolis on Tuesday morning saying that his little daughter is very ill with typhoid fever.

The old familiar sound of the saw-mill whistle woke the echoes at 5:30 on Monday morning, announcing the fact that sawing was about to commence in good earnest.

D. S. Palmer, of Minneapolis, dropped in on his brother, W. L., on Sunday evening en route home from a trip west and left for home on Monday evening. The first time they had met in seven years.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. McKinnon's little girl, whose illness was mentioned in these columns last week, died on Sunday and was buried on Tuesday at 2 o'clock. The trouble is said to have been ulcers on the brain.

John Morris, aged 73 years, died at the residence of a son-in-law near Stephen, Marshall county, last Wednesday and was buried at Drayton, N. D. last Friday. He leaves a wife, six sons, Walter, Miles, Cyrus, William, Wesley and Allen, and three daughters, Mrs. Frank Creek, Mrs. M. Burnett and Mrs. Peter Squiers, to mourn his loss. Walter and Wesley went from Mentor to attend the funeral. Mr. Morris was an old resident of Polk county, where he lived seven or eight years, moving to Grafton and from there to Drayton. He was on a visit to his daughter at the time of his death.

The Duncan Clark female minstrel company appeared at the opera house on Friday and Saturday evenings of last week, playing to light attendance. The announcement "for men only" appeared on the bill boards on Saturday but did not prove a drawing card. The performances were exceedingly light and the costumes not as loud as some comic opera troupes indulge in. The troupe appeared very quiet and orderly but as actors and actresses did not excel the ordinary variety troupes.

On Saturday July 29th Miss Maggie Monroe, oldest daughter of John Monroe, was united for life to J. H. McArty of this city, at Grand Forks, N. D. Miss Monroe was a valued compositor in the JOURNAL office, has grown up from childhood in our city where, by her quiet, genial disposition she has won many friends who will unite with the JOURNAL in best wishes for her future happiness. Mr. McArty is one of Schmidt's best painters, an upright, sober, industrious young man, one of the kind to succeed. At present the happy couple are stopping at the Commercial hotel and, we are told, are contemplating removing from Crookston as soon as Mr. McArty's contract with Mr. Schmidt expires.

Read the ad of Prof. Whittier the optician in another column.

August George and wife drove down to Ada last week to visit with old friends in Norman County.

The Great Northern has put up a large derrick on the south end of the freight depot platform in this city.

Rev. J. G. Smith and family and the Rev. Mr. Billings, of Ada, went out to Maple Lake this week for an outing.

We have a few more extra copies of the JOURNAL containing a full account of the fair which we will close out at five cents each, cash to accompany order. We will mail copies for all who desire upon receipt of address, at the same price.

Court Stenographer Ben Strawbridge intended to take the train for Warren last week to enter upon his duties there but missed by a minute or so. Nothing daunted he mounted his bicycle and reached Warren in time for business when court opened. Nothing slow about Ben.

Judge Benson made a flying trip to Fergus Falls last Thursday night, and visited the hospital for insane. While there, the managing physician told him that old man Supernault, lately committed to the hospital was not insane, and never had been, and that he would probably be sent back to Crookston before long.

Oliver Wright of East Grand Forks was brought before Judge of Probate Benson last Thursday and by him sent to the hospital for insane at Fergus Falls. Mr Wright has been engaged as an engineer on the Northern Pacific railway for about thirteen years, and is said to have been deranged by the infidelity of his wife who deserted him lately.

Dr. Warninger informs the JOURNAL that our reporter was off a little in the statement last week that Ham Nut "has had a good deal of training lately." He says that the facts are that Ham Nut has had very little training and had only been tracked 10 days before the race came off. It is a fact patent to everybody that in Ham Nut the boys have got a great trotter, in a royal family and a horse that will make a record for himself. The time that he made on the grounds hitched to a heavy breaking cart speaks volumes for the colt. He has since beaten that record, in a trotting sulky and is in every way a speedy youngster. The JOURNAL is proud that Crookston has so fine an animal.

S. L. Collins: I think the coming wheat harvest will be a surprise party to some for I believe that the ravages of the army worm will be found to be more extensive than many suppose just now. In conversation with a farmer near Fisher he told me that up till within a day or so he thought he should have a grand crop of wheat but he had discovered that something had been working in his wheat, chewing the kernels like the army worm does. He had seen no signs of the worms and it was by chance that he noticed one head that looked peculiarly and upon examination he found several kernels chewed. A closer examination through his wheat brought to light the fact that something had been working extensively in his wheat, and, said he, there are lots of pieces like that in the county.

Mark Murphy and Sam J. Ryan, that irresistible team, are the chief fun makers. Miss Clara Thropp, called by many the "American Carmencita" is another shining light in this company. Selections are introduced from all the leading comic operas of the day by Miss Mamie Taylor and Jennie Murphy. The Butterfly dance from "La Cigale" will be introduced by the Misses Fording, Williams, Winton and Leigh, led by Miss Clara Thropp.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll and family occupied a box at the Bijou Theatre, New York, recently, during a performance of O'Dowd's Neighbors, and the Colonel is said to have remarked: "For nearly an hour I wondered where the promised musical novelties would come from. Suddenly the music changed, and like a flash of lighting came the slow, stirring strains of true opera. The very atmosphere seemed purified. Peal after peal of delightful sounds seemed to permeate all parts of the building, and like the welcome dew-drops of rain to the desert lost and parched lipped traveler, came the sextette from Lucia di Lammermoor, rendered by voices that must have been abducted from grand opera, for it is hard to believe that they came willingly into the comedy of O'Dowd's Neighbors. The effect was startling, but Oh, how delightful!" Seats now on sale.

Somebody took a horse from Sam Bearns' stables Monday night. No clue as yet.

Dr. M. Leguee was summoned to Fisher on Monday to attend to a sick horse.

Mrs. L. Arndt, of Fergus Falls, is visiting Mrs A. Rauch in this city.

Thos. Dyer, of East Grand Forks, was in the city on Thursday.

Jim Creighton has been appointed on the police force—probably because he is so good a marksman. Jim says the next shot he takes will be at a Dutchman.

P. J. Russell, A. C. Schmidt and Will Walker went up east of Euclid last week shooting ducks. They bagged a few less than 100.

Archie McKinnon is away off at the World's Fair where he expects to meet his wife who has been visiting friends in Canada for some time.

Will Hoch lost a valuable water spaniel this week. The dog got a foot cut off in a mower and had to be killed.

Frank Creamer: I don't claim to be able to thresh the whole of Polk county but I come pretty near having the machine that can. On Tuesday I sold two threshing-machines and on Wednesday I sold one.

The Red River Valley drainage commission held a meeting in St. Paul last week to organize. E. G. Valentine was made chairman and assistant secretary of State Sockenstrom, secretary. Valentine and Miller were instructed to look over the field and decide where the work will be commenced.

W. A. Campbell was in from Maple Bay on Tuesday. Says the hot winds of Monday were very trying for crops on sandy soil, especially for late sown grain.

Tollef Farden was in from Grover Park on Wednesday after twine. Said he intended to get to cutting wheat this week. Thinks crops will pan out all right. No chinch bugs, Hessian flies nor army worms out there.

Mr. Lange, who keeps a hotel near the Carman bridge, buried two children on Sunday. One, a child of three years, who died from typhoid fever, and the other a babe of only two months. The mother died a few weeks since of typhoid fever and there are several cases in the house.

Dandruff forms when the glands of the skin are weakened, and if neglected, baldness is sure to follow. Hall's Hair Renewer is the best preventive.

W. O. Wilson has been busy cleaning his windows this week. The Col. says it is because Wilson expects a visit from the governor of North Dakota and the governor of South Dakota at an early day. We reckon it is to allow the parrots a chance to look out on the street.

Dennis Ryan was down from Kittson county last week. He had with him some samples of wheat wherein the army worm had worked, showing their methods of operation. Some of the samples he had showed total destruction, while some were not as bad. He confirmed Prof. Lugger's statement in regard to the destruction of the worms by a parasite that kils them. He says however that the worms got in their work pretty well before the parasite got in his and much grain was destroyed.

J. Westernhagen, the secretary of a large investment company in Holland, and N. Jungeblut, the St. Paul agent of the company, were in the city Tuesday, and were taken in tow by August George, who explained to them the resources of the Red River valley and its advantages as a field for investment. These gentlemen have been over a large portion of the United States and they declare themselves better pleased with this section as a place for safe investments than any place they have visited, and will probably loan considerable money in the valley. They have already made one loan in this city.

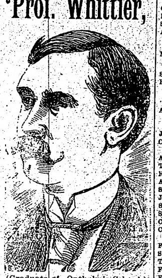
VISIT EXTENDED.

Prof. Whittier,



(Graduate of Opthalmic School.)

Scientific Optician,

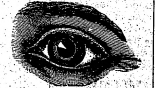
HAS EXTENDED HIS VISIT ANOTHER WEEK

AND WILL REMAIN AT THE THE PALACE HOTEL, UNTIL AND INCLUDING

Saturday, August 26th.

But on account of engagements ahead, will positively remain no longer.

Office hours from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m.



He can be consulted free of charge in regard to the adjustment of Spectacles and Eye Glasses.

SIGHT IS PRICELESS.

Do not persist in abusing it by ill-fitting glasses sold by incompetent dealers and quacks, but consult a qualified optician, and have your eyes scientifically tested and frames properly fitted to the face.

There is more injury done than people are aware of by improperly fitted glasses. Too strong, too weak, too narrow, too wide, too big, too little, poor glass, poorly made, ignorantly made, are a few of the most glaring faults. Daily does the result of this ignorance upon the part of the incompetent dealers in spectacles come before me in distressing cases of permanently impaired vision.

I am a graduate of leading opthalmic schools and have had 15 years of practical experience in the adjustment of glasses. I can give you better satisfaction than those who make the adjustment of glasses an adjunct to their profession. Eyes examined free of charge. Call on me and be convinced of my ability.

ARTIFICIAL EYES INSERTED WTIHOUT PAIN.

If you have lost an eye, by accident or disease, be sure to call on me and I will insert an artificial eye which will move and look like the natural eye and improve your looks.

Money on Chattels.

Lane's Medicine Moves the Bowels Each day. In order to be healthy this is necessary.

The success of Mrs. Annie M. Beam of McKeesport, Pennsylvania, in the treatment of diarrhœa in her children, will undoubtedly be of interest to many mothers. She says: "I spent several weeks in Johnstown, Pa., after the great flood, on accoun to fmy husband being employed there. We had several children with us, two of whom took the diarrhœa very badly, I got some of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy from Rev. Mr. Chapman. It cured both of them. I knew of several other cases where it was equally successful. I think it cannot be excelled and cheerfully recommend it." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace.

There is no excuse for any man to appear in society with a grizzly beard since the introduction of Buckingham's Dye which colors a black or brown.

For a lame back or for a pain in the side or chest, try saturating a peice of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and binding it onto the affected parts. This treatment will cure any ordinary case in one or two days. Pain Balm also cures rheumatism. 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace.

DISTRICT COURT.

The Calendar was Cleared Tuesday, and Nearly all the Cases were Decided.

E. C. Davis Wins His Suit Against the Waterworks Company—An Appeal Taken.

The Crookston Improvement Co. v. Anna L. Marshall Decided in Favor of Plaintiff.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON AUG. 9th.

The case of State of Minnesota vs E. L. Commings, (the celebrated East Grand Forks wheat case) which was tried before Judge Mills last December and defendant found guilty of grand larceny in the first degree, which decision was sustained by the supreme court of this state, was brought before the court and a stay till the 22nd inst. granted to allow defendent time to prepare motion for a new trial. The defendant is held under bonds.

Ten days stay of proceedings were granted in case of Dahl vs Johnson.

The case Ole J. Haaven vs Mrs. Brith Hoas, Messrs Ueland and Holt counsel for plaintiff and H. Steenerson counsel for defendant, was then called. Both parties are from McIntosh. The plaintiff brings suit to settle the question of rightful ownership of 40 acres of land in the village of McIntosh. In May 1888 one Ole Lee, at a sale of school lands in Crookston, bought the 40 acres in question. The plaintiff in this suit wanting the said land, and thinking he had a right to it by reason of of some previous arrangement with Lee, requested Lee to transfer it to him. This Lee refused to do. Haaven then told Lee that he wanted it for his poor widow sister with four children who was coming on to live at McIntosh and was in Crookston that day, Lee agreed to turn it over to Haaven's sister, Mrs. Brith Hoas, and thereupon made a deed conveying it to her. The school contract was made in her name, Haaven built on and improved the land; borrowing some two hundred dollars from his sister which it appears was used in making the improvement. Haaven married in '90 and soon thereafter he asked his sister to sign over this school contract to him. This she refused to. It seems that it was necessary for her to leave her brother after his marriage. The purchase in her name was unknown to her at the time of purchase. The property is worth about $1000 or $1500 now. The case was finished Thursday morning and will not be decided for sometime yet.

Another very important case was next called—that of Crookston Improvement Co. vs Anna L. Marshall et al. H. Steenerson for plaintiff and A. A. Miller for defendant.

During last summer the defendants Anna L. Marshall, Mrs. Munch and Mrs. Kelsey, through Mr. Munch bought some land from B. Sampson, the president of the Crookston Improvement Co., in Sampson's Woodland addition to Crookston, which was known as government lot 4 or Park Reservation. This land lies on the west side and in the bend of the river, opposite the brewery and contains about 11½ acres. The line line claimed by the defendants and the one established by U. S. Deputy Surveyor, George Ralph, comes west about 35 feet farther than that claimed by the plaintiff, and west of the eastern boundary of the platted portion of the addition, part of which platted portion had been deeded away by the Crookston Improvement Co. and has been built and improved upon by the purchasers. Plaintiff claims to have shown defendants where the old survey was (the eastern line of the platted portion) and defendants claimed he did not. The testimony is not very harmonious as to dates and certain conversation, but on the contrary is as opposite in some particular as the North and South poles. The case was finished Friday afternoon, but not decided. Attorneys are to submit briefs and it will be decided later.

The E. C. Davis vs Crookston Water Works Power & Light Co. case was decided Friday morning in favor of the plaintiff, allowing him the full amount of his claim, $7052.77 and interest thereon and costs and disbursements in the action. A stay of proceeding of 30 days was granted and the attorneys for defendant ordered the reporter to make out a transcript. It will be carried to the Supreme court.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

The case of A. J. Hellerud vs Hans Etham and Thos. Bjoin was taken up, Montague & Bucklen for plaintiff and H. Steenerson for defendant. This is an action on a mortgage foreclosure. The case was continued till Tuesday to allow plaintiff to get an important witness here to testify.

SATURDAY MORNING.

There was held a bar association meeting, to discuss and suggest amendments and revision of the court rules. On the 24th inst. there will be a meeting at St. Paul of the judges of the state and any changes desired in the rules of practice must come through them.

AFTERNOON.

The case of Johnson & Co. vs Vaule et al, was tried at the last general term and a verdict rendered for the defendant. This afternoon counsel for plaintiff moved for a new trial but motion was denied.

MONDAY MORNING.

Court convened at 9:30. A decision in favor of plaintiff was rendered in the case of Crookston Improvement Co. vs Anna L. Marshall et al. This decision takes from the defendants about 75 feet long what they claimed as the west line of the property they bought from the plaintiff. The plaintiff is allowed costs and disbursements in this action; and decree to correct the deed, conveying government lot 4 to the defendant to read all of said government lot 4 according to government survey except the platted portion thereof.

Defendants ask for stay of proceedings for 60 day. It is quite probable the case will be carried to the Supreme court.

Nils Muus vs H. Steenerson was settled by defendant paying the amount of the claim $13.20 without costs and appeal from justice court.

The case of J. W. Wheeler, as assignee of Sylvester & Finseth vs E. M. Walsh as grantor, Martin Finseth, Barbara Finseth and C. M. Benson, was next taken up.

It appears that on the day that Sylvester & Finseth made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors March 4th last, Martin Finseth had made a bond for a deed on two lots on the east side of Broadway upon which stand the warehouses and house and barn used by the firm, to his wife Barbara Finseth; and Barbara Finseth sold the same lots to C. M. Benson for $800 which $800 was paid her that day by check on Merchants National Bank of Crookston. It also appears that Mr. Finseth sold some land that belonged to his wife and used the money in carrying on the business of Sylvester & Finseth and promised her the lots referred to. The case was tried Monday and will be decided this week.

The case of A. M. Pratt & Co. vs George Vine was taken up. Appeal case from justice court. The decision of the justice court was in favor of the plaintiff. This decision was reversed with disbursements to be taxed.

The wind blew so hard against the court house this morning and made the windows rattle so it was with difficulty that one could hear what was going on, the afternoon session was held at court chambers.

The appeal case of Arne Olson vs Rasmus Johnson; the appeal was dismissed and the judgment of the lower court affirmed.

TUESDAY MORNING.

Court convened at chambers at 10 a. m.

The case of Atwater Hdwr. and Machine Co. vs J. D. Marshall, which was an appeal from justice court the appeal was dismissed and the judgment of the lower court affirmed.

Joe Davis who was found guilty at the May term of court of manning has forwarded the amount of his fine $50 and now goes a free man again.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

The case of Bonnet Nance Stove Co. vs J. W. Wheeler, assignee for Sylvester & Finseth was the next taken up. P. J. Russell counsel for plaintiff and E. M. Stanton for defendant.

Early last fall the firm of Sylvester & Finseth gave the plaintiff an order for a lot of stoves. The goods did not arrive at the time expected and the defendant notified the plaintiff that they would not accept them. Later they received the goods, stored them and sold some. On March 2nd two days before the assignment the representative of the plaintiff called on Sylvester & Finseth and wanted to arrange for the settlement of their claim so if an assignment was made they could get back their goods. Accordingly this representative marked the invoice of goods, "commission," to make it appear the goods were here on commission. The plaintiff then proceeded to replevin the goods mentioned. The value of the goods is $992.75.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The court handed in his decision this morning in the Bonnet Nance Stove Co. vs J. W. Wheeler case in favor of the defendant, allowing the goods taken under replevin by the plaintiff in case a return can be had, and if return can not be had judgment for the value of them $992.75.

The case of Michael Brouillette vs. Laurent Gonyea and Octave Gonyea which was tried at the May general term was decided in favor of plaintiff; allowing judgment against defendants for $40.50. This was a matter of digging a well by the plaintiff for the defendant.

The case of Wm. Kelly vs C. Christiansen and Hans Larson was then taken up. This is an action to recover some land purchased by the defendant under delinquent tax sale. The case will be decided this week. Adjourned till 2 p. m.

Laid Off.

Operator Ingraham, of the Great Northern depot in this city, Conductor Cooper, Engineer Klinger, and Brakeman Drew have all been laid off for violating a rule of the road. One night last week the operator had taken an order for an incoming freight, and had then gone to sleep. Before the train went out the brakeman went into the office, and took the message from the desk, instead of waking up the operator and getting the train dispatcher to O K the orders before they were given out. About an hour after the train was gone the operator woke up. In the meantime the dispatcher had decided to change the order and have the train meet another one at a different point, and was waiting for the operator to repeat the dispatch to him, which he was required to do before he gave it out. A collision might have been the result. But the trains met on a straight piece of road near Mallory, and a collision was averted. There is a great deal of red tape about the management of a railroad, and the employes sometimes become careless about seemingly needless regulations, but these rules and regulations are evidently necessary. Runnels succeeds Cooper, Mason takes Runnel's place, Steine gets Ingraham's job, and Moriarty succeeds Drew.

Upset the Management.

Last week as managers Columbus & Halvorson, of our opera house, was sailing Columbus' new boat on Maple Lake the craft upset without a moment's warning and the boys disappeared from view without even having a chance to get out dodgers announcing "positively our last appearance." Some of the boys saw the curtain ring down and hastened to the rescue and fished out two very wet managers, none the worse for the experience.

A Great Team.

East Grand Forks Review: Mr. W. D. Kelly says that if there were a few like Hugh Thompson and Alphabet Wyatt, Crookston would be a good place to live. That the success of the recent (Stock Show) fair was more to the united efforts of those two men than any other twenty men in the county.

Ask Your Friends

Who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla what they think of it, and the replies will be positive in its favor. One has been cured of indigestion and dyspepsia, another finds it indispensable for sick headache, others report remarkable cures of scrofula, salt rheum and other blood diseases, still others will tell you that it overcomes "that tired feeling," and so on. Truly, the best advertising which Hood's Sarsaparilla receives is the hearty endorsement of the army of friends it has won by its positive medicinal merit.

For Cash.

You can buy a half section of land handy to the city, about 300 acres in crop and looking nicely, at $20 per acre, or if you do not have all cash we will give you figures on application at the JOURNAL office. Owner desires to engage in other business and is prepared to give a great bargain. [14-tf]

CITY COUNCIL.

Official Proceedings of the Meeting of the City Council Held August 8th.

A Statement in Regard to the City Poor —The Great Northern Touched up a Little.

The Finance Committee Recommend the Strictest Economy During the Fiscal Year.

Proceedings of a regular meeting of the City council of the City of Crookston held in the city hall Tuesday evening August 8th, 1893.

Meeting called to order by President Cromb.

All members present.

Minutes of previous meeting read and approved.

The fire committee to whom was referred the matter of the bills from the Fire Department of W. Bloom and George Young reported that they were unable to meet with the chief of the department and so recommended that the bills be laid on the table until the money is received from the state, which will be by the next meeting of the council. Recommendation accepted and bills laid over.

Alderman Jennings reported, relating to the sidewalk on Maple street and asked for further time, which was granted.

To the president and members of the City Council, Crookston, Minn:

GENTLEMEN: Your committee on the poor of the city respectfully report as follows:

We find bills against this city, presented by Polk County officers, aggregating over $700.00 to January 1st, 1893. These bills are yet under investigation and your committee respectfully request further time to report thereon fully and finally.

The amount now paid directly, each month to the recipient, is as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. Durkee, $12.00; Mrs. Boyer, $10.00; Mrs. Supernault, Carman $10.00; and additional to this, there is Mrs. Nethland at county hospital, at rate of $1.00 per day, washing and bandages extra; also a charge (name not yet presented to existing committee) at the Ottawa house at rate of 50 cents per day, and in all probability Bazil Supernault, at present in the asylum at Fergus Falls, will shortly be returned here and again become a charge of the city.

Your committee would urgently call the attention of the council to the great expense of boarding city poor at the county hospital, and recommend some action be at once taken whereby the poor of the city can be properly boarded at a reasonable remuneration, instead of $1.00 per day and extras; and suggest the city rent or own a building for this purpose and we believe that the number of applicants for relief will be reduced by this means.

Respectfully submitted,
W. H. NORRIE,
I. N. SIMMONS,
FRANK JEROME.

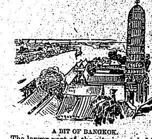
THE SIAMESE CAPITAL.

Bangkok a Very Unhealthy City For Europeans to Live In.

The trouble between France and Siam is the old and familiar one. The great and civilized nation which has long controlled the lower part of the peninsula and now owns all Anam wants more territory, and Siam refuses to give up the Me-Kong valley.

Bangkok is a very curious and interesting city of 500,000 inhabitants, 100,000 of whom live in houseboats on the river.



A BIT OF BANGKOK.

The larger part of the city is uninhabitable by Europeans on account of filth, especially during the dry season. The tide sets back far enough to make the river Menam brackish, and it is sluggish at all times, and for months together rotting carcasses and vegetation almost choke the current. The water is like pea soup in looks. Powdered alum is used to clear it, but even when it looks clear as mountain spring water it is often deadly to Europeans.

The natives drink it without clearing, and when a cholera season comes they die by tens of thousands. All the carrion birds of the vicinity flock to the city, but cannot devour the corpses that are tumbled out on the plain. Many times, says an authority, over a third of the people have died in a summer—say, 150,000 or 200,000—but they await their fate with the helpless apathy of Asiatics or the sullen torpor of despair. The wet monsoon ends the epidemic. The rain descends in such torrents as to almost strangle one exposed to it, the filth is washed away, the country laborers crowd in till the population is restored and all goes on as before.

Siam contains about 300,000 square miles, and intelligent explorers have pronounced it the richest section of earth by nature. The valleys may be called excessively fertile, and in the hills are timber and medicinal plants of immense value. Probably no other equal area in the world contains so great a variety of plants and animals, including reptiles, and the animals are usually the largest and most vigorous of their species. The common elephant of Siam is not equaled in any other country, but the so called white elephant is smaller. There are also deer, musk oxen, wild cattle of every kind, wild hogs, every variety of apes and monkeys, birds of almost every known species and of the most brilliant plumage, and reptiles in scores of species from the largest crocodiles to the little green lizard.

A list of the valuable plants would almost fill this column, and there are also rich lodes of various metals. For many years Siamese jealousy kept out all who would develop these riches, but King Khoulalonkorn I, who came to the throne in 1868, has encouraged the introduction of European methods.

THE SISTINE CHOIR.

Oldest and Most Peculiar Musical Organization In the World.

His Holiness Leo XIII has astonished the cardinals, and indeed all the Catholic world, by giving permission for the famous Sistine choir to come to the United States and sing at the World's fair. To realize how great a compliment to America this is it must be remembered that only twice in all its history has this choir sung outside of Rome, and both were cases of necessity, so to speak. One was when the pope had to retreat to Avignon, France, and the other was when Napoleon Bonaparte was crowned emperor.

A SISTINE CHORISTER.

The choir consists of 32 men, and for centuries its music has been composed by one of its own members. Its Italian title is Il Collegio dei Cuppillani Cantori della Capella Pontificia—that is, it is the pope's personal choir and only sings when he officiates at mass or on the death of a cardinal.

It is the oldest musical organization in the world, dating back to the fourth century, when Pope Sylvester set up a school for training the voices of boys. For a time all the churches in Rome were supplied from this school, and only the best were retained for the pope's choir. In the time of Gregory the Great the honor of membership was so highly regarded that persons of most noble birth contended eagerly for places, and many of the choir went to take charge of the music in the principal churches of other countries. After various changes the number in the choir was fixed at 32 in 1550 and has remained at that ever since.

That was during the short period that the famous Palestrina was master of the choir. He was the only married man who ever served in it, and was removed by Pope Paul IV for that reason. It was long thought very remarkable that such fine soprano voices were heard in this exclusive male choir, and many curious stories were told to account for it, but it is now known to have been the result of a special training begun in childhood. This system, known as the "arte fatte," is still in use in Spain, and voices thus trained retain their sweetness to extreme old age. Four years ago one member of this choir died at the age of 74, having retained the purity of his voice almost to the last, and two singers in the present choir are over 74.

A Great Public Library.

Any book you want, loaned to you, in city or country, anywhere in the United States, for as long or as short a time as you want it at an average cost of only one cent a day, is the offer of the American Co-operative Library, recently organized in New York. This undertaking, successfully carried out, will give book-readers everywhere better facilities than heretofore enjoyed outside of the reach of less than a dozen of the largest libraries in the principal cities. Books can be ordered either direct from New York through neighborhood Book Clubs or from country Postmasters, Newsdealers, Booksellers or others who will act as agents. A 160-page catalogue is sent free to any applicant enclosing a two-cent stamp; members of the Library are not limited to this, but may order any book in current literature suitable for general circulation. Any further information desired will be sent free on request. Address the American Co-operative Library, 57 Rose St., New York.

This is what the Marshall County Leader has to say of wheat raising in the Red River Valley:

The Verndale Journal says that this is probably the last season for wheat as the principal crop of that part of Minnesota. That corn is a success and farmers are turning to it. With the price of wheat below the cost of production wheat culture will certainly be curtailed very rapidly wherever other crops can be successfully grown. We seem forced to continue making wheat the principal crop here for a time at least.

The Minneapolis Journal says:

People who are complaining of the heat should take courage. Certain German scientists have sent word to the American Naval Hydrographic office that we can expect a winter of very severe cold. They base this prediction upon the knowledge that an unusually small amount of ice has been released from the polar regions, this condition influencing the temperature of the gulf stream to such a degree that we can expect few areas of low pressure in the remaining months of the summer and autumn, and this, according to deductions and conclusions that may be clear to the weather prophets, but which are mysterious to the layman, promises a cold winter. Then, presumably, people will complain all the harder. Let's enjoy the heat before it costs $9 a ton.

The farm and dairy exhibits at the Minneapolis Exposition this year, is a new feature. Hitherto the State Fair has had all the exhibits of that nature; but as the fair is to be abandoned for this year, the Exposition is glad to take the charge of these very interesting displays. $7,000 is the value of premiums, and no doubt the Northwestern farming land will prove by its products, to visitors from a distance, that for richness and variety it is nowhere excelled. The interest in this department is very general, and judging from the present outlook, there will be a very attractive display. Our readers should not fail to visit the Exposition this year.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, ontana Michigan, and in fact, from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them! A DESOLATE SCENE.

AN INDIAN VILLAGE DEPOPULATED BY A MAN EATING TIGER.

The Inhabitants of a Native Village Driven From Their Homes by the Ferocious Daring of a Bold and Bloodthirsty Ruler of the Jungles.

As the party of a sahib one Indian evening came down the hillside by the widening path to the jungle village, no sound whatever arose from its few and humble habitations. Nobody came out to make salutation or to offer supplies. No cattle were perceived wandering about, no children, no birds, except indeed many vultures upon the tree in the square and upon the temple roof. The pots in the grain dealer's shop were empty and overturned; a piece of cloth just begun was left with broken threads upon the loom in the next hut. On the other side of the way the chatties at a potter's were tumbled and broken, and a sheet of copper lay at the blacksmith's forge half bent to make some vessel, but precipitately abandoned. Wherever one gazed there were signs of a hasty flight on the part of the inhabitants, who did not seem to have left anybody to represent them.

Yes, there was one silent and melancholy representative, and the sudden appearance of her would have startled the party very much more than it did but for a discovery made by the sahib's ghorawallah—the groom—close by the silent and empty temple. There was a muddy patch there in the square, from which the last of the rainwater had but recently dried up, and in the black slime so left were deeply imprinted the "puds" of an evidently immense tiger. It was of course evident now to the Englishman and those with him that the striped terror which left those footmarks had given the villagers notice to quit and was somewhere or other near at hand in practical possession of the fee simple of the village.

Desolate beyond expression was the little unpeopled "place" of the hamlet, and the look of the helpless red god staring from his portico upon the huts that he could not protect, and the excitement of the horrible vultures perched on the cotton trees, aware, no doubt, of the deadly secret of the place, for round the corner, by the dyer's shop, where two or three newly stained turban cloths still hung upon walls to dry, they came upon that secret. Across the threshold of a mud hut, evidently dragged off from the broken charpoy on the earthen floor, lay the body of a woman, torn on the delicate brown neck and along the shoulders and breast with long red claw marks. A dead infant, also mangled by a savage bite, lay half concealed under the corpse, the appearance of the bodies showing that they had only been lately killed. No one could doubt what had killed them. The sign manual upon their bodies was surely that of the royal beast who often in this way disputes the right of his human rival in India and roars to scorn the illusion that man is master of created things.

The sahib's party was badly equipped for tiger shooting and passed not without anxiety and the closing up of the three or four servants and coolies through the outskirts of the evicted village. At any moment her ladyship the tigress or his lordship the tiger, who had taken possession of the place, might emerge from a grain store or a cow pen, or even from some milk bush or jowari patch, to ask the travelers what business they had upon the royal property. The Englishman hastily put bullets into both barrels of his shotgun and walked his horse as quickly as his men could follow out of the ill fated gaum.

At its outskirts they were astonished to hear a voice high above their heads which came, as they afterward found, from a young Hindoo low caste man sitting concealed in the branches of a large mango tree from which could be seen both entrances of the village. He had made a rude platform in a fork of the tree and watched on it with the long barrel of a matchlock protruding and by his side an earthen jar of water. They invited him to come down and to tell them the meaning of the extraordinary spectacle they had witnessed. He descended and informed them that for months past his village had been infested and persecuted by a tigress which, after killing cattle and goats, had slain and partly eaten three or four children outside the hamlet and had taken during the past eight or nine days to entering the village at night and carrying off somebody or other sleeping, as the Hindoos do, outside their huts under the verandas. The woman slain that morning with her baby was the wife of the poor matchlock man, and he had perched himself in the tree hoping to avenge her death when the sahib's party passed.

It was too serious a case not to be reported in the proper quarters, and an expedition of practiced tiger shooters was equipped among the officers at the nearest station. The beast was tracked and was killed after receiving 11 bullets, and then it turned out that she had a half grown cub which had lost a limb, and thus the maternal affection of the ferocious parent had driven it to these desperate ways. Indeed the spectacle of that village was full of philosophical suggestiveness. The dead human mother had been slain by reason of the very same instinct which had made her seek in vain to preserve her child from the attack of the tigress, driven to its wit's ends to find food for its own helpless offspring. The tigress was in her way as tender a parent as the loving mother whom she murdered, and then besides there was the whole village depopulated to make one wonder what sort of a world it would have been, if, as might well have happened, tigers had evolved as masters of the globe instead of men.—Edwin Arnold in London Telegraph.

China makes a poor show in the journalistic world. For all its 400,000,000 inhabitants it has only 24 newspapers, 10 of which are daily, and 14 appear at longer intervals.

THE LITTLE DOG UNDER THE WAGON.

"Come, wife," said good old Farmer Gray,
"Put on your things, 'tis market day,
And we'll be off to the nearest town,
There and back ere the sun goes down.
Spot? No; we'll leave old Spot behind."
But Spot he barked, and Spot he whined,
And soon made up his doggish mind
To follow under the wagon.

Away they went at a good round pace,
And joy came into the farmer's face.
"Poor Spot," said he, "did want to come,
But I'm awful glad he's left at home.
He'll guard the barn and guard the cot
And keep the cattle out of the lot."
"I'm not so sure of that," thought Spot.
The little dog under the wagon.

The farmer all his produce sold
And got his pay in yellow gold,
Then started homeward after dark,
Home through the lonely forest. Hark!
A robber springs from behind a tree—
"Your money or else your life," says he.
The moon was up, but he didn't see
The little dog under the wagon.

Spot ne'er barked, and Spot ne'er whined,
But quickly caught the thief behind.
He dragged him down in the mire and dirt
And tore his coat and tore his shirt,
Then held him fast on the miry ground.
The robber uttered not a sound
While his hands and feet the farmer bound
And tumbled him into the wagon.

So Spot he saved the farmer's life,
The farmer's money, the farmer's wife,
And now a hero grand and gay
A silver collar he wears today.
Among his friends, among his foes,
And everywhere his master goes,
He follows on his horny toes.
The little dog under the wagon.

Long's Railway Safety Clock.

Peter Long of Greensburg, Pa., is the patentee of one of the most useful railway appliances of the age—a railway signal time clock which accurately indicates the time intervening between the passage of trains. It is mounted similarly to a danger signal, and the engineer can readily tell by simply glancing at the dials the length of time which has elapsed since the preceding train passed that point. The clock runs regularly and indicates the hours and minutes just as an ordinary timepiece does, but an ingenious device and the time marking apparatus throws the minute hand back to 12 at the time of the passing of each train. Then the hand moves forward in the regular way until the next train thunders past, when it is again thrown back to 12.

Should any one train not be followed by another for an hour or a longer period, then the minute hand will stop at 55 minutes and remain there until a passing train again throws it back to 12, where it will again begin its 55 minute journey. The purpose of having the hand stop at 55 minutes is to show that at least that time has elapsed since a train has passed that way, which is amply sufficient to indicate "clear track."—St. Louis Republic.

A Wicked American Abroad.

I was once in a village on the Welsh coast. The Welsh, I have been informed, are a sober people, and so some of them may be. A certain wicked traveler chanced to come that way. According to his own account he had "struck oil" in the western states of America—and, possibly, he had "struck" some peculiar notions too. For a whole week he "stood Sam" at the local hostelry to everybody who chose to come and drink.

For a whole week every soul in the place, to all intents and purposes, was drunk—all the men, many of the women and some of the children. The occasion offered, and they rose to it. They had never before enjoyed themselves so much in their lives—that being their idea of enjoyment. No doubt to this hour many of those amusement seekers look back to that week as being the most amusing week they ever spent.—All the Year Round.

Patience With Eccentricity.

Many of the leading people in English society regarded Thomas Carlyle with a feeling almost akin to reverent delight when he chose to behave like an ignorant boor in their drawing rooms, even taking his seat, it is said, unbidden in the presence of the queen. This generation, however, has little patience with such eccentricities.

It was an English bishop that is still living who, when the historian Freeman had worn out his patience with his rudeness, introduced him to a waiting audience as "the distinguished scholar that so admirably describes and illustrates the savagery of our ancestors."—Youth's Companion.

Chemical Effects of Lightning.

Lightning works chemically. It has the power of developing a peculiar odor, which has been variously compared to that of phosphorus, nitrous gas and most frequently burning sulphur. Wafen mentions a storm on the isthmus of Darien which diffused such a sulphurous stench through the atmosphere that he and his marauding companions could scarcely breathe, particularly when they plunged into the wood.—Chambers' Journal.

Lace Industry In Ireland.

The development of the lace industry in Ireland has been a great boon to the impoverished people. In embroidery alone 12,000 girls are employed and 1,065,000 dozen handkerchiefs were sent last year to the American market.—New York Sun.

It is remarkable how virtuous and generously disposed every one is at a play. We uniformly applaud what is right and condemn what is wrong when it costs us nothing but the sentiment.—Hazlitt.

"Do not weep for me nor waste your time in fruitless prayers for my recovery, but pray rather for the salvation of my soul," were the last words of Isabella of Aragon.

COMMENCEMENT.

The Pretty Custom Observed by College Graduates Each Year.

Commencement is like spring in that it is new each year and that familiarity with it breeds only increased appreciation. It grows on the participator as his years accrue. It is a good day for the hopeful youths who graduate and march at the head of the line. It will seem good to them next year, when they come back after a 12 months' separation and hobnob with one another over their class punch and presently get in line at the very tail end of the procession, so far off from the band that they can scarcely catch the music. But in 10 years' time, when they have moved up 10 places nearer to the band, they will find it dearer still. Then it will have begun to assume its true properties, as the day of all the year that brings back the youth that is already slipping from them, by taking them back to the scenes of their untrammeled adolescence and rubbing them up against the men who were young with them when they were young.

Life brings great prizes to the diligent and the lucky. To the average college graduate of 15 years' standing it has brought a wife and children, a certain foothold in the world and a definite prospect of respectable achievement. But it is better at bestowal than at replenishment. It brings him new things, but it does not fit him out with fresh supplies of the treasures that he had. There is only one set of the men who were young when he was young, and it cannot be duplicated.

If he is wise, and the cockles round his heart do not get too stiff, he is very careful of that dwindling set of associates, and the fewer there are of them, and the more he realizes the impossibility of replacing them, the greater pains he takes to go back to commencement and take account of stock.

A strangely impressive spectacle is the forming of the line of graduates that marches to the commencement dinner of an old college. First comes the graduating class, then the alumni by classes in order of seniority. "Class of 1820!" cries the marshal. Perhaps there is no response. "Class of 1821! Class of 1822! Class of 1823!" Presently, as his class is reached, the oldest graduate present steps out, a venerable man, perhaps the sole representative of his year, and takes his place amid the cheers of the spectators. Then for a dozen or a score of classes as the marshal calls the year one or two or four or five old men walk out, arm in arm, supporting one another's steps. Then as the list gets into the forties come gray haired men, but vigorous and not yet of the lean and slippered period. And then in larger companies the men of middle age and then the younger men, and finally a boisterous crowd 200 strong of lusty youth who cheer for "'92." A marvelously vivid panorama of human life is the commencement procession from "Morituri salutamus" at one end to "Life let us cherish" at the other. Dull must be the spirit that is not stirred by it. And yet it is a cheering sight with all its pathos, so much good fellowship it shows and sympathy and joyous greeting when old companions meet.—Harper's Weekly.

Mind Your Own Business.

An old custom once prevailed in a remote place of giving a clock to any one who would truthfully swear that he had minded his own business alone for a year and a day and had not meddled with his neighbors. Many came, but few, if any, gained the prize, which was more difficult to win than the Dunmow flitch of bacon. Though they swore on the four gospels and held out their hands in certain hope, some hitch was sure to be found somewhere, and for all their asseverations the clock remained stationary on the shelf, no one being able to prove his absolute immunity from uncalled for interference in things not in any way concerning himself.

At last a young man came with a perfectly clean record, and the clock seemed as if it was at last about to change owners. Then said the custodian, "Oh, a young man was here yesterday and made mighty sure he was going to have the clock, but he didn't." "And why didn't he get it?" "What's that to you?" snapped the custodian. "That's not your business, and—you don't get the clock."—Home Journal.

Treatment of the Wrists.

Very few people know the importance of keeping the wrists cool in warm weather. Actors and actresses tell you that if one of their number faints they pour cold water on their wrists. Athletes engaged in the performance of feats of endurance know that in winter the wrists must be kept warm and in summer cool, but the general public still continues to wear tight gloves and heavy cuffs in the dog days, and then wonder why it is hot.

Taking off one's gloves (especially in church) often makes quite an amazing difference in temperature. Tight sleeves above all things make the wearer hot in oppressive weather; delicate girls have been known to faint from this cause alone.—Exchange.

What Botanists Do Not Know.

How water, commonly called sap, necessary to the life of a tree, passes from the roots to the topmost leaf and evaporates is a problem not yet solved by botanists. It is known that the ascent is made chiefly in cavities in the sapwood only, the heart and bark serving other purposes. That is the extent of our knowledge of the matter. Beyond is mere conjecture, and every theory yet advanced has failed to stand the test of experiment.—Exchange.

Consideration In a Silver Mine.

"It is very astonishing," said a gentleman whose business frequently requires long journeys into the interior of the country, "how many examples of innate refinement of feeling one comes across among the roughest of men. A year or two ago I had a survey to make of some land belonging to one of the largest silver mines in —— territory. I had taken my wife with me, and Mr. ——, the superintendent, was most kind in showing and explaining everything to her. One morning we were all standing near a shaft, listening with great interest to his explanations concerning prospects, veins of ore, values and estimates, when suddenly we heard some confused sounds of falling, followed by various exclamations and, we thought, groans.

"'What is the matter?' exclaimed my wife as the cage came up and a big, sturdy fellow stepped out. 'Nothing much, lady,' he answered, and he whispered something to the superintendent, who turned to us with an expression of great concern on his face. 'One of the men who is working below has had a bad fall,' he said, 'his shoulder is dislocated and they fear his leg is broken. Why do they not bring him up at once?' he continued, addressing the great, brawny, red shirted miner who had brought the news.

"'Tom was afraid of frightening the lady, and wanted me to come first,' he answered."—New York Tribune.

What's In a Name?

From the extraordinary inscriptions over the doorways and on the vestibule glass of the apartment houses in the upper sections of the city it would appear that the owners and builders of these are driven to their wits' end to provide striking names for their houses. They remind one of the endless rows of "villas" with romantic names one sees in the suburbs of London. Only the London affair consists chiefly of name and is usually proportionately significant inversely with the grandeur of its appellation. Here it may be a first class apartment house at expensive rentals, a mere flat house for people in ordinary circumstances or a tenement for poor laboring families.

The most fantastic, poetical, historical, geographical, bibliographical and even musical and scientific names are adopted; but you'll find when you come to flat hunting that there is nothing in a name. In some instances the builder has vaingloriously given the building his own name and left it to serve as a practical tombstone to register an existence on earth. But experience has demonstrated that "The Crowley," or "The Boxwood" and that ilk do not draw like "The Moselle," or "The Amsterdam," or "The Paderewski" and so on. Sentimental people will demand something for their money.—New York Herald.

His First Thought.

Fowling is now very little practiced in the Shetland islands, although many eggs are secured annually. Many thrilling stories of fowling adventure are told by the Shetlanders. A man who had undertaken to climb a certain steep cliff was neither very experienced nor very brave, although he boasted of being both. He pushed upward, however, briskly without looking behind until he had got up about 150 feet, when he stopped to breathe. The pause was fatal to his self possession, and he called out in tones of terror, "Men, men, I am going—I am going." But he still held on for a little, and it was not till he had shrieked many times "I am going" that he did fall headlong.

His comrades, having thus been warned, moved the boat out of the way, so that the poor fellow came sheer down into the deep water. Mighty was the plunge, but at length he rose to the surface, when of course he was instantly caught hold of and dragged into the boat. After many gasps and much spluttering of sea water from his mouth, his only remark was, "Eh, men, this is a sad story—I have lost my snuffbox."—"Sketches and Tales of Shetland."

Spare Moments.

Work is good. No one seriously doubts this truth. But work is not the only good thing in this world. It is not a fetich to be adored, neither is it to be judged, like a sum in addition, by its outward and immediate results. Dr. Johnson had scant sympathy with inconsistent and arrogant industry. "No man, sir, is obliged to do as much as he can. A man should have part of his life to himself." Leisure has a value of its own. It is not a mere handmaid of labor, it is something we should know how to cultivate, to use and to enjoy. It has a distinct and honorable place wherever nations are released from their first rude needs, their first homely toil and rise to happier levels of grace and intellectual repose. "The success of any society worth considering is to be estimated largely by the use to which its fortunate put their spare moments."—Agnes Repplier in Scribner's.

How Not to Grow Old.

The Spanish wit and philosopher, Quevedo, who in his time gained a reputation for knowing everything, was asked if he knew of a means whereby a person could avoid growing old. "Most certainly," said he; "I know of certain rules which will surely prevent you growing old."

"What are they?"

"Keep in the sun in summer and in the wet in winter; that is one rule. Never give yourself rest; that is another. Fret at everything that happens; that is another. And then if you take care always to eat meat cold and drink plenty of cold water when you are hot, you may be perfectly sure that you will never grow old!"—London Tit-Bits.

Antiquity of the Fan.

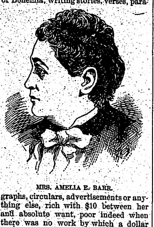
The antiquity of the fan in the east, particularly in Asia, extends far back beyond the possibility of ascertaining its date. In China and India the original model of the fan was the wing of a bird, and at one time was part of the emblems of imperial authority.—Washington Star.

SHE WRITES POPULAR NOVELS.

Amelia E. Barr's Own Life Story Makes Very Interesting Reading.

Remarkably interesting reading now is the story of the career of Amelia E. Barr, the novelist, though time was when it must have seemed doubtful to her if there was anything noteworthy in the life before her. That was when she began the struggle of supporting herself and her three fatherless daughters by literary work. She was 35 years old when she was widowed and impoverished by the yellow fever epidemic in Texas in 1867, far beyond the age when most successful authors begin training for their work. But she was brave and went from Galveston to New York equipped only with a letter to Robert Bonner, and her determination to succeed.

Mr. [illegible] gave her a chance, and she was soon treading the precarious paths of Bohemia, writing stories, verses, paragraphs, circulars, advertisements or anything else, rich with $10 between her and absolute want, poor indeed when there was no work by which a dollar could be made. When her first serial was published, the strain was over, and with the appearance of "Jan Vedder's Wife" prosperity was secure. Since then her work has been in constant demand, and she has made a liberal fortune.



MRS. AMELIA E. BARR.

Now she has a pleasant home at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, and people seek her out and make much of her. A bevy of Vassar girls, for instance, tramped over the hills one day just after "The Bow of Orange Ribbon" was published to beg some bits of the pencils with which it was written, of which they made souvenir brooches. Other lion hunters, too, stop at Cherry Croft, which is what Mrs. Barr calls her place, and sometimes crowds of picnickers stop before its gates and cheer its mistress.

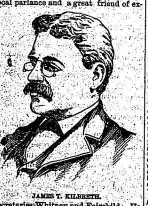
Mrs. Barr is still a tireless and systematic worker despite her 61 years. She rises at dawn the year round, and after breakfasting works in her study till noon, when she dines. After dinner the morning's work, always done in pencil, is typewritten. Mrs. Barr's study is a large, plainly furnished room without a carpet, and she writes standing at a high desk set in a deep window, from which she has a beautiful view of 40 miles or more of the Hudson.

NEW YORK'S NEW COLLECTOR.

He Has Had a Training of Twenty Years In New York Politics.

The position of collector of customs for the port of New York, to which James T. Kilbreth was recently appointed, is an important one in its dignity, emoluments and patronage. The salary is $12,000, and the business of the office every year runs into the millions. It was a fight over an appointment to this office that led to the resignation of Roscoe Conkling from the United States senate.

Mr. Kilbreth has long been prominent in New York politics. He was a county Democrat and an "antisnapper" in the local parlance and a great friend of ex-Secretaries Whitney and Fairchild. He was appointed police justice by Mayor Havemeyer in 1878 and held the office for nearly 20 years, making way for his successor only last year. He resigned in January, 1888, when he had still 11 months to serve, in order that Mayor Edson might reappoint him for a full term.



JAMES T. KILBRETH.

As a police justice Mr. Kilbreth earned the reputation of being among the ablest men who ever served New York city in that capacity. He vigorously opposed a bill permitting police justices to practice law which was introduced in the legislature during the session of 1892. He claimed that the permission granted by the bill could not fail to impair the usefulness of the justices, and that the salary of $8,000 a year was quite sufficient to justify their giving their whole time to the city.

Mr. Kilbreth is a native of Cincinnati and about 55 years of age. He comes of an old Kentucky family, and his father is a man of wealth and position in Ohio. The new collector went to New York to practice his profession after graduating at Harvard university and law school. He was a school trustee in the Eighteenth ward for two years and judge advocate on the staff of Brigadier General Varien of the New York national guard. His wife was the widow of Lucien Oudin, and Eugene Oudin, the tenor, who made a hit at Covent Garden, London, is his stepson.

IT is again rumored that the Northern Pacific has gone into the hands of a receiver. This rumor gets around regularly about once a month.

THE laboring men were promised "good old democratic wages" if Cleveland was elected. Well, they seem to be getting it—a dollar a day in harvest. How do they like the change from two fifty per day?

Do you remember the democratic slogan of last fall? "Vote for Cleveland and dollar wheat." Well, enough voted for Cleveland to elect him but seemed to forget to vote for dollar wheat.

FROM present appearances the country has little to expect in the way of relief from a democratic congress. If Grover had a republican senate and house behind him something might be done but we will have to wait a whole year for that—till the next election.

OWING to the scarcity of currency Buffalo manufacturers are issuing certified checks for small amounts to their employes—said checks to be payable in 60 or 90 days. The scheme seems to work all right, but the probabilities are that if it was to become general, the expert counterfeiter would do a land office business.

Sauk Rapids Sentinel: "The President says most emphatically, that there must be no monkeying with the tariff until the financial business is disposed of."

So? And it was not so long since that Grover Cleveland assured the people that the tariff was the chief cause of all our woes—assured us that if he was elected president he would at once proceed to correct that crying evil with a tariff for revenue only. But in the light of a "financial crisis," brought about by that very prospect of "monkeying with the tariff" the tariff suddenly becomes of secondary importance and was not such a crying evil after all.

Fosston Thirteen Towns: The POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, of Crookston, speaks in flattering terms of the general appearance of the Fosston Cornet Band on the occasion of its visit to that city two weeks ago. This is not, however, the only good thing worth mentioning by any means. The account of the Fair which is given in the JOURNAL is not to be surpassed, and would attract attention to any paper, the way it is so interestingly written and attractively arranged.

This is what Frank Barnum of the Sauk Center Avalanche has to say of us:

That excellent paper, the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, devotes about twelve columns of its last issue to the Polk County fair recently held in Crookston. The publishers, Messrs. Cooke & Hammond, are energetic business men, and in their exhaustive write up of the fair they attest their appreciation of what will interest the farmers.

The Midway News somewhat sarcastically remarks:

The fact that the board of Railroad and warehouse commissioners have been sued to head off the farmer's elevator at Duluth must not be allowed to drive our farmers to burn their wheat crop. The elevator will be built. Donnelly is on top, this time, and Jim Hill is at the bottom, and when top and bottom are solidly united, it goes. A $200,000 elevator at a point where Mr. Hill's lake vessels meet Mr. Hill's railroad, without a cent of cost, is not a bad thing: Of course the state will own it. But wonder if the state would not like to own a state paper as well as a state elevator? If so, we would like to have it, put in half a dozen linotypes and a web press at Merriam Park. We would agree to let Donnelly write the editorials provided we were permitted to manage the advertising department. Oh, the state elevator will be built; don't be afraid.

Be sure and put a box of Ayer's Pills in your satchel before traveling, either by land or sea. You will find them convenient, efficacious and safe. The best remedy for costiveness, indigestion, and sick headache and adapted to any climate.

Northwest Wheat Crop.

THE SECOND EPISTLE.

Rev. J. G. Smith Again Takes up the "United Church" Question.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—In a previous article the statement was made that owing to the divided condition of the "Church of Crookston" the real spirit of Christ was not being allowed a complete expression in our fair city. The churches bring to mind sectarian rivalry rather than a pure Christianity. This statement has been adversely criticised as being pessimistic. We deny the charge of pessimism. Pessimism is hopeless. But the cause of Christ and pure Christianity is not hopeless from our point of view. The physican is not a pessimist when he makes a careful diagnosis of a case in order that he may prescribe a remedy. The physician must recognize the sickness that he may cure it. He could not cure it by denying it. There is nothing gained by ignoring the facts. The writer sees no good reason why the facts in reference to religion or the church should be suppressed. We have a feeling that it is well to be honest, and to be honest in reference to the church. We do not hold one opinion for private use and another for public display.

The church is a sacred institution, only when it reveals the Christ spirit to men. The indwelling Christ makes the church holy—sacred. When the church degenerates into sectarianism it is no more sacred than a political club or business corporation. The church must be pure if it would escape criticism. We are not pessimistic in reference to the cause of Christ in the "Church of Crookston." If we were we should not take the trouble to criticise. If it were a hopeless task we should not undertake it.

We believe there is enough Christianity in the churches and people of Crookston to throw off the incubus of sectarian pride and come together in the name of Christ. We only diagnose the case that we may propose a remedy. There are we believe, a good many knees that when the time of decision comes, will not bow to the Baal of denominationalism instead of Christ. We are not hopeless, therefore we speak. There are many people who are Christian first, and Methodist or Presbyterian or Episcopalian or Baptist or Congregationalist second; because we believe this, we are not pessimists. The pessimist is the man who says, "yes it is wrong and wicked for people to divide up the forces that make for righteousness and Christianity till all are weak, but there is nothing we can do. Men will not cease their theological hair-splitting long long enough to do any real service for men in applying gospel principles to life and to the practical needs of the community."

But to come to the point. If we want to have union we shall need first to recognize the points of separation and then consider how these differences may be reconciled. We may be assured that charity and gumption will reconcile all differences. There are only four things which separate the five English speaking churches in Crookston. There may be other slight differences but the ones that separate are (1) methods of administering the sacraments; (2) Liturgy, (3) Church government, (4) Church property.

1. In reference to the sacraments, Christian liberty of conscience will allow each man to choose for himself the method of the initiatory rite. The question of communion can easily be settled as it was in the apostolic church, when there is the same readiness to follow the Spirit of Christ. Those who have received "the like gift" will be accounted brethren in fellowship. The vision which Peter received has a lesson, also for this generation (See Acts 11:14 and the whole 10th and 11th of Acts.)

2. Those churches which have no liturgy or a very brief service could with profit enrich their worship by the addition of responsive readings and chants. A united church would be able to command the best musical ability of the city to assist in the worship.

3. When we come to church government we have a more difficult problem to solve. Polity is the chief thing that separates four of our churches at present. But after all it will be found, if one looks more closely, that the difference is in name and in theory rather than in practice. The work done by the session or board of elders or stewards or wardens or trustees or deacons, is practically the same. It is a business necessity in all large corporations to have a board of directors to look after the details of management. It is necessary in a well organized church to have a board of directors to manage its affairs. The writer does not [illegible] ence whether the individual members of the board were called elders or stewards or wardens or deacons or superintendents or what not. The only requisite would be that they are wise and able men who love the kingdom of Christ, and seek the good of the people. The obvious way out of the church government difficulty, in case of a union, then is to use our common business sense and appoint a board of directors to manage the affairs of the church and provide for a referendum to the church in cases of great importance.

4. As to the properties a united church could use all the present buildings to advantage. In order to accomplish the things mentioned in the previous articles much more room than ordinary church building contain would be needed and these buildings could be utilized to provide for this need. We can safely trust the financial skill of our business men to meet the property difficulty.

The writer is intimately acquainted with the financial situation of only one of our churches. This church raised and disbursed something over $1500.00 during this fiscal year. Taking that as an average in the five churches, a united church could raise $7500.00. That sum would support a number of pastors and teachers, pay the running expenses of an institutional church and thus accomplish more toward applying Christian principles to life than was ever dreamed of for our present wasteful methods.

Our appeal then is to the business sense and Christian sentiment of the churches and community. Why should we continue our present prodigality, wasteful of money, time and energy?

What steps, then, should be taken? The first step naturally would be for each church interested in practical Christianity and united action, to appoint a committee of two to confer with like committees from other churches. These committees should arrange the details of the organization. Let these committees be composed of laymen, men of ability wisdom and charity and the object will be accomplished.

May the Lord speedily deliver his people from the sin of dividing unto weakness on the difference between tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum, while men are hungering and thirsting for the bread and water of life. Our Lord certainly says to his people, Give ye them to eat.

Mr Thomas Batte, editor of the Graphic, Texarkana, Arkansas, has found what he believes to be the best remedy in existence for the flux. His experience is well worth remembering. He says: "Last summer I had a very severe attack of flux. I tried almost every known remedy, none giving relief. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy was recommended to me. I purchased a bottle and received almost immediate relief. I continued to use the medicine and was entirely cured. I take pleasure in recommending this remedy to any person suffering with such a disease, as in my opinion it is the best medicine in existence." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by S. A. Wallace.

ern Railway of the condition of the ditch in the 5th Ward and ask that it be cleared out, and if the company fail to clear it in a reasonable time, that the city street commissioner be requested to do the work, and bring in a bill for the amount. Carried.

To The Honorable Mayor and City Council of the City Crookston.

GENTLEMEN: Your finance committee to whom was referred the comptroller's report presented at last meeting beg leave to report that they have examined the same and find it correct. They find that the amount of delinquent taxes is this year much larger than usual and owing to this and the large expense caused by the land-slide breaking the sewer on Third street and the necessity of continually pumping the the water and other unusual charges it will require the strictest economy to carry us through the fiscal year with the funds to be derived from the usual sources.

Dated August 8th 1893.

WILLIAM WATTS,
R. G. MARLETTE,
JAS. E. MORRISEY,
Finance Committee,

Moved by Alderman Norrie, seconded by Alderman Marlette, that the sidewalk on Eighth street between Broadway and Main be ordered constructed by the street commissioner. Carried.

Alderman Morrisey moved to amend, seconded by Alderman Norrie, that it is the sense of this council that the railway company be requested to give a written agreement, that if we allowed them to make the changes at the Sixth street crossing as suggested by Superintendent Ponsonby this evening (putting in new stringers and cutting away the center piling.) they will put in, within 12 months, the structure mentioned by them in letter of August 1892 which is as follows:

St. Paul, Minn., August 4th 1892.

The company will put in the under-ground crossing at Sixth street, Crookston, when the structure requires renewal, a road 36 feet wide and one eight-foot sidewalk at each end. Same will probably be renewed within two years. This is as per our agreement with your company.

Yours Truly,
A. L. MOHLER.

Alderman Childs raised the point of order, that amendment was not germain to the subject. Point sustained by the chair.

Vote was taken on the motion with the following: Ayes; Childs, Jerome, Marlette, Cromb. Nays; Anderson, Jennings, Morrisey, Norrie, Simmons, Walker, Watts. Motion declared lost.

The city engineer passed in a report on a plan for relief in the main opening of the sewer system of the city. Same was read and ordered filed.

SAWMILLS IN ASHES

LUMBER DISTRICT OF MINNEAPOLIS SWEPT BY FIRE.

A Million Dollars Damage Before the Flames Were Quenched—Scores of Houses Destroyed and Many People Made Homeless—Two or Three Lives Lost.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 14.—The most disastrous fire in the history of the Twin Cities was that which swept down upon Minneapolis Sunday afternoon and in a few hours had licked up over $1,000,000 worth of property and sacrificed human life to its fierce fury. The property destroyed included five saw mills, two sash and door factories, a carriage factory, box factory, boiler factory, two ice houses, a brewery plant, 160 dwelling houses and 100,000,000 feet of lumber. The district burned comprised the lower half of Nicollet island, all of Boom island and a section of the city along the east side of the river from Boom island to Twenty-second avenue north. The of the city was the path chosen by the conflagration, and the lumber and buildings which had been rendered as dry as tinder by the hot weather of the past few weeks, was easy fuel to the flames, and it was beyond human effort to save them. But the amount of property destroyed is not the worst feature of the ruin and desolation. Fully 1,000 men are thrown out of employment, and most of them lost their homes and all their earthly possessions in the flames. The affliction at this time is a double calamity, and throws additional gloom over the community. Most of these men had families dependent on them for support, and with one fell blow have been thrown upon the charity of the world.

Carelessness Caused It.

The fire started in an ice house on Nicollet avenue, where a number of boys have been in the habit of gathering every Sunday to drink and smoke. They were there Sunday, and the blaze was doubtless started by a lighted cigar which had been carelessly thrown away. It spread with lightning rapidity, and in a few moments the whole building was aflame. A stable filled with hay in the rear of the ice house was the next building to go, and in a very short space of time the whole island was threatened with destruction. It was then the firemen arrived and began a heroic battle with the flames. Soon a breeze, which had been blowing all day, began to come in rapid sweeps and to building after building in swift succession. Before the icehouse and stable were half consumed the 2-story frame factory of the Union wagon works was afire. It was old and dry as punk, and the streams of water which the firemen poured upon it were of no avail. From there the flames quickly swept to J. R. Clarke's box factory, which was soon in ruins. Next to it on the north Lenhart's wagon works and the Cedar Lake ice houses were wiped out of existence.

Farther north were Lintge & Connell's boiler works and here the heaviest loss on the island took place. This firm had a stock valued at over $50,000 and not a cent of insurance. The other losers are fairly well insured.

It was while the firemen were busy at work on Nicollet island and had secured final control of the flames, that a startled exclamation came from the thousands of spectators that surrounded the scene. Some of the firemen stopped from their labors to look up, only to discover that the work had only commenced. For just then a lurid tongue of flame shot up from the midst of the lumber yards and saw mills on Boom island, and soon a second alarm went over the city, calling the firemen to save that section.

Boom island is several blocks up the river, and the theory which was at first suggested that the wind had blown cinders to that section was soon abandoned when it became known that this second fire had been

and was eating its way into the heart of the lumber district. A general fire alarm was sounded, and the whole city awoke to the realization that it was threatened with destruction. Quickly jumping across the small space of water separating the island from the mainland in Nelson, Tenny & Co.'s lumber yard, where were piled some 10,000,000 feet of lumber. The fire worked through this yard and into that of E. W. Backus & Co., adjoining. By this time it was impossible to stop it even had the whole department been on hand. Great embers flew through the air and started fresh fires. The flames were simply irresistible. Brick and stone structures fell as easy victims as the merest shells. Beyond the lumber yard were the two mills belonging to E. W. Backus & Co. Of these nothing remain except the smokestacks and a mass of twisted machinery and charred timbers. J. B. Chattenton's cedar post mill went the way of the others, as did the sash and door factories of Fulton & Libbey and J. F. Wilcox & Co. At the corner of Marshall street and Thirteenth avenue stood the mammoth brewery of the Minneapolis Brewing company. This it seemed must surely go too at this time [illegible] and although the brewery was surrounded by wooden buildings [illegible] saved and the [illegible] measure protected the property to the north. Had it burned nothing could have prevented the fire from running north as far as it could find anything to burn. Along the river were situated the saw mills and wood and lumber yards, and these, too, would have gone the way of the others and nearly the entire saw mill industry of the city would have been destroyed. Along the east bank of the river were located the mills and lumber yards which burned, while east of them were located many stores and residences. Most of them were wooden structures, and generally occupied by employes of the mill and laboring men. Few owned their dwellings and their principal loss will be their personal effects.

Flames Cross the River.

All the available fire apparatus in the city was in use and St. Paul sent two engine companies in response to calls for assistance, but despite this fact about 6 o'clock the fire jumped the river and for some time the West Side saw mill district was in danger. Fortunately the flames were extinguished before much damage was done. At 10 p. m. the East Side ruins were still ablaze, but under control. Hundreds of people are either the recipients of charity or are sleeping in the open air. Many saved only the clothes on their backs.

The total loss is estimated at $1,150,000, and the total insurance at $750,000.

Thomas Salone, 70 years old, dropped dead from heart disease caused by the excitement, and three firemen were quite seriously injured.

It is reported that Mrs. Thomas Salone, an old lady, was burned to death in her home. The charred remains of a boy were also found in the debris.

MANY DEAD.

Fatal Fire in a Chicago Hotel. Financial Loss Small.

CHICAGO, Aug. 15.—A hotel fire, resulting in the death of a number of the guests, occured during the morning. The fire in the Senate hotel, a 3-story structure on Madison street, near Fifth avenue. One man jumped from a window in the top story and was killed. About half a dozen others were suffocated and burned to death. Loss on the building and contents is practically total, but as the structure was old and the furnishing cheap, the amount will not exceed a few thousand dollars.

A restaurant occupied the ground floor and the Senate hotel the two upper ones. It contained 36 rooms, and held 30 guests when the fire broke out, shortly after 6 a. m. The rooms were separated by flimsy wooden partitions, and proved first class food for fire. The blaze started in the office on the second floor, and spread rapidly through that and the upper rooms. Before the guests could be warned the flames had cut off the escape of a number from the stairways, and they were caught like rats in a trap.

EIGHT KILLED.

Steamer Annie Faxan Blown Up at Wade's Wharf, Wash.

ALMOTA, Wash., Aug. 15.—The Union Pacific steamer Annie Faxon was blown up during the morning at Wade's Wharf, seven miles belown here. Eight persons were killed and all those on board were injured. She carried five passengers. The vessel was literally blown to pieces. The killed are: Thomas McCosh and brother, passengers; Mrs. Tappen, the purser's wife; George Farwell, waiter; Joseph Bush, deck hand; William Kidd, deck hand, and a fireman.

A close season is established to begin May 1 and to continue until July 21. This close season shall be observed both in the North Bacific ocean and in Behring sea.

A protected zone is established extending for 60 miles around the islands.

The use of firearms in sealing is prohibited.

The American arbitrators have expressed their satisfaction with the text of the decision.

Real Estate Convention Postponed.

BUFFALO, Aug. 15.—Advices from many of the most important cities in the country which were to have been represented by large delegations at the congress of the National Real Estate association at St. Paul, Minn., on the 21st have led to the postponement of the congress pending a more settled condition of the commercial field.

Advocates Pension Bonds.

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 10.—The Hartford Courant, editorially, advocates issuing bonds to meet part at least of the vast pension payments now $150,000,000 a year, thus shifting the burden upon the future, as well as furnishing a basis for currency. Local bankers heartily indorse the proposition.

Pensions Suspended.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—On inquiry at the pension office it is learned that up to date there have been 6,742 pensions suspended which were granted under the act of June 27, 1890, the average being 170 daily. A large proportion of these cases, it is said, were suspended pending medical examination.

TWO WEEKS TALK.

FREE COINAGE MEN AND ANTIS REACH AN AGREEMENT.

Bill to Repeal the Sherman Law, With Amendments, to Be Debated Till Aug. 28, When a Vote Will Be Taken on Specified Ratios.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The silver fight has begun in earnest in the house immediately after the approval of the journal. It was not expected as the fact was known that the silverites and the anti-silverites on the Democratic side had reached an agreement about the method to be pursued and as to the time within which the debate should be limited. The first gun of the battle was fired by Mr. Wilson of West Virginia. This missile was in the shape of a bill for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act. Then came forward Mr. Bland of Missouri with a flag of truce under which, after a little objections from the Republicans, an arrangement was effected whereby a debate for 14 days, with night sessions if desired, was provided for—votes to be taken on ratios varying from 16 to 1, to 20 to 1 and an amendment reviving the Bland act of 1878. The daily sessions of the house to extend from 11 a. m. to 5 p. m.

The silver men opened their batteries in the shape of a bill (offered as a substitute) for the free coinage of silver at the present ratio. This started the battle. Mr. Raynor of Maryland was the first champion sent out by the anti-silver party and he fought vigorously and well. He was reinforced by Mr. Brown of Indiana, who in a brief speech advocated the repeal of the Sherman act, conditionally or unconditionally. Mr. Bland of Missouri was put forward to return the fusilade of argument and he performed his part without deterring from his stand as the leader of the silver forces on the floor. He was followed by the Populist member from Colorado, Mr. Pence, who constituted himself as a bulwark for the protection of silver; and by Mr. Wheeler of Alabama, who demanded a greater volume of currency. The fight was still on when at 5 o'clock the house adjourned.

TAKE NO PART.

Republicans Will Not Debate on Silver Coinage.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.—Inquiry of leaders on the Republican side of the house elicits the statement that they expect to take little or no part in the debate now in progress. Said one of them:

"The Democrats have undertaken to control and direct the consideration of the question and refused to give the Republicans a chance to amend the order regulating the debate. We did not believe that free silver or no silver, which are the only alternatives possible under the Bland order, were the only two possible solutions of the situation, and would have been glad of an opportunity to have amended the order so as to secure a vote on a proposition which we believe would go further than any to meet and relieve the necessities of the financial situation. But this having been denied us we do not feel that the Republicans have anything to argue, and my belief is that none of the members on this side will take formal part in the debate."

IN THE SENATE.

Several New Measures Introduced in the Upper House.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.—Mr. Voorhees introduced and had referred to the committee on finance a bill providing for the issue of national bank notes to the amount of the full value of the bonds deposited or to be deposited by national banks.

Mr. Teller offered a bill to send the McGarrahan claim to the court of private land claims.

Mr. Hill (N. Y.) offered a resolution declaring it to be the sense of the senate that no legislation other than legislation pertaining to the finances shall be considered at the present extraordinary session of congress. Laid on the table.

Mr. Hoar (Mass.) gave notice that he would call up the resolution as to the Montana senatorial case, and would, after Wednesday, press it to a conclusion to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. Vest (Mo.) called up the resolution offered by him last Tuesday declaring that the American people favor bimetallism and the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver and made a long argument in favor of its adoption.

NEAL NOMINATED.

Ohio Democrats Hold Their State Convention.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 11.—Lawrence T. Neal now realizes the truth of the old adage that "All things come to him that waits." For eight years in pursuit of the highest office in the gift of the Ohio Democracy, so energetic and persistent that he had almost come to be regarded as a perennial candidate, he suddenly finds his ambition gratified and that without even a semblance of a struggle. With the field against him, lacking organization and able lieutenants, he led from the start and cantered under the wire a comfortable 10 lengths in advance of the closest competitor. The vote stood: Neal, 487 1-5; Taylor, 67 1-2; Baker, 169; Clarke, 63; Lentz 37; necessary to a choice, 405.

The balance of the ticket is as follows: Colonel W. W. Taylor, Columbus, lieutenant governor; John W. Sater, Darke, supreme judge; T. S. Blackburn, [illegible] state treasurer; John P. ROBBED A BANK.

Daring Thief Gets Away With $5,000 In Gold at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 15.—The St. Paul bankers are dazed over the robbery at the First National bank at 11:30 a. m., a single man being able to seize a $5,000 bag of gold in the presence of a dozen people and disappear in a crowd. The police have been searching for him ever since, but there is small prospect that he will be caught. Renaldo Lares, a trusted representative of the Merchants' National bank, accompanied by L. H. Jacobs, porter of the Merchants', had just come into in the First National bank to make a settlement with the clearing house. The funds containing $5,000 each in gold in a small steel box, with odd money also, and in all about $20,000. This box was fastened to the porter, Jacobs, by means of handcuffs, and the two men carried the box when on the street between them. Arriving at the bank there was nothing unusual noticed in the office. Some dozen men stood at the various windows and desks attending to business.

Consisted of Three Bags

Arriving at the teller's window Lares opened the box and removing the bags placed them on the window ledge close by the teller's winbow, and at his right side, he standing between the post and the window, while the porter Jacobs stood at his left, between Lares and the door. Resting the bags for the moment on the ledge Lares began to pay in the loose money, and was busy with this when he heard a rap at his right and turning instantly he saw the robber and dart around the post toward the door. Lares made a leap and succeeded in reaching the door almost as quickly as the thief, and would no doubt have been able to catch him, or at least follow him, had not a man undoubtedly the accomplice of the thief, here interposed by crowding Lares to the wall and giving the man with the bag a clean sweep.

In an instant everything was excitement, the clerks and clearing house men rushed out into the general bank office, but the gold and robbers were as completely gone as though the earth had closed over them. No one on the stairway or the street seems to have detected the thief in his rapid movements or to have been aware of anything unusual going on.

MURDERED AND ROBBED.

An Iron River Man Thrown on the Railroad Track.

ASHLAND, Wis., Aug. 15.—Martin Strum was struck by the Northern Pacific freight near Iron River. The body was dragged half a mile and ground to atoms. As he carried considerable money, of which no trace can be found, it is feared he was murdered and thrown on the track. Two suspicious characters are now under arrest for the deed.

Karamania Released.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—The Anchor line steamer Karmania, which arrived at this port Aug. 3, and which brought the four cases of cholera this season, was released from quarantine at 10 o'clock a. m. and proceeded to her dock. Since her detention at quarantine she has been thoroughly cleaned and disinfected.

ART OF WOOD CARVING.

What Is To Be Seen at the World's Fair.

A MANTELPIECE OF REDWOOD,

Which Excites the Admiration of Visitors —Reproduction of a Doorway of the Burmese Throne—The "Plastic Art" of Modeling in Butter Shown in the Agricultural Building.

WORLD'S FAIR, Aug. 9.—[Special.]—"Every visitor to this exposition must have a fad." So said to me a bright lady whose own cherished fad is embroidery. Well, since it is the fashion, I confess at the start that my fad is wood carving. I am dead mashed on it, as they say at Vassar. I am not "o'fay" in painting and sculpture but I am up in seasoned timber and familiar from my youth with hard woods; was raised among 'em in fact. Now there may have been somewhere an exhibition of wood carvings equal to the one here, but I have not heard of it. And some of the exhibits are old friends transformed.

For instance, Mr. Bartels, of Carthage, Ills., has taken many relics of the Mormon occupation of his county (Hancock) and wrought them into things of beauty and joys forever. His history is a rural romance. At first glance the little inland town of Carthage would seem unlikely to produce a great designer, but when the genius is born no Medusa can paralyze him. He is a natural artist in wood—was born to carve. His mother is a natural artist in drawing and color. Neither mother nor son ever took a lesson, and the result is that while some of their designs show the originality of untaught genius, others produce a slightly ludicrous effect, as is the way of the self educated. He does all his work with a mallet and six chisels, and when he conceives a design submits it to his mother. If she disapproves that is the end of it.

This is business, you know, and not merely a good boy story. The father was a plain farmer and his last injunction was that the son should remain with his mother as long as she lived. So these two have worked and studied together till Mr. Bartels is 40 years old and has produced some works which move even the most skillful to envy. Out of one rail from the first farm opened by the Mormons in that county he made his wonderful clock. Out of other rails and some beams of the Mormon temple that was at Nauvoo he has carved two sets of furniture which make every lady love the carver. It is upholstered in delicate silk.

The Carving club, of Elgin, Ills., has some splendid work in the Woman's building, and so has the Woman's Columbian club, of McDonough county. One of Mr. Bartels' carvings is a curiosity in the illusion line. It represents a small mirror with a curtain which a woman is drawing aside. The visible portion of the mirror is real, and so delicate is the work that one can see in it the reflection of the woman's finger nails which are not visible in front. A young lady of Oakland, Cal., whose name is not given, has sent some wonderful carvings, and there is also a richly carved piano of redwood from Los Gatos, Cal. By the way, California seems to have but recently discovered the value of the redwood for carved work and fine finishing, and the fact is of national importance since walnut has become so scarce.

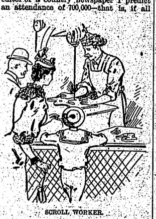
That state also exhibits a mantelpiece of redwood which excites much admiration. At the top are two figures, a harper and a woman sitting on books and reading a paper. On each end are small oval mirrors set in and surrounded by the most delicate bits of highly polished woods, with spray of oak leaves, nuts, etc. Below is a large oak tree with beautiful open country on one side, on the other a distant view of the mountain and sea. A shelf holds large bunches of grapes and to the right is a calla lily, every vein and filament of both delicately outlined in the wood. Still another beauty is a carved easel in redwood, with design of the Eucalyptus tree, done by Miss Brier, of Alameda. It strikes me as a suggestive fact that a middle western state and a Pacific coast state should have taken the honors in this line.

In plain and ordinary work, if I may call it so, such as scroll sawing, there is of course a great variety and it has this advantage—we can see the work in progress. In the New South Wales exhibit is one man running a scroll saw and in the German section another who attract a great deal of attention. Now this sort of thing is not called art and some of the cultured speak of it as mere manual trickery in wood, yet it is very interesting to a common man to note the dextrous manipulation. It makes me feel as if my fingers were all thumbs, indeed. In my boyhood I had quite a knack—or the other boys thought so—of whittling "Injun heads" out of walnut bark, and so I am not altogether ignorant of the exultant glow an artist feels in his fair creations. In fact, I may say that I am in with the artist in that particular at least, which may account for wood carving being my fad; and though my productions would have no rank here I felt towards them as Captain R. F. Burton's African friends did towards their ebony god—"We know that he is ugly and we believe that he is great."

In the Forestry building is a carved doorway of teak wood prepared under the direction of and exhibited by the official conservator of forests of eastern and upper Burmah. The design is a reproduction of those used in the Burmese throne and the carved decorations of the Mandalay palace. The triangular space above the door contains designs said to represent scenes in Mandalay, with the king and his court. There is also a wonderfully carved mantelpiece of various woods including teak and black wood found in the ruins of an ancient city near Madras and in dock excavations at Bombay. The teak is at least 600 years old while the black wood is alleged to antedate the Christian era, having grown hard and black like the bog oak of Ireland. This carving was designed by three Sikh carpenters and executed by them under the direction of the conservator of forests at Simla. The two greatest marvels in wood carving I shall not attempt to describe till I have seen and studied them many times.

To go from all this to the Agricultural building to take a final lesson in art seems like a joke, but modeling in butter has had a recognized place in the arts ever since "The Dreaming Iolanthe" attracted so much attention. The great world's contest in butter making is now in progress and will continue till the 28th inst. and after the butter is weighed and has passed inspection and the results are recorded amateurs are free to buy one of the firm, hard rolls and try their hands at modeling. It certainly is a "plastic art," and some very funny results are produced. I was particularly struck with the work of one genius who had made a sort of oval plaque with figures raised barely enough to show the design. It represented, or was supposed to represent, a Jersey calf tethered in a pen and mourning accordingly, and she had very appropriately labeled it, "A Bas-relief in Butter." This contest between Jerseys, Guernseys and Alderneys is watched with intense interest. Every bit of feed given to the cows is weighed and its weight and nature recorded, every yield of milk is weighed and so are the butter and the buttermilk before the latter are sold, and when the final decision is rendered there will be as much excitement among the advocates of the various breeds as on any race course in the world. It will continue as aforesaid till the 28th. And this reminds me that if the farmers and the great public, the middle million, are really coming here in the next two and a half months, as managers and landlords fondly hope, it is well that they should take note of some important set days.

September 30, as often advertised, is Ireland's Day and the Orange and the Green, Clan-na-Gael and Conservative, Corkonian, Fardowner and Munster man in Chicago are all working in harmony to make it broadly national. The projectors confidently predict that 300,000 Irishmen will be here. August 19 is British Day, but they don't expect 300,000. August 16 is Dartmouth College Day. August 29 is Poet's Day, and from my experience as editor of a country newspaper I predict an attendance of 700,000—that is, if all come who consider themselves poets. The nation includes 3,500 counties, I believe, and I am sure the average is 200 poets to the county. Provincially speaking, if I may take my own native state as a sample, we are the poeticallist people on earth.



SCROLL WORKER.

The day will close, however, with an open air performance of "As You Like It" in the beautiful woodland adjoining the Norway building, and this will not be by poets or amateurs but by the best in the profession. At the matinee in Festival hall there will be selections read by various poets, but not many. August 25 is Colored People's Day. August 18 is Austria's Day. In both these last there will be a great deal of music and much of it of a distinctive or local tone. "The Black Patti" and Madame Seliska will sing for their race and the opera of Uncle Tom's Cabin, written by Mrs. Cook, will be rendered, at least in part. Frederick Douglass will preside and Bob Ingersoll and Albion W. Tourgee will speak, so the entertainment will certainly not be dull, whatever other demerits it may have.

It was suggested that there be a "Crank's Day," but the response was that every day is theirs, and a very appropriate response, too, for this show and the scientific congresses running contemporaneously with it have certainly brought some queer fellows into prominence. I confess that some of the proceedings in the educational conventions and many of the exhibits in school affairs have made me very tired. It looks as if our schools were running to seed, as farmers say, that is, running to fads. In Chicago these frills of education have become so voluminous that a revolt has set in and the people are demanding the old-fashioned district school. It is the American way—from one extreme to another—and there are even chances that the reaction will continue till the Illinois schools are put back on the lines of 1850-'60, teaching only the elementary English branches.

I am surprised that so little is shown and so little promised on behalf of the southern states. Today is Virginia Day, but I see nothing to indicate a difference from other days, and the same may be said for Louisiana Day, which is tomorrow. The 18th is North Carolina's Day, the 23d Delaware's Day, and the 18th Maryland Day, and that seems to end the list. The 22d is Indiana Day, but our state has not yet announced the nature of its special display. I have filed a caveat against the "poetry" on file in our state building, and outside of that they may exhibit what they please. If it were possible to exhibit one of our heated political campaigns it would be the greatest show on earth to foreigners and eastern people, for we take our politics with a mad enthusiasm that must be seen to be appreciated. I suppose, however, that the principal feature of the day will be oratory, and in that Indiana is truly great.

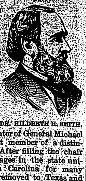
HOKE SMITH'S FATHER.

He Is Engaged In Newspaper Work and Avoids Politics.



DR. HILDRETH H. SMITH.

Secretary Hoke Smith's father, Dr. Hildreth H. Smith, has long enjoyed considerable reputation in educational circles in the southern states. He is of New England birth and family, and his father was an intimate friend of Daniel Webster. He journeyed southward after he left college, teaching school at first in North Carolina, where he met and married Mary Brent Hoke, daughter of General Michael Hoke, a prominent member of a distinguished family. After filling the chair of modern languages in the state university of North Carolina for many years, Dr. Smith removed to Texas and afterward to Atlanta, where he was principal of the girls' high school. He is now the literary editor of Hoke Smith's paper, the Atlanta Journal.

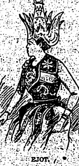
Dr. Smith is tall and of heroic mold, of weight proportionate to his giant stature and tread deliberate and heavy. His hair and beard are white and long and add to the impression of innate refinement produced by his general bearing, distinct enunciation and carefully modulated voice. His wife is also tall and of handsomely proportioned figure and with a fine, intellectual face. She and her husband are companions in the true sense, studying and traveling together and dispensing a liberal hospitality in their handsome home in Atlanta, about half a mile from the more pretentious residence of their son, the secretary, on the same thoroughfare.

Dr. Smith was not at all dazzled by his son's elevation to the cabinet. "I regret very much," he says, "that Hoke decided to leave Georgia. My advice to him was not to accept the position of secretary of the interior. I recognized that it would be a valuable experience, and the fact that the place was offered him was of course a high compliment, but the distinction thus shown him was the only thing to be desired. To my mind, the man who has attained the top in any honorable profesion can reach but one higher position—that of the presidency. I don't say that Hoke is the best lawyer in Georgia, but I believe he is generally acknowledged to be among the best. If he but keep his genial nature, however, during the trying experiences of his term, I shall be satisfied."

AS OTHERS SEE US.

A Javanese Girl's Opinion of American Manners and Customs.

"At home we are happy and live our lives slowly. Here people live lives in one day." Thus spoke Ejot, a Javanese girl who is visiting the World's fair, in response to a reporter's desire to know how she liked Chicago. Her ready perception of the chief points of difference between oriental and American life stamp Ejot as a person of discrimination. She speaks patronizingly of our institutions and laments our bad taste, but thinks we may improve in this respect, as the "country is young."



EJOT.

"America is large, strange and cold," she said. "The climate seems to me to affect the people and make them rough and noisy. I never heard so much noise in my life. In my home we do not make great noise. The ladies are the most beautiful things in America, but they are very strange to me. They always want to shake hands. Then they kiss each other. I do not like that. In my country we only kiss our mother and sisters. Their dress is beautiful. Their form is strange.

"The other day one of the lady visitors asked to come into my house to arrange her dress. She was as beautiful as the Java twilight. Her dress was the same, but very strange. She wore jewels beneath her garments, where no one could see them. This seemed strange to me. If the American woman wears jewels on her knees, why does she not wear her skirt short so people can see them? This one had much lace on her clothes. We never wear any but a single piece on the waist. She had great quantities. She had so many skirts that I do not know how she walked. She never could run, I am sure. It is a wonder to me how they keep their hats on. I am sure that the thin cloth they wear over their faces would choke me.

"I will some day get an American lady's dress and put it on just to see how I look. No one will ever see me with it on. I should be ashamed. I do not like the men in America. They are not polite. Since I have been here many men who have been with ladies have pointed their canes and fingers at me and said something. That is very impolite."

Lucky Sneezes.

Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson says in Archives that he does not recollect himself to have seen any but fairly healthy persons sneeze. He puts the question with special reference to the widely spread popular superstition that sneezing is a sign of health and good luck. It is possible he thinks that this may have its origin in the fact that it is for the most part only healthy persons, or those in fair health [illegible]

ROADS OF SWITZERLAND.

Rules and Regulations For Their Government and Maintenance.

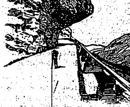
The highways of Switzerland are divided into cantonal and communal, which for our purposes we may call state and county. The state roads are those whose importance as arteries of communication is generally recognized, all others coming under the head of county.

The maintenance of the roads comprises the supplying of the necessary broken stone and all new work and repairs, where the cost does not exceed $200. With state roads the maintenance is incumbent on both the state and the counties through which it passes. The share that falls on the counties may, however, partially or wholly be placed to the charge of other counties than those through whose territory it passes. This is made possible only by the approval of the legislature.

The law for the proper policing of the public highways is primarily for the purpose of seeing that the various regulations that are necessary are not infringed. The co-operation of those using the roads and those owning property along the lines is almost if not quite as necessary as the proper attention on the part of those having the matter in charge.

The regulations as to the weight of vehicles and width of tires permit no wagon weighing more than 20,000 pounds with the load included, no matter by how many animals it may be drawn.

The very fact that a penalty is necessary for the infringement of such a limit speaks volumes for the economy of a proper road system. Where with us, a very few exceptions being made, would our legislators think that any one would be wild enough to attempt to haul such a load? If we could only bring such facts home to our people at large, and farmers and merchants in particular, what would we not have accomplished for the cause of good roads? They would then see that economy in money spent for proper construction and maintenance is not the only way in which expenditure may be saved. They would realize what a saving in horse flesh good roads really mean.



VIEW OF ROAD IN BRUNIG PASS.

The regulations with regard to trees and hedges along the highways are very explicit, and to them are in large measure due the facility with which the roads are properly maintained. By their free action the wind and sun are two great agents in keeping the roads in order, assisting so materially in keeping the roadway free from moisture. It is maintained by some that having trees near a road also aids very sensibly in its drainage, absorbing water through their roots and evaporating it from their leaves. That this action goes on is undoubtedly true, but European experience advocates allowing the agencies of the wind and sun fair play.

The regulations of the canton of Vaud that we are at present considering forbid the planting of any tree nearer than 10 feet to the road or 30 feet to the next tree that is on the roadside. This provision does not apply to bushes or very small trees.

The regulations with respect to turning water on the public ways are most salutary. Water being one of the greatest enemies a good road has, it is of paramount importance that the roadbed be kept free from it. No drains of any kind are allowed to be conducted by the side of or across the roadbed except by special permission of the inspector of the department of public works. When rainwater from a roof would fall on a road, proper conduits must be provided so as to conduct the water to the ground and prevent the wearing action that falling freely from a distance produces.

Infringement of the various regulations is punished by fines of different sizes according to the magnitude of the offense.—Good Roads.

Broaden the Wagon Tires.

It seems inadvisable to attempt by legislative force a reform that cannot be accomplished easily, and that ought to depend upon personal intelligence and self interest. At the same time it is useless to hope for permanent road improvement as long as the ordinary wagon tire is used. How this came to be generally adopted is a mystery, for the saving in weight of metal is easily offset by the greater depth to which the wheels so encircled will sink in the mire and the greater force required to drag them through it.

In all European countries where smooth, hard roads have been constructed people would no more think of permitting them to be cut to pieces by narrow tires than they would of allowing a man to set at work digging them up with a pickax. There is an indirect way of getting at a change in the common custom of farmers that would be very effective. To prohibit and punish the use of the narrow tires is hardly practicable, but a tax levied on all farm wagons having tires not exceeding a certain width would soon banish them from the public highways, and such an imposition would be perfectly justified, as the receipts from it would not suffice to repair the damage which such tires cause. As an accompaniment of road reform, the adoption—enforced, if necessary—of a wider standard of wagon tires is a necessity.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Hasten the Day.

Good roads will be an issue in this country before many years, and the politicians who do not realize this fact are not astute.—Hopkinsville (Ky.) New Era.

CONSERVATISM IN ROADS.

Progressive In Most Things, We Are Behind the Age In Highways.

Man is conservative. To this hour and in lands whose people boast great achievements he is still content to use roads that are in roughness, in steepness and wetness what they were centuries ago. He seems to believe—I do not charge that he thinks—that continued endurance of ills he knows is easier than the mental exertion required for learning what are better ways and for screwing up his courage to the point of adopting those ways.

Leaders of reforms are usually denounced by their own generation as extremists. It is necessary that to move the masses as far as they should go the leaders must go farther. But can it be shown that the most extreme of reformers has been guilty of persisting in blunders as wasteful, as costly, as absurd as those to which the conservative element obstinately adhere?

WE ARE CONTENT WITH THIS.

[From Good Roads.]

I have often seen illustrations of such conservatism in a spot where an engineer carried a wagon road half a mile or more along one side of a high spur of mountain and farther back along the other side. An easy and even grade was thus secured, but the distance around the point is twice as great as that from the place where the old trail leaves the road to go zigzagging up over that rough and rocky spur and down again to the spot where that ancient trail joins again the modern way. Sometimes an arriero so far forgets to protest against this violation of the traditions of his fathers as to permit his mules to go around by the road, but a caballero in the saddle never!

Not that any time can be saved by clambering up 400 feet to scramble 460 feet down again. One could go around the bend in less time and with less expenditure of energy than is used in toiling over the ridge, but why should one save time and the strength of his mule in that land of manana, that happy future to which are relegated all duties we can shirk today.

One whose brain is moved by slow northern blood can conceive of only one cause for so following a tedious, difficult and costly way when an easy and less expensive one offers, and that cause is identical with that which leads millions of people in the United States to continue year after year, generation after generation, to use as roads the rough, dusty and muddy lanes that are in place of the highways they can easily have—and that cause is conservatism.

Once in their chosen field, the advance guards of our nation were busy in making secure their holdings. Years passed before the pioneers had much to haul to or from their homes; therefore they need care little for roads. Time enough for making good roads when they would be needed. They had got along with the roads they had or with none. If others wanted better, let others make them. If their children could not be content with the ways and means that had answered all purposes of the fathers, the children would be able to pay for better. The labors the fathers had done would help the young generation to do that.

The makeshift ways of those days became the habits of the new generations. What was good enough yesterday will do well enough until tomorrow. We laugh at the manana of the children of tropical America and put off to our own tomorrow our own greater need and duty. Therefore there have never been in all this great land a hundred miles of roads as good as those ancient Americans built with their crude appliances.

D. E. VERAS.

Roads the Test of Civilization.

It has recently been advanced in magazine and newspaper articles that one of the best tests of a nation's prosperity and general progress in the march of modern civilization is to be found in the nature and condition of our common highways. By this it is not meant how the boulevards, streets and alleys of her large cities are paved and kept in condition, but how the approaches to the cities, the turnpikes, the country roads and the cross country cuts, which the farmer must use in order to bring his produce to market, are constructed and maintained.

Judged from this standard, it is claimed that America is less civilized today than any European country, and that the United States would have been in all essential regards more prosperous than it is at present if in place of its railways it had secured a system of highways constructed and maintained in the highest state of the roadmaker's art. Many of its cities would be but country towns, and the buffalo would still roam over much of the country to the west of the Mississippi. On the other hand, the farmers would know more of one another than they do at present. Though they could not market their corn in Liverpool they would still be able to take it to mill without the sort tax which the bad roads so generally levy upon them, or which the toll takes requires as the price of a passable way. In such a well united community distance counts for little against the duties of life. The farmers could attend their own meetings. They could do their duty by their churches and have a share in the festivities which [illegible] and enlarge their days. On the contrary, where the roads are bad all the duties of the citizen and the social being are most imperfectly done. The people [illegible] a hermit life and the winter season, which should be the time of social intercourse, is passed in seclusion.—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

A Bashful Lord of Other Days.

There was a young lover who was a compound—very rare—of high rank and great abilities, with sweetness, great modesty and shyness. Most noble lords know their own value and behave accordingly. This noble lord, however, was modest. He thought himself so far—so very far—below the worth of the young lady whom he loved that he was afraid to speak. Some women do not understand this modesty. Believe me, ladies, 'tis a sure and certain sign of a noble character, because only a lofty soul can conceive the existence of a goddess. We measure others, you see, by ourselves. It is also a sure sign of love, because such a man can only love a woman whom he deeply respects. Encourage this modesty, my daughters. Above all, do not laugh at it. This young man, therefore, was afraid to speak, and the delay, which is at first, I am told, pleasing and exciting, began to grow monotonous.

One day they were playing cards for money, after the fashion of their generation. The lady won; the loser paid.

"It is," he said, "half a crown. I wish indeed it were a crown."

"At least," replied the lady, "your lordship can give me a coronet."

And behold a miracle! For his tongue was loosened, and his eyes glowed, and his lips spake. They lived happy, one may add, though it is an unusual ending to a story, ever afterward.—Walter Besant in London Queen.

The Ostrich and Its Eggs.

I am rehearsing a few of the peculiarities of the creature which have made it of interest ever since the days of Job, "which leaveth her eggs in the earth and warmeth them in the dust." It would appear to be an evidence of cunning rather than stupidity for Mrs. Ostrich to adopt this very simple method of incubation. However, it has its disadvantages, for while she is away getting a good dinner her enemy, the white necked crow, spies the unguarded nest. He knows he cannot break one of those mammoth eggs and devises a shrewd plan to help him. Taking a stone in his beak he flies over the spot, calculates with bird sagacity the necessary distance and drops the stone. Plunk! An egg is broken, and he descends to his feast. This is said to be the same kind of a raven that fed the prophet Elijah. His wisdom seems almost of a supernatural order. It is said that the cry of an ostrich is like the roar of a lion, and the Hottentots often run from it in fright until they see the bird.

"We Never Sleep."

This is the striking and probaaly very appropriate motto of the celebrated "Pinkerton Detective Agency" which has seldom failed in any attempt it has made to track and hunt down criminals be they never so cunning. At any rate whether the detectives "never sleep" or not it is pretty certain that a man who knows that "the Pinkertons" are on his trail will not sleep very long nor very soundly.

This not sleeping may do very well for detectives and "crooks" but it does not suit the traveling public nor the Burlington Route. Accordingly, this enterprising line—the Chicago, Burlington and Northern—has placed in service the unsurpassed vestibuled trains of the famous Pullman Company, which insure the through passenger an undisturbed and delightful night's rest. Persons desiring these accomodations can secure them in advance by writing or telegraphing to any agent of "The Burlington" or or to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

M. R. Brown is painting the building formerly occupied by the Dalen and putting it in thorough repairs for rent.

Mrs. A. Gossman, mother of our genial L. E., with her daughter Mrs. Ryan, of Canton, Minn., arrived on Tuesday evening to visit the son and brother.

Appearances indicate that next year will be the bonanza year for wheat farmers. Wheat will probably be higher than ever before in the valley and all who can hold on till then will be happy.

Jack Reed has returned from his visit to the coast. While there he saw "Cope," Walt. Alexander and other old railroad boys, all well and happy and enjoying life hugely.

W. O. Wilson has been threatening to buy a canary to add to his menagerie but he don't have to now for on Sunday last one came to him and proves to be a very sweet singer.

Albert La chapelle, a Crookston old-timer arrived in the city on Saturday last from Bismarck. He is traveling agent for Aultman & Miller. He is having a great time renewing old acquaintance and visiting his relatives.

A German who arrived at the Cleveland house from the Mesaba iron mines on Tuesday, looking for work, says that many men are idle dow there and would like to get up here to work if they had the means to get here with.

Mrs. J. B. Copeland and the girls, start this morning for Seattle to make their future home. They expect to arrive at their destination Sunday next. They go accompanied by the best of wishes of hosts of friends for their future happiness and prosperity.

H. C Misner came in from Euclid on Tuesday on a suit in which the town was interested. Says everybody is right in harvest work and pushing things for all there is in it. Thinks the yield will be light but the quality extra.

Mr. Dawson who traded a St. Charles, Ia., plantation for a farm in Woodside, has been in the county for a fortnight looking us over and is of the opinion that Polk county soil is way ahead of any he ever saw before. He is enraptured with the country and is picking up bargains in land whenever offered. He expects to make Polk county his future home.

Prof. Albert Schumann, of Chicago, who took the flash-light photograph at the opera house last week, has been making some novel backgrounds and foregrounds for Photographer Lynne. Mr. Lynne has also added an adjustable grouper to his outfit and is otherwise improving his gallery. He has the negative taken at the opera house, and will soon produce a number of first-class photographs from it.

Jake Ide commenced in his wheat last Saturday but as it was not overly ripe did not push things all along the line until this week. He says something has been working in his wheat but whether it is the Hessian fly or some other insect, he does not know exactly. It cuts the stalk nearly off at the first joint which destroys the head. About 10 per cent of his wheat is affected in this way. Has seen no signs of army worm in his vicinity.

Mrs. Josephine Tichey and daughter, of Woodside, were brought before Judge Benson on Monday. The woman was adjudged insane and committed to the asylum at St. Peter but the daughter, a girl 14 years being idiotic the judge did not consider that he had jurisdiction over her, however he wired the superintendent at St. Peter meantime turned the girl over to the county authorities till he could ascertain whether she would be taken to the asylum. The woman was sent down Monday evening.

F. Bivins and son expect to finish cutting wheat this week. They have had three binders running for over a week already.

Professor and Mrs. More returned last week from their trip to Canada. They also visited the World's Fair, and report a very enjoyable time.

Fred Rauch and Will Hoch went up Louisville way hunting early this week. They got 70 or 80 ducks, saw a fierce timber wolf (but didn't get him) and report having had a good time generally. Saw lots of grain in the shock and say that wheat is looking nicely.

Bill Welsh started for Forest River, N. D., on Tuesday morning with a jolly load of boys to work in the harvest and threshing fields. Among the number who went were Charlie Rauch, Jim Simpson, Dave King, Jack Hoy, George Hanna and Jim Quinn. Expect to be gone till it freezes up.

Our reporter found T. G. Thompson on Tuesday morning, loading a kiester full of shells and inquired of him the whenceness of the why, was informed that he intended to go forth after the festive duck and intended to slaughter a good deal of it. "No chickens?" said our reporter. "Look here, young man," said Mr. T., what do you take me for? do I look a good deal like a man who would fracture the game law with my eyes wide open? I shoot no chickens, " but, he added with a sly twinkle of the eye and in the rich Norwegian brogue "Begorra I wont allow no spalpeen of a chicken to pitch into me, faith an' I wud shoot the life out o' thim, furrust!" and he kept right on loading shells.

Despite the prospects for a late harvest caused by the late spring we seem to be at it as early, if not earlier than last year. In our issue of August 18th, '92 we mentioned one farmer who expected to commence cutting wheat soon; and in the next issue wheat harvest had pretty generally commenced. This year we have several reports before Aug. 10th and wheat harvest was pretty generally commenced by the 12th. This week almost everybody is busy in wheat which will be well along by next Saturday night. It looks as though a great deal of early plowing could be done this year which will give the weeds a chance to start before frost thus killing a great many of them. Another encouraging feature is in the fact that our wheat this year will be a better sample than last.

Complaints reach the JOURNAL of the action of some of our hunters while out in the fields. It is said that they deliberately put their dogs out into grain fields and allow them to destroy grain regardless of the protestations of the owners of the field. These acts of vandalism seem singular, and we should advise all who are troubled that way to load up the old fusee and fix every dog good and plenty that is sent out into their grain fields. It is all right for men to go out and enjoy a good hunt in a legitimate way, but it is not all right for them to destroy the property of others in this lawless manner, and if there are any hunters who do not know any better than to ride rough-shod over the rights of people they should be taught a salutary lesson. Perhaps after they had lost a few valuable bird dogs they would begin to have some regard for the rights of others.

M. R. Brown: We have just completed our duties as surveyors and appraisers of the ditch from Parnell south to the river. This ditch is to be built by the territory through which it passes, under the general drainage law. What do I think congress will do with the Sherman silver bill? Well, from the present position I should not be surprised to see it replaced by a compromise measure providing for free coinage on a basis of 20 to 1. What do I think of the yield of wheat this fall? I have travelled extensively for the past month and in my judgment wheat will be 25 per cent better than last year in quantity and quality. The price? Ah, that is an important and interesting question depending so much upon the action of congress in restoring confidence that it is quite a difficult one to answer, but if you will assure me that the financial conditions will be restored to a natural basis I will not be afraid to guaranty from 75 to 80 cents per bushel within three months and I should expect to see $1 per bushel for wheat by next June. I base my opinion on the conditions since 1891. That year we had a greater surplus than the world could consume. Speculators could get lots of money and kept the price up. But now the banks refuse to furnish them money, the surplus has quite or nearly vanished, crops everywhere are short and more wheat is needed than there is in sight and it is only a question of a money supply to handle our crop. If that is to be had I predict good prices in the early future.

Geo. McManus arrived in the city last week for a few days visit with old-time friends.

Remember that Saturday August 26, is Prof. Whittier's last day in Crookston this trip.

Very few in Polk county have met with loss by hail this summer, for which we all have cause to be thankful.

Very high winds on Monday interfered with harvesting very materially. Many were cutting after a fashion however.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Page came down from McIntosh on Saturday and on Monday evening Mrs. Page left on the south-bound N. P. train for a visit at her old home.

Prof. Whittier, the optician has extended his time and will remain in Palace Hotel, Crookston, until and including Saturday Aug. 26th, positively no longer.

Mrs. Jack Miller, of the Germania house, who has been very ill since the birth of her child a short time since, so much so that her life was despaired of, was reported very much better on Monday.

The Hay and Commission Co., purchased the Misgen cold storage house near the N. P. depot and moved it down to their new place on Main street where they will use it in their business.

The forth-coming marriage of Mr. Frank Brown to Miss Annie Cromb has been announced to take place at Christ Church, in this city, on August 23d, at 4 p. m., after which there will be a reception at Mr. Cromb's residence.

M. Rood was in from Mentor last week disposing of his cucumbers and sweet corn crop. He has a large patch of white beans, and altogether he expects to clear up about $500 this year out of his three products.

Photographer S. J. Chaflin moved his photographic outfit to his new location over O'Brien's hardware store this week. He has now got one of the finest galleries in the northwest, and will be in shape to turn out first-class work in the quickest possble time.

Secretary Wyatt received a letter this week from J. H. Steiner, secretary of the American Trotting association, in which he paid Mr. Wyatt the following compliment: "Your reports are the neatest, most complete and precise of any received from a secretary outside of the professionals."

The Thief River Falls Press says: While Carl Kretzschmar was in Meehan's saw mill last Wednesday his foot was caught between the carriage and a wheel in such a manner as to squeeze it severely, confining him to the house for a few days. It was a close call as an inch or two further run would have crushed the foot.

Mark Murphy appeared at the opera house here on Friday evening in "O'Dowd's neighbors" playing to a good house. The company is a strong one and the play bright and comical—just the kind to draw. There is not a "stick" in the entire company and the frequent encores indicated that the audience was greatly pleased.

On account of extra work accumulating and increasing business, Prof. Whittier, the optician, will remain in Crookston, Minn., another week, until Saturday, August 26th, Office, Palace Hotel. See new "ad." A large number of cases successfully treated. Don't fail to see him.

Fred Baats left a sheaf of wheat with John McKinnon which indicates a handsome yield for this year. He is now busy cutting it. He was in on Tuesday for some lumber at Stewart and Co's. yard and hired a dray to take it out to his farm rather than to take a team off his binder.

Geo. Beaudette, expert for the Plano folks is busy as a bee setting up binders. He says the wheat on the west side is very much better than anywhere else in the county. He has been over the county extensively and thus has had a good opportunity to judge of the crops.

The simple announcement of Prof. Whittier, the optician, coming to Crookston, is sufficient to secure for him a good business as the citizens of this place and vicinity are well aware that he is an expert in his profession. He is nicely quartered in the Palace Hotel, and will be pleased to see all of his old customers, and all others who need assistance. The professor says that there are some would-be opticians who try to assume his name, and manner of advertising and go so far as to copy his ad., and publish the same verbatim in advertising their business. As of this class of opticians the professor wishes to extend his pity rather than contempt for they show their lack of ability to invent anything peculiar to themselves, or else knowing the professor's methods are the best, take this way of endorsing them. The professor will visit Crookston semi-annually. Do not be deceived.

The Col. took Wilson and Ben and went out for a hunt on Tuesday. The Col. says if he couldn't have but one he would prefer Ben because Wilson talks too much with his mouth.

E. D. Jackson, a Minneapolis attorney, was in the city on Saturday and favored the JOURNAL with a call. He says he considers Crookston in better shape financially than any other city of its size in the northwest.

A. Daniels commencd to cut as fine a piece of wheat as grows in Polk county, this week, on the old Honeywell place three miles east of the city. The wheat is on summer-fallow (plowed twice last year) and Mr. Daniels confidently expects a yield of at least 25 bushels per acre.

Frank Cleary and George Fenton took a ride in Columbus' sail boat on Sunday last, also "took a header" into the briny deep. Miss Mabel Arnold rowed to their assistance when the boys "bobbed up serenely from below," crawled aboard the skiff and "pulled for the shore," wetter but wiser.

Such lovely weather as we are having is a matter of remark by all interested. Hardly an hour has been lost on account of bad weather since harvest began and this will have a tendency to shorten the harvesting season very materially. Never have the conditions been more perfect.

A sneak thief stole $5000 in gold at the First National Bank in St. Paul about 11:30 a. m. on Monday. Train No. 3 on the Great Northern, due here at 7 a. m. ran into the rear end of a freight train at Fergus Falls, Tuesday morning, and the engine and baggage car rolled into the river. Chris Houston began cutting wheat on Tuesday. He has a good crop for this year.

LOCAL AND GENERAL.

A Number of Decisions of Court Cases Tried Before Judge Ives Last week.

The Brown-Cromb Wedding at Christ Church Yesterday Afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Ben Menard Narrowly Escapes Being Killed—Two Other Serious Accidents.

Court Decisions.

Court convened at 2 p. m. and took up the case of A. J. Hellerud vs Hans Etham and Thos. Bjoin, Montague & Bucklen for plaintiff and H. Steenerson for defendant. This is an action brought by plaintiff to correct a mortage given to him by Etham on a piece of land. Etham bought a horse from Hellerud and gave him a second mortgage on his place to secure payment. In making the mortgage the wrong description was put in, by error. Etham afterward sold the farm to Bjoin, he, as Etham claims, was to assume the Hellerud mortage as well as the first mortgage; Bjoin claims he did not agree to assume that mortgage and it was not so incorporated in the deed of sale from Etham to Bjoin.

Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, allowing him to correct and foreclose his mortgage, and a personal judgment against Etham. Costs against both parties.

The case of Kelly vs C. Christianson and Hans Larson, tried the early part of the week, was decided in favor of the plaintiff; 60 days stay of proceedings granted.

Adjourned until Friday. Attorneys in the case of Arny Grundysen vs Board of County Commissioners of Polk county, which was the one to be tried that day, not being ready, court adjourned until Oct. 9. However, on Tuesday Aug. 22nd, court convened at chambers and by stipulation it was agreed to try the above case.

The sheriff's bill for serving delinquent tax notices and collecting same was something like $684. The board refused to pay the whole amount, some of which was service on parties whose taxes they had cancelled. The board cut the bill to about $186. The court held that the sheriff is entitled to mileage for the actual number of miles traveled 2050, $153.75, and for serving warrants $119.25, making the sum of $273. The question as to whether the board has a right to cancel taxes or not still remains unsettled.

Tuesday the 22nd, being the day set for arguing a motion for new trial in the C. L. Comings case, the defendant and his attorney, A. C. Wilkinson, appeared before the court and filed an affidavit from the reporter Von Bornstadt, setting forth that he could not have a transcript ready by this date. A stay of proceeding was granted until Oct. 9, and the defendant allowed to go out on his old bonds until that time.

A decision in the case of J. W. Wheeler, assignee of Sylvester & Finseth, vs E. M. Walsh was rendered in favor of plaintiff.

This ends up the court business for a time.

Wedding Bells.

On Wednesday at four o'clock Miss Annie Frances Cromb, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Cromb, was united for life to Frank M. Brown, at the Episcopal church, the Rev. H. C. Boissier, officiating, J. P. Foote acting as best man with Miss Maggie Brown, sister of the groom, as bridesmaid. The church was gaily decorated with handsome flowers and filled to overflowing with the friends of the parties. After the ceremony at the church a reception was held at the residence of the bride's parents on Houston Avenue, where were displayed a rare lot of presents too numerous to mention, which attest the popularity of the young couple in the city where they have both grown to maturity from childhood. The happy couple left on the evening train for a bridal trip that will include Chicago and the great World's Fair among other places. The JOURNAL unites with their many friends in [illegible] best wishes for a long and happy life.

What might have proved to be a [illegible] fatal accident occurred at the Walker saw mill last Saturday.

While Ben Menard, the master mechanic of the mill, was reaching over a revolving shaft, his clothing was caught by the shaft and he was whirled around with lightning-like speed until his clothes were torn from his body. Mr. Menard is a very heavy man and his clothes would not stand the strain put upon them. Although he was badly shaken up, he was not bruised or cut up, and how he escaped so lucky is a mystery to all around the mill.

The same afternoon a little son of John Estby, who had gone to the mill with his father after a load of wood, fell under the wagon and one of the wheels passed over his body. There was a heavy wood rack on the wagon, but the boy didn't seem to be injured.

Sunday Evening Club.

ED. JOURNAL:—Services will be resumed next Sunday, Aug. 27th, at the Congregational church. The morning topic is "Culture and Character." In the evening we purpose to begin the carrying out of a plan that has been under advisement for some months, viz: The starting of a Men's Sunday Evening Club. At the meetings of the club we expect to have a plenty of good music and the frank discussion of practical questions pertaining to life and character. The program for each meeting will be carefully imposed and printed. The plans and purposes of the club will be fully set forth on Sunday evening. All gentlemen, especially those who have not been in the habit of attending church, are invited to come Sunday evening and decide whether the plans proposed meet their approval. Hours of service, 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. Sunday school, 12 m.

JONATHAN G. SMITH, Pastor.

Broke His Leg.

Mace Delane, who works for Henry Bradshaw, while loading brick near the McManus & Farley elevator, jumped off a wagon and broke one of the bones of his leg just above the ankle. He will be laid up for some time, but will recover the use of his limb.

Winter Rye.

A while ago the JOURNAL mentioned the fact that E. D. Childs intended to send for a carload of winter rye. On Saturday last he received a carload from Wisconsin and intends to sow 250 acres. This will leave him several hundred bushels to sell and those who contemplate sowing some should notify Mr. Childs at once and engage it before it is all gone. The benefits of this crop were fully set forth at the farmers institute last summer and need not be repeated here.

Money for the Crops.

On this topic now engaging the minds of business men the Minneapolis Evening Journal says:

The important question of how to secure money to move the crops is still an open one in the Northwest. The solution is almost entirely in the hands of the bankers, for they must settle it by the adoption of a plan which may or not be favored by the grain interests. The latter are inclined on the whole to favor the clearing house certificate plan, but there is not entire unanimity on this point, however, as some of the grain men doubt whether farmers would be willing to sell their grain and accept certificates for it. The dating of checks ahead 30 days has been proposed, but this also has its objections, as it is not regarded a convenient plan in all its points.

The matter is practically no nearer a solution than when it was first brought up. Several plans have been proposed. Ex-Gov. Merriam's clearing house plan is similar to several propositions that have been made, and all of the propositions agree in leading features. The point for solution is as to what method can be agreed on by banks, grain buyers, the farmers, the railroads and the jobbers that will permit of the handling of wheat without the advance payment of currency. Some of the banks [illegible] even [illegible] by [illegible] position [illegible] would be necessary in buying wheat for cash, as the banks do not wish to pay out large amounts of cash if any other plan can be devised.

It may be, that certification of checks may be adopted to some extent so that the banks may have cognizance of the demand that will be made upon them. All branches of business interested in the handling of the crops are anxious to find out a way out of the difficulty. It is expected that the banks will soon indicate a policy, but at present proceedings are in statu quo.

The banks believe the clearing house plan would be legal. The law passed by the last legislature, permitting the incorporation of clearing houses, is being looked up this week. If this plan is adopted, the situation will be this: The elevator company will make application to its bank for a loan in the regular way, offering collateral. A committee of the clearing house will examine this collateral, and if it is found to be satisfactory the loan will be made, except that instead of paying cash, the clearing house will issue certificates in small amounts, which would take the place of currency, and would be accepted by the retailer, the railroad and the jobber in the settement of bills. On the maturity of the note on which the certificates were issued, and its payment, that amount of certificates would be retired, and a large number of transactions would have been closed without the use of a cent of currency. If a plan of this sort is not adopted, there will be no way out of the dilemma except to proceed with the marketing of the crop in a very slow way. Of course, the dating ahead plan could be adopted, but in that case there is some risk.

The conferences held thus far between the bankers, the elevator men and the millers seem to indicate that there will be no concerted action among them as to ways and means of moving the wheat crop. It is admitted by all that it will be impossible under present conditions to pay the farmer spot cash for his wheat as in former years and that some form of substitute must be adopted. Under the certified check plan the elevator companies will issue these checks in various denominations, certified to by the banks with which they do business, and they will be accepted by the farmers, railroads and jobbers in turn, finally finding their way back to the bank and being canceled after having performed the functions of actual money. This plan is now being operated to a considerable extent in the east for payment of wages. It supplies the lack of currency and is said to work admirably. Buffalo, N. Y., is a notable instance of a city where it is used. The objection to it is that it throws the burden on to the banks individually, who would have to accept collateral to protect the certifications.

The chief feature is a roadway 50 feet wide and 1,000 feet in length, extending from the French colonies exhibit to the live stock pavilion. On this the different processes of road construction are illustrated, and in glass covered cases adjoining the road exhibits of materials and machinery used in the work are shown.

The road is divided into sections. In the first is a wagon fast in a rough country road, illustrating the average highway after bad weather in many parts of the country. The following sections show the fine country roads of France, Italy, Germany and England. Cross sections show the manner of drainage and construction. Manufacturers of paving materials, such as bricks, asphaltum and wood blocks, and quarriers of granite and other stones used in road making will use the other sections to illustrate the practical use of their goods.—New York World.

No Advancement In Roads.

No other civilized nation on earth has as bad, cheap roads as there are in America, and foreigners who visit the country wonder that people who have developed so marvelously in almost every other commendable direction are so backward in a line of improvement that yields so handsome a return for money invested as does this one.—Detroit Free Press.

Get Him Interested.

Once convince a man that $5 worth of labor spent on the road passing his farm means the saving of two or three times that sum in the transportation of his goods over the roads and he will not only join in the movement himself, but will see to it that his neighbors are interested.—Utica (N. Y.) Observer.

An Indian Blanket.

The Indians make blankets of bark beaten very thin. The bark is stamped with fancy figures in brown and red and is trimmed with fur. Palm leaves are beaten together and are also made into blankets. An Indian is always cold, even in hot weather, and his blanket is as precious to him as our sun hats are to us.—New York Ledger.

RIFT IN THE CLOUD.

R. G. DUN & CO.'S REPORT IS ENCOURAGING.

Signs of Improvement Throughout the Country Are Unmistakable, Though Not Very Pronounced. Causes Leading Thereto.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

There is a rift in the clouds. Faint and yet definite signs of improvement are all the better because they come, not from possibly delusive hopes or from momentary foreign aid, but from the good sense and the wonderful recuperative power of the people themselves. Business is trying to go ahead without waiting for Washington. Imported gold, $9,000,000 or more during the week, does not go to the right spot, but the people are creating a homemade currency for themselves by using certified checks in paying hands, settling local accounts and purchasing grain and cotton. The bank circulation has increased $2,000,000 but the

of national banks alone from May 4 to July 12 was $193,169,588, and during the past month withdrawals have also been heavy. Little money comes back as yet from timid hoards, and the paralysis of exchange is nearly as complete as ever, but that very fact pushes each section and city into relying more on itself and less on the government. Many concerns are failing or closing, but resumptions are now becoming somewhat frequent and in the very shrinkage of production men see evidence that demand must soon overtake supply. No such shrinkage resulted at any time in five weary years after the panic of 1878 as has already appeared in

The Great Industries.

Pig iron does not rally but sells at $14 here and $13 at Pittsburg for No. 1, though the weekly output has been reduced 46 per cent since May 1. Sales of wool in seven weeks have been only 17,575,600 pounds against 50,327,880 last year and 37,450,800 in 1891, and it is stated that 93,000 looms and 4,800,000 spindles in New England are now idle, which means more than a quarter of the cotton spindles in the country. Shipments of boots and shoes from Boston since the end of June have been 462,848 cases against 573,345 last year, a decrease of 17 1-3 per cent.

With such shrinkage in the great industries, it is only surprising that railroad earnings do not decline more, the decrease on roads reporting in August thus far being 18 per cent. The receivership for the Northern Pacific had been so fully discounted that it produced little effect in the stock market, though this is the third great railroad default this year and the aggregate stocks and bonds of the three roads amount to $650,000,000.

Rockford Industries Resume.

ROCKFORD, Ills., Aug. 21.—The Rockford Shoe Factory and W. G. and John Barnes, machinists, have resumed operations. The watch factory, Nelson Knitting company and Emerson, Talcot & Co., manufacturers of agricultural implements, will resume with a full force Sept. 4, and the Trahern Pump company will re-employ its entire force on that date. It is believed that all the old industries will be running on or about the first of the month.

Condition of National Banks.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—The abstract of the reports made to the controller of the currency showing the condition of national banks in the United States July 12, last, has been made public. A comparison with the statement of May 4, last, shows a decrease in individual deposits of $193,000,000; in loans and discounts of $137,000,000; in specie of $21,000,000, and in undivided profits of $13,000,000.

HE GRABBED THE GOLD.

Pinkertons Think They Have the Principal In the St. Paul Robbery.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—George Harvey was arrested by "Billy" Pinkerton on the charge of being the principal in the $5,000 robbery in the First National bank of St. Paul, Aug. 14. The man, who gave his name as Harvey, refused to talk beyond claiming that he had never been in St. Paul. The Pinkertons claim he is not only the man who grabbed off the $5,000, but is an English thief with a big continental reputation.

Caught the Third One.

CHICAGO, Aug. 22.—John, alias Charles Meggs, supposed to be one of the three men connected with the St. Paul bank robbery last Monday, was locked up in the Central station Friday night. Meggs is about 28 years old. When he was searched at the station $780 was found on him. He refused to say where he came from or give any information about his career.

Land Office Buildings.

GUTHRIE, O. T., Aug. 21.—On Monday a force of men will go on the Cherokee strip to build the four land offices buildings that have been contracted to be completed Sept. 4. Surveyors will also begin laying off all the townsites, and wells will be dug by the government so there will be no suffering for water. [illegible]

Mrs. Shann Not Guilty.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 21.—The jury in the case of Mrs. Mary Shann, who has been on trial for nearly two weeks charged with having poisoned her son John for the purpose of securing some insurance money, has returned a verdict of not guilty and the prisoner was discharged.

Robbers Arraigned.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 22.—Thomas J. Fleury and J. J. Meiggs, the alleged First National bank robbers, were arraigned in the district court. Their hearing was postponed till Aug. 31.

Ancient Girdles.

Ancient girdles were in some respects like the chatelaines not long ago so much the rage among the ladies, but they differed therefrom in being more useful, more comprehensive in regard both to sex and to articles worn, and when completely furnished more costly. It is partly for this last reason that we find girdles bequeathed as precious heirlooms and as valuable presents to keep the giver's memory green after death. They were not infrequently of great intrinsic value. One of King John's girdles was wrought with gold and adorned with gems, and that of the widow of Sir Thomas Hungerford, bequeathed in 1504 to the mother church of Worcester, was of green color [illegible] with silver and richly jeweled.

Not a few [illegible] commoners were able to afford the luxury of gold embellished belts and were not superior to that pardonable vanity so long as no regulation prohibited them. Those who have studied our social history will not be surprised to learn that enactments were passed restraining them. Edward III forbade any person under the degree of a knight from wearing girdles, gilt or silver, unless he should happen to be an esquire of substance valued at more than £200, when a reasonable embellishment was tolerated. Henry IV confirmed this regulation, but it does not seem to have been stringently enforced, for Edward IV was constrained to impose a penalty of 40 pence upon the wives of servants and laborers who should have the pertinence to aspire to be as good as their masters' spouses.—Chambers' Journal.

Making the Most of Household Pets.

Whatever beast is kept it should have its own quarters in which it is at home and free from intrusion and to which it can retire when it chooses. This home should be kept clean and sweet by frequent changes of bedding and the use of soap and water. No one has a right to keep an animal in confinement who finds it too much trouble to attend to its health and comfort. It should be regularly fed on food that is most healthful for it, and what is quite as essential to its happiness and consequently to its health, it should be talked to and noticed as much as anybody.

I am certain many animals and birds suffer and die in our homes from pure loneliness and from being regarded by their human neighbors as creatures of an altogether different nature. Whereas the truth is, if one will but cultivate their acquaintance, he will be astonished to see how the dullest and most stupid will wake out of its apparent torpor and show understanding and character.

I know a family very fond of pets, in which the creatures show most extraordinary individuality. Their cats do things no cat was ever before known to do; their parrots and other birds show what we call human nature in a wonderful degree, and their dogs almost talk. The reason is plain; the animal or bird is made one of the family. It is talked to and petted as well as cared for. Its intelligence develops, and the beast becomes very like the human being.—Olive Thorne Miller in Harper's Bazar.

Miss Olea Bull, daughter of the famous violinist, has decided to go on the stage and will make her debut with the Barnet Opera company in "Prince Pro Tem," which will open the regular season at the Boston Museum next September.

Queen Margaret of Italy has a long memory. She refused to accompany King Humbert on a visit to Queen Victoria at the Villa Salmicri recently because Queen Victoria had neglected to return her call of five years ago.

It is said to be getting the fashion to address and stamp envelopes on the back. With the direction written across the folds, the letter cannot be opened by an unauthorized person without the fact being detected.

In stationery fashion tends to the use of oblong envelopes instead of square ones. The paper folds but once. Extraordinary colors, such as deep orange, willow green and mauve are in vogue.

"I tell my boy," said a father, "that I don't care what calling he takes up, but that he does want to be able to do whatever he undertakes to do better, if possible, than anybody else."

The first secession flag raised in the south was in South Carolina. The flagstaff is still standing fastened to the gable end of a storehouse at Skull Shoals.

His Crowning Hands.

Crowning hands,
Not of this world, his kingdom. So no gifts
Of crowns or titles signified his love,
But "he that would be greatest, let him serve,"
Shall be the test of royalty above.
"He that believeth on me." Drooping soul—
It matters not of high or low degree—
The hand that did not thrust aside thy thorns,
Has waiting now "a crown of life" for thee;
Jesus' hands are crowning hands.

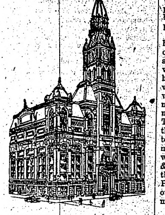
THE BOARD OF TRADE

FORTUNES WON AND LOST IN CHICAGO'S BUSY MART.

Lively Is the Word In the Big Trading Room—Gigantic Operations—John Cudahy's Ups and Downs—Charles D. Hamill, President of the Board.

There may be a livelier place on this earth than the great "trading hall" of the Chicago board of trade on a right lively day, but if there is few persons know where to find it. Even on a day when "things is running smooth and reg'lar" you would not select the trading room for a quiet talk with a friend. When there is a real gloom such as swept from wall to wall on the day that John Cudahy, his friends and their pork corner all went down together, the tumult is appalling. The press dispatches described it as "bedlam let loose." Some of the men who were present used much more picturesque language about it without suffering reproof from others who were there.



BOARD OF TRADE BUILDING, CHICAGO.

The board of trade was founded in 1848. Two years later it was incorporated with 13 subscribers. Now there are nearly 2,000 members. In the beginning the admission fee was but $5. Now it is $10,000. The annual assessment of each member for expenses is $75. Membership in the board is transferable and commands premiums ranging from $2,500 to $5,000. The building at present occupied is located at the foot of La Salle street, between Jackson and Van Buren. It stands 225 by 174 feet on the ground and is a handsome, massive granite structure. It is surmounted by a tower "tapering into a pinnacle" 304 feet above the pavement. The interior is lavishly finished, and the trading hall, with 175 by 155 feet of floor surface, is a notable apartment. Its ceiling is 80 feet high, and much of it is glass. The dealings of the members are confined altogether to the products of the farm, and different parts of the floor are given up to dealers in different crops.

The method of doing business has often been described, and readers generally are familiar with the arguments for and against the practice of "dealing in futures" by which so many fortunes have been lost and won and against which antioption legislation in quantities has been proposed. The magnitude of the annual deals consummated on the floor of the board of trade is something appalling, and it is not likely that the most pronounced "antioptionist" holds that the business of handling the crops of the country could be done so quickly and so economically by any plan as yet devised as by organization.

The objections raised are exactly the same as those made to the money exchanges the world over. Prices are made to fluctuate by means of skillful "bull" and "bear" movements, and sometimes in such a way as to seriously affect the prosperity of the producer, who, it is held, should of all men be subject to as little uncertainty as to prices as is possible. His profits, it is claimed, is little enough at best. It was officially set out when the board of trade was organized that its objects included the following: "To promote uniformity in the customs and usages of merchants; to inculcate principles of justice and equity in trade," and to "facilitate the speedy adjustment of business disputes."

JOHN CUDAHY.

The membership of the board of trade includes a large proportion of Chicago's list of 200 odd millionaires, and a mere enumeration of their names would take up more space than is here at command. The fact that most of these men have made their large fortunes since the fire of 1871—a period of only 22 years—is perhaps of itself the most striking commentary that could be made on the push, the vitality and the grip on business possessed by that typical American—the Chicago man.

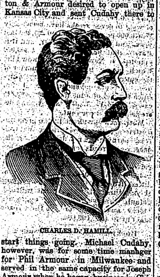
The circumstances of the failure of John Cudahy, Wright and their business friends are pretty well known. The deal was started a year ago last March by Wright by a bull campaign on hog products. Cudahy put up the money and the plan worked. By November pork had been pushed to $20 a barrel and other pork goods to corresponding figures. In January N. K. Fairbank got in with them, and the three and their friends made money and kept prices high for a long time. But hard times and Phil Armour finally got after them together, and the bottom dropped out.

John Cudahy is one of three brothers, the others being Michael and Patrick. Their business connection has always been more or less close, but neither Michael nor Patrick possesses the boldness and nerve of John. The failure of the last named is but an incident in the commercial record of the brothers who have made and unmade food markets for a decade or more. John Cudahy is a native of Callan, County Kilkenny, Ireland, and was born Nov. 2, 1843. When he was but 10 years old, his father came to America with his family and settled in Milwaukee. There the elder Cudahy went into business as slaughterer and packer in a small way, and there the boys received the most practical lessons possible in that business.

When John Cudahy was 15 years old, he was set to work in the establishment of Edward Roddis, a Milwaukee packer, and before a year had rolled by John was the most trusted employee in the house. When he was 19 years old, he went to work for John Plankinton, who was already Michael's employee. In 18 months John resigned and went into the nursery business with Thomas Grynne. They made money for three years, and then John went with the house of Layton & Co. Three years later he was made inspector of provisions for Milwaukee. Then he went with Van Kirk & McGeough, and then he bought into the packing establishment of John Plankinton. In 1876 Michael bought out the Plankinton interest and John removed to Chicago.

For five years John was in partnership with E. D. Chapin, the firm name being first E. D. Chapin & Co., and then Chapin & Cudahy. Then Chapin got out, and the firm became Cudahy Bros., Patrick being the junior partner, and Michael owning the controlling interest. In the meantime John joined forces with Jerry Steever, and, in 1881 became one of the controlling spirits on the board of trade. N. B. Ream, C. J. Singer, Nat Jones and John Cudahy were in those days known as "the big four." When he went into partnership with Steever, Cudahy was worth about $700,000. Three years later he had passed the million mark.

It was in 1874 that John Cudahy worked for "Uncle Phil" Armour, after leaving Milwaukee and before setting up for himself in Chicago. He was then with the Plankinton house, and Plankinton & Armour desired to open up in Kansas City and sent Cudahy there to start things going. Michael Cudahy, however, was for some time manager for Phil Armour in Milwaukee and served in the same capacity for Joseph Armour when he began business in Chicago.



CHARLES D. HAMILL.

It is stated that neither Michael nor Patrick Cudahy is affected by John's trouble. They are not speculators, but devote themselves to "straight away" business operations. They have plenty of money and will probably combine to help John get on his feet again soon.

The firms that went down with John Cudahy include J. G. Steever & Co., E. W. Bailey & Co., A. Helmholz & Co., Wright & Haughey and the North American Provision company.

Charles D. Hamill, the present president of the board of trade, was first chosen in 1892 and re-elected in January of the present year. His opponent in 1892 was Jerry Steever, with whom John Cudahy had been a side partner when a member of "the big four" of the early eighties. Mr. Hamill is a Hoosier by birth, and will be 54 years old Nov. 14. His early boyhood was passed in Bloomington, Ind. His father, Dr. Robert Hamill, removed to Chicago in 1847, and when Charles was 13 he went to work as a messenger boy in a dry goods house. He got $50 for his first year's work. He rose rapidly from this place, and in 1855 took a clerk's position in the Chicago Bank of Commerce. He remained in the banking business till 1864, when he went into the packing business as silent partner in the firm of Singer & Co. In 1865 he went into business for himself "on change," and has been active ever since. His son Robert is now a member of his firm, which is called C. D. Hamill & Co.

President Hamill is a man of artistic and musical tastes. He helped form the Apollo club of Chicago. He is a warm friend of Theodore Thomas. In his beautiful home are to be seen many rare etchings and artistic canvases. Some of his art treasures were taken to Chicago before the fire. An entire importation direct from Holland to Chicago was purchased a year or two prior to the conflagration by Mr. Hamill and two of his friends. They lost their part of the importation by the flames, but Mr. Hamill saved his. Though not a college graduate Mr. Hamill is a man of [illegible]

A PERFECT SUMMER.

They say the sun as brightly shines as in the days agone,
They say the grass is just as green out on the shady lawn,
And that the birds as sweetly sing up in the waving leaves
As when we sat together, dear, among the golden sheaves.

It may be so. The bees are humming,
And the smell of the clover is rare and sweet;
But mem'ry's fingers at my heartstrings thrumming
Wake a song of a joy that was too fleet.

The glowing sunshine grows pale around me.
The grass is faded, the bird song faint;
I catch not the charm of the scenes that surround me,
For thy voice answers not to my heart's lone plaint.

The change is not in the sun's bright shining,
The song of the birds, the hum of the bees;
For the charm of that old time was not in reclining
In the lap of summer beneath the green trees.

I love the bright sunshine, the birds sweetly singing,
As I sit alone 'neath the old apple tree;
But I wait with fond longing, to dear hopes close clinging,
That each summer time brings me nearer to thee.

For the rythm in the melody of that happy measure
Was the sound of thy voice, to me more than dear,
And ne'er can life's music so thrill me with pleasure
Till thy murmuring tones fall again on my ear.

So I trustingly yearn for a happy home coming,
A heaven made perfect by thy presence so rare;
For through the Elysium 'twould be weary, lone roaming
If thou wert not with me its glories to share.

L. A. CONES.

Generalship and Book Knowledge.

The greatest soldier who ever lived—Alexander of Macedon—though he slept with Homer under his pillow, had probably never seen a book on military art, and though Von Moltke was a student, we may be permitted to doubt if Marlborough ever was. He read only Shakespeare zealously.

Certainly in our time no able man who wanted a chief for any great undertaking of any kind would dream of asking the limits of his reading or would be able to avoid a silent prejudice against a candidate, partly unreasonable, but partly also the result of a traditionary experience, if he knew that he was in any special degree a student of books. He would think him a man apt to be misled. Indeed, in one great condition of efficiency, perhaps in practice the greatest of all conditions, we should assign to unread men—we do not mean uneducated men, but men who never voluntarily open books—a definite superiority. They are apt to choose men better. Soldiers who do not read make no mistake about their general.—London Spectator.

Rossini's Memory.

The composer of "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" was blessed with a not very retentive memory—especially for names of persons introduced to him—a forgetfulness which was frequently the cause of much merriment whenever Rossini was among company. One day he met Bishop, the English composer. Rossini knew the face well enough, and at once greeted him. "Ah, my dear Mr. ——," but he could progress no further. To convince him that he had not forgotten him Rossini commenced whistling Bishop's glee, "When the Wind Blows," a compliment which "the English Mozart" recognized and would as readily have heard as his less musical surname.—Gentleman's Magazine.

A Munificent Offer.

Here is a capital story of Mr. Edward Lloyd, the well known tenor. He seldom sings in private, but on one occasion, when visiting some friends a little way out, he was prevailed upon to do so. A clergyman who was present was not aware of the identity of the singer and at the conclusion of the song approached him quietly and said:

"Really, sir, you should not waste your voice like this. Now, we are in need of another tenor in our choir. I shall be very happy to give you £30 a year. Think it over."

The singer smiled and said he would—think it over.—London Tit-Bits.

Washes For Injured Eyes.

Lime and Roman cement are very destructive to the eyes if permitted to remain any considerable time. Wash the eyes immediately with water, then with water containing vinegar or lemon juice.

For acids in the eyes wash with water containing a little ammonia or baking soda.

For alkalis wash with water containing vinegar or lemon juice.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Montana, Michigan and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for entry and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmonton and Prince Albert districts have been getting [illegible] cents per bushel for wheat all winter. A FROST MAP.

An Interesting Chart Made Up by the Pioneer Fuel Company.

The Pioneer Fuel Company has issued a map covering Wisconsin, the northern peninsula of Michigan, Northern Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, South Dakota and North Dakota, a portion of Manitoba and the southwest corner of Assinaboia. The different states and provinces are in colors. The object of the map is to show the average dates of killing frosts at various points in the territory included. For instance, observations taken in Minneapolis and St. Paul, cover a period of 20 years. The map shows that the average date of the first killing frost during the 20 years at this point has been Oct. 6, and that the average date of the last killing frost in the spring has been May 2. The figures also show that the first recorded killing frost in the fall in this locality was Sept. 1, 1778; that was the earliest. The latest in the spring was May 23, 1882. The map shows these facts with regard to over 75 points covering the settled portions of all the territory included in the map. Blank lines at the different points are left for adding observations of future years. The map will be found a very interesting and valuable one to farmers and grain men in particular and business men generally. It is very interesting to know, for instance, what the observations for 12 years show to have been the experience at Moorhead; that on an average killing frost may be expected there by Sept. 12 in the fall; that it may be expected as late as May 20, and frosts have occurred in that locality as early as Aug. 25, and as late as June 8.

Burlington Scenery at the Fair.

If you have already visited the World's Fair, you have, no doubt, inspected the exhibits in the government building. If you have yet to make the tour, do not omit to see what Uncle Sam has to show in his own house. If you have been there, you missed one of the most interesting features if you did not devote a little time to the postoffice exhibit. Do you remember "Section 1, No. 10?" Those oil paintings of scenery on the upper Mississippi caught your eye, and you admired them, the more heartily that you were yourselves from the Northwest, and had perhaps made a good portion of the journey along the east bank of the great river, where are the original scenes of these paintings. Perhaps you came to Chicago on the trains of the Burlington Route, and it will interest you to know that this fine collection was loaned to the government, (by special request) by the passenger department of the Chicago, Burlington & Northern Railroad. For rates, map, time tables and any information concerning this popular route, address W. J. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn. If you have not yet been to the Fair, make a note of this exhibit and look it up while there.

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE
The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—In short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

THE STATE BUILDINGS.

New York's Is the Handsomest at the Fair.

PENNSYLVANIA'S IS ALSO FINE.

Great Preparations Being Made for the Keystone State's Day at the Exposition on Sept. 7—Virginia's Building a Reproduction of Washington's Home at Mount Vernon—Some Other Buildings.

WORLD'S FAIR, Aug. 18.—[Special.]—New York, as a matter of course, has the finest state building on the grounds, and it has been described in print, I suppose, about 300 times. I only mention it here to note the care with which everything about it is kept up and the general freshness, comfort and elegance of the place. All the fountains are running, and while they make the air seem cooler their gentle murmur gives a restful effect. All the flowers are blooming freshly, all the palms are cool and green, all the parlors are neat and elegant, there is plenty of room and the arrangements for correspondence are a little better than in any newspaper office I have recently worked in. Sept. 5 is set as the state day, when Governor Flower and many other great men will be here, but no formal programme has yet been agreed on.

Pennsylvania occupies an equal space just west of New York, and her building is almost equal to the latter's, these two fronting the Art galleries on the south, constituting the central nucleus of state buildings. Thursday, Sept. 7, is to be Pennsylvania's day and a most elaborate programme has been prepaired. All residents of the state and all sons and daughters of Pennsylvania, wherever resident, are urged to meet at the building about 10 a. m. and dedicating exercises will be held. Possibly the later exercises will be in one of the large halls. The state's thirty commissioners for this fair are all to be present. There will be prayer by Bishop Cyrus D. Foss and brief addresses by Governor Pattison, Lieutenant Governor Watres, Chief Justice Sterrett, Attorney General Hensel and Colonel A. K. McClure.

But this is only the official and smallest part of the proceedings. All the afternoon and evening will be filled with festivities, fireworks and fun, receptions and Pennsylvania reunions. The governor is to issue a proclamation calling the clans to Chicago and as he and his suite come across the country all the sons and daughters of the Keystone commonwealth are expected to fall in the rear so long as there are cars to haul them. At least so the enthusiastic natives say. Of course business will not be neglected, however, for that isn't the way of that state. More than one native there of her's said that no other commonwealth in the world is so little influenced by mere sentiment as Pennsylvania, and a veteran politician thereof once made this reply to a youth who inquired as to party management, "My son, go and study Pennsylvania."

A socio-politico-financial question which sets all Massachusetts to talking and writing and makes a campaign in Indiana a pretty fair imitation of civil war, which makes Iowa roar as if a prairie fire swept it and sets Kansas wild, raises scarce a ripple on the broad and placid bosom of Pennsylvania. It is said that the state has never had a fad or an ism or a great religious excitement outside of Philadelphia. Even her labor riots are on a strictly business basis. So it will be a delightful novelty to see her go wild and take the White City for one night. After much parading and music there will be Pennsylvania fireworks on the lake front and the wooded island. Four set pieces are being prepared for the lake front, from original designs in pyrotechnic art, which are expected to excel anything previously shown in America. They will represent "The Keystone," "The Pennsylvania Coat of Arms," "William Penn" and the word "Pennsylvania."

Virginia, by odd contrast with her neighbor, is probably the most sentimental state in the Union, and her building and all its belongings show it. It is, as all the world knows, a model or reproduction of the home of Washington at Mount Vernon, and it is filled with relics of colonial and revolutionary times. It is not designed for an exhibit or even a place of popular resort, except so far as the porches and open grove in the rear give ample room for the weary. Everything about the whole structure seems calculated to excite the softer and more tender emotions of patriotism, everything seems to say, remember the glorious past, respect the patriots and sages who are gone and strive to emulate their virtues. The Buckle who is to explain the curious differences between the Americans of various sections, will, when he comes, have one delightful task; it will be to explain how a region not quite 100 miles square, between the Blue Ridge and low tide water, has produced more presidents, generals and senators, more able orators in law, religion and politics, more state governors and more adventurous pioneers than any equal area in the same time since the golden age of Athens.

My first visit to Virginia's building was on the evening of her state day. General Fitzhugh Lee and Senator Daniel had held forth at Music hall and the evening reception was just beginning. Everybody and everything American was duly honored except the letter "r." The soft southern accent dispenses with that liquid consonant, and nowhere is that accent used with a greater charm than among the cultivated people of Virginia. The fact the state building is a reproduction of Washington's home makes it look small beside its neighbors. Iowa is to its right, as one looks north, and to the west and southwest are the territories. Crossing the avenue west of Utah's building (Brigham Young stands there in good likeness, but I do not see his wife about) and turning to the southwest with the winding walk one passes in succession the buildings of Texas, Kansas, North Dakota, Nebraska, South Dakota, Washington, Colorado and California to the right and those of various older states to the [illegible]

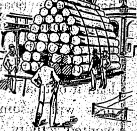
All these, be it noted, are in the extreme north end of the park, and Illinois alone has her state building [illegible] pond, as she is the only state [illegible] a complete exhibit in her state building. Washington and California have truly wonderful exhibits in big [illegible] and Michigan has [illegible] shapes, and just south of Machinery hall has a regular logging camp, an exact reproduction of one in the northern woods. It is the old fashioned double cabin of unhewn logs, that is two cabins connected by a covered open way, and about it are the adjuncts of the camp, including a "load."

Now it is alleged by the north Michiganders that all this pile of logs was hauled into camp last winter by a single team of horses over a road where the snow was so nicely beaten down that it was like ice, but as it contains fifty logs 18 feet long and weighing 144 tons, one naturally hankers for a sight of the sled and the figures as to the weight and pedigree of the team. However, these fellows say that on the smooth ice of those northern woods, when sleet and freezing and wearing have done their work, a child can shove along the heaviest two-horse sled. The logs make a sort of pyramid about 30 feet high and the lumberman's estimate is that they will work into 36,000 feet of lumber.

This camp and its adjuncts may be set down as a sort of second Michigan state building, for in it is shown the common life of a class which even yet is large, though growing smaller and destined to rapidly grow much smaller as the timber area is exhausted. It shows that the logger's life is not all labor and privation, for the cabin contains many comforts and the walls are thick set with photographs in rustic frames showing the wild and romantic scenery of the woods. They present pretty openings in the primeval forests, vistas among the tall pines and lovely dells to be found here and there along the streams. Log "booms" are pictured in the same streams which resemble the financial and real estate "booms" in this, that they often give way as suddenly as the latter do, and sometimes with fatal results to the loggers.



LOAD OF MICHIGAN LOGS.

Another exhibit which may be called a state adjunct is that of Mr. F. G. Logan, of Chicago, in the Anthropological building, which consists of stone implements and weapons of every stage represented in America. It might be called an adjunct of three states, for Mr. Horatio N. Rust began to make the collection while a boy in New Hampshire, continued it while a business man in Chicago and made immense additions to it while a resident of Pasadena, Cal. He finally sold it to Mr. Logan, who is a member of the board of trade of Chicago, and he has arranged it here in an order which illustrates the progress of the aborigine from his first choice of stones suitable to crack nuts or crush bones to get at the marrow, down to the polished flints at which, apparently, the native American stopped, unless one counts the Mound builders, who certainly used copper.

Primeval man, says the speculative scientist, came naked and bare into a world of toil and terror. On every side he saw dread phenomena, but had no idea of their cause. With him there could be no distinction between the natural and the supernatural, for he was as ignorant of the one as of the other. Of the reign of law he had no conception, but he did have clear ideas of one subject—the feelings of himself and his fellowmen. To him every motion had a motive. There was to him but one possible solution of what he saw going on about him—it was all the work of beings influenced by pleasure and anger and spurred on by hunger and love, like himself and his fellows. These beings must be propitiated at any cost, and so along with the rude pestle and mortar and flint arrowhead we find rude attempts to make something to please the gods. And as the dead chief was liable to turn into a god, or to need what he had needed in life, they buried all these things with him, and sometimes added a few dogs and wives and other slaves to be on the safe side.

Very poor judgment, indeed, in the savages, but very fortunate for our anthropologists. It was just the same as when a party of travelers in the wilderness leave at every camp part of their worn out materials and bits of bone indicating what they ate and how they cooked it. As we can track the travelers from camp to camp, so we can track the journey of man as a species from the day when he first selected a slightly hollowed stone in which to crack a cocoanut down to the time when steel first came into use. Mr. Logan's collection indicates that the "mitata" or grinding stone of the Indians was gradually hollowed out on top by long usage, that the savage then got a round pointed stone and pounded his acorns or grass seeds or bones in the cavity thus formed and so by a happy accident, as it were, the pestle and mortar was invented. That was brought to perfection and then another step was taken.

One specimen from southern California shows a bottomless basket fastened on to the rim of the mortar by a sort of tough plaster. This made a very complete affair indeed, and doubtless marked a great advance for those days. There are some very nice cooking vessels cut from solid stone, and the system employed probably was that of heating small white stones and dropping them into the mess often enough to keep it at a cooking heat. There are several stove lamps from northern California which the aborigines doubtless used with fish or animal oils and a piece of fibrous bark for a wick. Tomahawks and arrowheads, of course, are innumerable, as the condition was one of chronic war, and not only are there stone axes but stone spades and what seem to be plow points.

In my boyhood stone arrowheads were so plentiful on the Wabash hills that every boy had a store of them. Later they became valuable, but a few years ago a [illegible]

HIGHWAY DRAINAGE.

Information Concerning the Forms and Location of Underdrains.

There is no fixed rule for the construction of underdrains, says I. B. Potter in Good Roads. The primary object of this form of drain is to provide an underground channel which shall invite and carry off the surplus water which saturates the surrounding earth above the level of the drain. Any form of underdrain which permanently accomplishes this result is good, and a drain that is not permanently good might better have been left unmade. To construct a good drain requires no elaborate outfit, and the common sense selection and use of materials found in most neighborhoods will generally suffice.

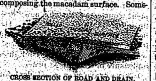
Draintile should be used if possible. It is cheap, plentiful and makes a permanent and substantial drain, insures an ample, uniform and constant channel for the flood of water and is far and away the best channel for ordinary road drainage that has yet come into common use.

In the matter of size a draintile having an inner diameter of 3 or 4 inches will generally be sufficient for the under drainage of a 30-foot roadway and in many soils of even a greater width. A greater diameter may always be used to advantage, and a 6-inch pipe is none too large to improve the condition of the roadway, since the larger pipe invites the entrance of warm air in spring and quickens the thawing of the frost and the drying of the earth which surrounds the pipe.

Draintiles should be carefully laid, and since this work is designed to be lasting and is always troublesome to repair it is best at the outset to give due attention to the work of making it permanent.

There is a variety of methods followed by different authorities in the making of tile drains, and most of them are good and none positively bad. It is idle to take sides in a controversy which serves no good end and settles no important difference. Tiles should be laid true to grade, evenly and substantially supported by the soil beneath and at the sides and covered in such manner as to prevent the introduction of silt, mud and other foreign substances into the interior of the pipe.

This is accomplished in most cases by a layer of straw or coarse marsh grass, over which is carefully placed a considerable depth of rubble or field stone and the whole topped off with a material composing the macadam surface. Sometimes the rubble or field stone is placed in direct contact with the pipe, being carefully laid against it on either side to support it in constant position, while at the top of the stone layer is placed a compact layer of sod, which serves to prevent the passage of earth through the loose stone and into the channel of the pipe.



CROSS SECTION OF ROAD AND DRAIN.

But excellent drains are often made without the use of draintile, and where tile cannot be readily obtained other methods may be substituted with advantage. In stiff, firm soils drainage has been very well effected by simply digging a uniform ditch of the proper depth, form and grade and filling it to a depth of two or three feet at the bottom with irregular bowlders and rough field stone of such size and shape as to insure a loose, open structure through which the water will readily pass. Over this is placed a layer of sod, straw or coarse marsh grass and the top finally completed with the material which forms the roadway surface.

A somewhat more elaborate yet vastly more efficient form of drain can be made by the use of rough stones and consists in the selection of flattened stones of a moderately uniform size and so laid at the bottom of the trench that the edges of adjacent stones rest against each other so as to form an angular opening through which the water may pass, as in the case of a draintile. The bottom or channel stones are then covered with coarse rubble or field stones, over which is placed the usual layer of sod, straw or coarse marsh grass, and the trench is then filled to the top with earth conveniently at hand.

Help From the Railroads.

A few of the railroad companies have definitely offered free transportation of materials for the construction of public roads. This could not be asked, of course, from the companies generally. But if they would take the matter into consideration as one of vital importance, in view of the fact that railroad transportation will be necessary for a great share of the materials used for road improvement, and establish such rates for road materials as they can well afford (regarding the same as a contribution on their part and proportionate to their interest) they would do more to promote the early success of road reform than can be done by any other agency in the country or by all others combined.

Legislators Slow to Act.

The agitation for the better roads has not yet accomplished its purpose in educating public opinion up to the stage of demanding improved highways in tones that our legislature will not presume to disregard. In the meantime some educational work can be done by individual townships improving the highways within their boundaries, but road improvement on a system needs a larger field and a wider scope. This cannot be obtained until we secure the necessary legislation.—Philadelphia Press.

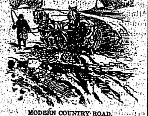
HIGHWAYS OF THE WORLD.

Our Own Poor Roads Are Without Parallel In the History of Civilization.

Pathless wildernesses are myths. Every habitable part of the world has its roads. Across the frozen plains of the far north among the peaks of rugged mountains, over broad and grassy prairies, through rich valleys and in the depths of tropic forests man has for centuries had his established roads.

Many of these are marked by signs so faint that the eye of civilized man can scarce discover them. With increasing use they become more marked until they are so wide and smooth that the blind could follow them.

Where men have beasts of burden their passing hoofs widen and smooth the trails, and bridle paths are made. That the packs may pass freely branches of trees are lopped off here and there, trees lying across the trail are cut away, easier grades are dug in some ascents, and rocks are occasionally removed when the burdened animals can neither get over nor around the obstruction. Few care to remove or to lessen difficulties after they are passed. Let those who would follow make their own way. With increase of traffic comes use of wheeled vehicles, and roads are widened and smoothed as much as may be necessary to allow passage when the conditions of weather are favorable. This is the evolution of the common wagon road.



MODERN COUNTRY ROAD.
[From Good Roads.]

As population increased and traffic grew roads improved in some countries until, where wise forethought was combined with great governing power, the public highways centuries ago reached a nearness to perfection never since surpassed, perhaps never equaled, by any people who had none of the aid given to modern mechanics by steam or explosives, and it is not clear that any nation which has such helps has ever surpassed the roadmaking of those ancients.

Growth of civil and of military power brought need of broad highways over which couriers could travel rapidly, armies move quickly and the plunder of conquered countries be transported easily to increase the power of the conquerors and add to the wealth, comfort and beauty of their central strongholds—home nests whence rapacious birds of prey swooped upon their victims.

Such were the great roads of Memphis, and of Babylon, and of the Roman empire. Such was the evolution of the wonderful highway system of that dauntless and wise nation of Americans who four centuries and more ago had roads which have never since been equaled in extent or in workmanship by any others in the western world and have never been surpassed by any of modern days.

Yet our need of such perfect highways is incomparably greater than theirs could have been. The aggregate of the distances we have to move the products of our farms, forests and factories over wagon roads is vastly greater than theirs was, and our climate and soil make our need of well drained, hard and smooth roads greater than theirs could have been.

The empire of the Incas had 10,000,000 inhabitants. In the United States are more than 60,000,000 people justly proud of their work in subduing the wilderness, of the progress they have made in art and in science and even of the government they have, and they haul millions of tons of bulky things to and from their farms each year over roads that are worse than those of any other great civilized nation. They have more products to move and farther to move them over common roads than has any other nation, and they pay in money, labor and time an enormous toll—a premium on gross incompetency in the management of a great public interest, a trust in which every member of this great family has a life interest and direct concern.

And yet the Americans are a rich and enterprising people. They have been quick to learn in other matters from the experiences of other nations. Why, then, should they not have at least as good roads as those other nations have.

D. E. VERAS.

Good Roads Gospel.

There is no gainsaying the proposition that bad roads are a deadener to business, to development, to material progress, and the southern states that are now considering in what way to encourage immigration in that direction could do nothing better than enter into a concerted movement for the construction of a highway system on permanent and substantial lines. There is no investment that will pay more largely in advancing property values, building up trade and inviting capital and settlement. The better the roads the more people will there be to travel over them.—Washington Post.

The Farmer Can't See It.

The importance of good roads is not appreciated by farmers. They do not seem to understand that one of the great obstacles to their prosperity is the almost impassable condition of the highways. It is a fact well worth noting that wherever there are good roads the farms have a thrifty appearance and the farmers are prosperous.—Savannah News.

WEALTHY CHILDREN.

HOW THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF THE RICH ARE BROUGHT UP.

Young People Who Travel All Over the Civilized World Without Interruption to Their Studies—Plain Food and Few Sweetmeats For Most of Them.

There are in the United States about 100 children who, upon arriving at the age of maturity, will come into the possession of very large fortunes. They will each have many millions of dollars. In fact one-sixth of the wealth of the United States is supposed to be in the hands of 20 millionaire families, and each child of each family will some day own the millions that have been accumulated for it by its parents and grandparents.

The parents of the children who will some day own one-sixth of all the wealth in this country are very careful about the training and the education of these fortunate youngsters. They are bringing them up as carefully as ever the children of the royal families of England and Germany were brought up. Their teachers are selected from the best in the world, and they are taught, disciplined and drilled in a wonderful way—a way that many children would consider very hard, strict and tiresome.

These millionaire children must be well trained, because they will control many of the railroads of America, telegraph companies, and gold, silver and oil mines, besides iron interests and other great industries.

As a rule they travel a great deal, and some of them have been over our whole country.

Take the Vanderbilt children for example. They are constantly on the go. In the summer they are at Newport. Later they visit Lenox. Then they go to Europe in a private steam yacht and return just in time to spend Christmas at home. From February until June they travel through the west in a private car.

But during all these trips their studies are uninterrupted. A corps of teachers, governess and private tutors accompany them everywhere. Their studies are no more disturbed by a departure for Mexico than a public school child's studies are disturbed by a hailstorm.

Some time ago Mr. Seward Webb and his wife and children journeyed to the World's fair in a special train. They stopped to visit Mexico, Texas and California first. During all this long trip the Webb children and some little cousins who accompanied them went on with their studies as usual. There was a special car just for that purpose. The car was called the "Idler," and it was gorgeously hung with blue tapestries and fine pictures. It had a blue carpet and blue chairs, and all its furnishings suggested a daintily appointed schoolroom rather than a railroad car.

While on such trips the children are taught geography from observation, and it is easy to see that they get a fine knowledge of the country which they will some day control to a great extent.

When the W. K. Vanderbilt children are at home they are taught in a schoolroom which is beautifully decorated with Mother Goose melodies and nursery rhymes. There are also simple quotations from Shakespeare for the older children. Nothing is spared to make the book education complete.

In their daily lives, their goings and their comings and their play, nearly all of the little American aristocrats are brought up alike. And that is with extreme simplicity. They dress with one-half the elegance of other children, and they eat plainer food. Such children as these wear no jewelry at all. They do not know what it is to have gold rings, bangle bracelets and necklaces. Nor do they carry watches.

Mrs. Paran Stevens, who is a very rich woman, says that her daughter, who is now the wealthy Mrs. Arthur Paget of London and New York, went wild with delight over a simple little ring given to her when she was 18. It was her very first bit of jewelry.

Mrs. Whitney, the wife of ex-Secretary Whitney, used to make it a point to take her lunch at the children's dinner hour, and it was then that she took occasion to teach her little ones by precept and example the little elegances of manner which mark the well bred person. Mrs. Flagler, the wife of the rich Standard Oil man, goes farther and often lunches with her children in their schoolroom and devotes many hours to personal instructions.

But of course the daily life of rich children is not all discipline. Though they do not have candy and jewelry and rich clothes and rich food, they have luxuries which other children do not have. They own beautiful horses and fine dogs, all of the best breeds. A millionaire boy has his saddle horse and often his tandem team when at his country home, and some of these boys have a four in hand. When one of these boys wants a new horse, he buys one or selects one from his father's stables. He has a kennel of dogs, besides rare birds and other pets. And if he wants to own a collection of stamps or stones or butterflies or any other one thing, his father gives him money to buy the best that can be bought.

When young William Astor Chanler, who is now exploring the heart of Africa, was spending his summers at Lake George not many years ago, he was seized with a fancy for owning boats of all kinds. He wanted canoes, duck-boats, yachts and launches.

And he got them all. But the children of the neighborhood used to say that "poor Willie Chanler" was never allowed to buy soda water or candy. One day the temptation to buy candy became too strong for the boy millionaire, and he marched boldly into a candy store with a company of Lake George boys at his heels.

"Give me 25 cents' worth of candy," said he, "and charge it to William A."—New York Press.

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in informing you of the very beneficial results which have followed the use of DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE in the case of myself and wife. For a year I was subject to a distressing pain at the base of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord. I lost flesh and was greatly troubled with sleeplessness. Your Nervine was highly recommended to me. My case had been so obstinate that I had no confidence in the efficacy of any medicine. Yet as a last resort I consented to give it a trial. Much to my surprise, I experienced marked benefit; my sleeplessness disappeared; my headache was removed; my spirits and general health greatly improved. I soon gained twenty pounds. All this occurred after learned and well known physicians had failed. My wife is taking the Nervine with the best of results. LOUIS D. VANDERVERE.

IT is said by some politicians that congress will soon repeal the Sherman bill and adjourn early in October.

THE financial situation for the past week is said to be slowly improving. The steady influx of gold from Europe is having its effect.

CONGRESSMAN L. FLETCHER has been appointed a member of one of the best committees in the house. It is not often that your Uncle Loren gets left.

John Starr who recently bought the Fisher Bulletin, is getting out a good paper, besides attending to his large mercantile establishment. The Bulletin is a good property, and its owner expects to make some money out of it.

The attendance at the World's Fair is increasing, the visitors being principally the middle class from the rural districts. Every day the railroads bring in train-loads of excursionists, and the attendance will probably increase from now till the end of the fair—October 31st.

THE Red Lake Falls News under the management of P. and J. Meehan, has been removed to Thief River Falls and is called the Thief River Falls News. What Polk county needs more than anything else is a few more papers—only seventeen publications in the county now.

THE National German American Bank of St. Paul will resume business, reducing its capital stock one half and by giving depositors and creditors certificates payable at stated intervals. The elegant bank building at the corner of Fourth and Robert streets is to be sold, and other economic measures are to be adopted.

EDITOR MATTSON, of the Warren Sheaf, commenting on the advice of Comptrollor Eckles, who wants the people not to hoard their money, declares that he is not hoarding a cent. This is probably the condition of nine-tenths of the newspaper men of the country—they never hoard their wealth—and still the financial depression continues.

The Great Northern railway lately made a reduction in the salaries of its employes, which will save about $1,250,000 per annum to the company, and Jim Hill says it is not owing to the hard times, but "the fulfillment of a long continued plan of economy." The probabilites are that the hard times affect the Great Northern as much as any other road, and the stock has been kept up simply by the close business policy which Mr. Hill instils into every department of the road.

IT seem that the report of the appointment of a receiver for the Northern Pacific road was true in this case. This will, however, make no difference in the operating of the road. It will be run just the same and kept right up to its present excellent standing. The receivers have confirmed the appointment of J. W. Kendrick as general manager of the road. The headquarters of the receiver will be in Milwaukee.

THE main cause of the appointment of receivers for the Northern Pacific railway is said to be that a syndicate that agreed to take care of the floating indebtedness of $9,985,526, failed to make good the subscriptions. This, coupled with the depression in business, made the appointment of receivers necessary in order to save the road. The Northern Pacific has paid as high a dividend as eleven per cent, and by the time that this financial depression has passed away and the wheels of industry are again put in motion, the water will have been squeezed out of the stock and with careful management the road can again be made to pay a dividend.

THE National Encampment, G. A. R. begins at Indianapolis on Sept. 5th. But few will go from here.

IT is now rumored that President Cleveland is very much out of health which would account for his absence from Washington at this time.

THE story goes that Lewis Baker is soon to leave Nicaragua to accept a job at Honolulu. As Baker is a lulu himself he would fit all right.

JUDGE FRED HOOKER is very sick at his home in Minneapolis and is not expected to recover. His illness is the result of La Grippe.

THE Farmers' Alliance in Georgia shows a falling off of one-half since the people's party was organized, and this condition of things is true everywhere except, perhaps, in Minnesota.

Wheat during the past week has been improving under heavy export orders making a gain 1¼ cents. If the wheat in Minnesota and Dakota could all be stacked and not thrown upon the market from the shock it would help the price wonderfully.

IT is thought that three of the robbers of the St. Paul First National bank are in the clutches of the law. Three men were arrested in Chicago, and it is said that the authorities are sure that they are the men wanted and that they can be convicted. All of which is very gratifying news.

THERE is said to be a plan on foot to consolidate the Northern Pacific with the Great Northern railroad, with J. J. Hill at the head of the new concern. As yet nothing but vague rumors are afloat but the JOURNAL would not be surprised at such a consummation—not greatly to be desired, we should say.

THE republicans of Iowa have at last concluded that they must drop the prohibition plank in their platform in order to be successful in politics, and at their state convention held on the 16th, inst. they adopted a platform in which they declare that "prohibition is no test of republicanism." In other words a man may be an anti-prohibitionist and yet be a republican. This action will unite the party, and a grand republican victory is sure to follow. Frank D. Jackson was nominated as their candidate for governor.

THE financial stringency that has existed since the legislature decided to build a new capitol, emphasizes the many objections to the scheme that were urged while the bill was pending and affords a valid excuse for delay in carrying out the scheme. Should the matter be allowed to wait until another session of the legislature it might result in such a modification of the plans as would allow the Midway district to come in and offer the state a site free gratis. It would give the taxpayers a chance to get into better shape to bear the burden imposed, and it could not delay the work much under the original plan as that does not contemplate completion inside of ten years.

THE lessons of the past three months will not have been wholly in vain if people have learned, through them the fact that all should strive at all times to live within their incomes. It is a fact that has no small significance in this present crisis that many have forgotten their homely fare and have been living way beyond their means, because they have been able to obtain the necessary credit to do so. If a person has an income of but $300 per annum it is a safe rule to adopt to save at least one-third of it and if he is so situated that he can save more, so much the better. The habit of living beyond one's income is a bad one and is responsible for much of the distress now existing.

STATE TREASURER BOBLETER has issued his annual statement for the year ending July 31, 1893. The main feature relates to the state debt, which is shown to have been reduced from $2,051,734.77 to $1,971,806.89 during the past year, or $80,427.88. Under the new law the state funds are this year distributed among seventy-three banks. The statement is as follows:

Cash in treasury July 31		$2,634,138 79
Investments in State Funds—
Permanent school fund at		10,889,489 79
Permanent university fund		1,026,684 28

In times of financial depression it is best to look upon the [illegible] This way of figuring from the Pioneer Press is comforting. It is just as certain as day follows night that good times are coming soon. The very severity and long duration of the financial stringency, with its immense curtailment of production makes certain a speedy restoration of business activity to fill the voids created by the constancy of human wants. The actual wealth of the country, its capital, its resources, its capacity of production and consumption remain unimpaired. The volume of money is the same as before. Nothing is lost but confidence, which means credit and with confidence restored money will rush in confluent streams into all the channels of business activity and capital and labor will join hands in making things hum again.

THE Midway News is keeping up its fight against the purchase of a capital site in St. Paul. It is certainly the most absurd and profligate idea to force the state to buy a site at an exorbitant price, when Minneapolis, Midway and other equally accessible points offer to donate a site. If St. Paul will not do likewise, then let the capital commission wait until the next legislature can repeal the three-quarter mile limit clause, and then a suitable location can soon be found—without money and without price. Capital cities in other states have contributed not only the site, but many of them money besides. Take Bismark, North Dakota, for instance. With a population of about 3000, the citizens contributed—by private subscription—$100,000 and procured a free site for the capital. If the capital is worth nothing to St. Paul, then let some other place have it that will appreciate it enough to donate a site.

A Journalistic Blot.

Sauk Centre Avalanche: A. R. Holston, a populist, who runs a hotel at Crookston, acts as county attorney for Polk county, and essays to edit a people's party paper, in Crookston, is another blot on the field of journalism. His review of the president's message smacks of ignorance, and the language used stamps his paper as one unfit to enter the home of respectable people, but it does one good thing—shows the calibre and style of the man and bespeaks him as being one from the slums where profane and indecent language makes up the subject matter of conversation.

South Carolina Alliance.

The state alliance of South Carolina held its sixth annual session on July 27th. Its retiring president, M. L. Donaldson made an address in which he reviewed the order from the time it took shape in the west, fourteen years ago, its growth and achievements, its place in the arena of organizations, its power and its influence. He was candid in saying that up to the opening of the late national election the progress and growth of the farmers alliance was steady, rapid and healthy, but the zeal of many of their leaders outran their knowledge when they attempted to form a new political party through the medium of the organization. Mr. Donaldson, on this topic said:

"Then it was that the onward progress was checked. The sudden deflection from the true methods as plainly marked out in the constitution for its government brought the entire order, from Maine to California, to almost a standstill. Like a great cloud moving slowly over a dry and thirsty land, showering blessings down upon all, it was met by adverse winds of partisan politics and scattered into fragments. This is the condition in which the order finds itself to-day, and the causes which I have briefly stated are those which have led to that condition. The alliance of South Carolina, I am proud to state, has held fast to her moorings, and has weathered the storm thus far with less damage perhaps than that of any other state. No disturbing influence, either external or internal, has yet had enough force to seriously disrupt the organization, and in my opinion, for intelligent conception of its true principles and purposes and loyalty to those principles, the South Carolina farmers alliance stands as the typical state alliance of the union. This enviable position can only be maintained by a continued and complete divorcement of the alliance, as such, from partisan politics, nor are the rights and privileges of its members curtailed thereby, but on the contrary enlarged. The guarantee of perfect freedom in political and religious views is necessarily the bulwark of safety to the alliance in common with every secret organisation of which I have any knowledge. The voice of the alliance is advisory and not mandatory."

Dear Sir:—Allow me to compliment your company through these lines for the perfect comfort, the beautiful scenery, the smoothness of its road-bed, and the great speed, which make traveling on your lines a pleasure of the highest order.

I have traveled a good deal for the last year, both in Europe and America, but I do not know that I have ever enjoyed a trip on a railroad more than a recent trip from Minneapolis to La Crosse.

The scenery along the great Father of Waters, is such a magnificent and such a varied one, that one forgets it late or never. The reclining chairs and the well equipped cars are all of the best that I have ever met with. The usual smoke, dust and dirt, which make traveling a hardship on most roads, are entirely absent on yours. I remain,

Yours very truly,

Reduced rates on all railroad lines have been secured for the Minneapolis Exposition, which is to be held this year from September 6 to October 7.

Under the excellent management of W. M. Brackett, last year's Exposition was a great success. Mr. Brackett is again at the helm, and has the entire business community of Minneapolis behind him.

We are informed that the exhibits at this year's Exposition will surpass those at any of the proceeding seven displays at the "Flour City."

The President of the Norwegain "Storthing"

Viggo Ullmann, the radical leader of the liberal party in Norway and president of the Norwegian "Storthing" (parliament), will deliver two lectures in Crookston, and probably in two or three other cities in this part of the state, about the middle of September. One lecture will be on the political situation in Norway and the one on the latest Norwegian literature. Notice of the exact time place will be given in this paper and in the "Red River Dalen" of Crookston Minn.

I have one or two choice young Jersey cows for sale. Who wants them? Also will sell one or two Jersey heifers should anybody desire to purchase. For particulars inquire of H. E. Cooke at the JOURNAL office.

Place of Great Attraction at the Exposition.

PICTURES OF THE VIRGIN MARY.

The Painter Invariably Makes Her According to His Own Nationality—The Impressions of One Who Is Completing His Education in Art—Interesting Relics of Ancient Art from India.

WORLD'S FAIR, Aug. 25.—[Special.]—I have been very industrious lately, completing my education in art, and the first point I mastered—that is to say, got it down fine—was that art has at least one striking resemblance to literature of the newspaper sort. It is this: There is just one first-class way to do a thing, perhaps two or three so so ways, and then about a thousand bad ways. And the average beginner, he who is not a wonderful genius, does not know which is the bad way till he has tried it once or twice. People often say, "There is a right way and a wrong way to do anything." It's a great mistake. There may be but one right way, but there are very many wrong ways. And the more artistic a job might be the more wrong ways there are to do it.

I find also that the persons who go oftenest to the Art palace have their own definition of art. It does not mean painting or sculpture only. It means anything in which thought or a sense of beauty is fixed in a visible form, and so they class all sorts of things in gold, silver, bronze, leather, wood, glass, and even butter, tallow and lard, as works of art. There is a lard hog in one of the exhibits to which a friend called my attention as a curious work of art. Says I, "Do you call that art. To me it is almost repulsive." Says he, "That's the beauty of the hog—it is artistically ugly." I had not thought of that. In the same class I suppose belongs the ivory "Ganesa" in the Hindoo exhibit. It looks to me like a fat woman with an elephant's head on her, but they say it is art. But to return to the Art palace.

All the cultured ones I know say that this exhibit shows how modern painters are rapidly coming to care less about mere beauty than the expression of truth and that as this goes on painting is popularized. Sculpture moves much more slowly in the same direction. Pursuant to advice of a cultured friend I attempted to see and understand all the pictures of the Virgin, and when I got through with it the only really clear idea I had about them was that expressed once by Mark Twain—that the painter had invariably made her a Dutch, a French, an English or woman of some other people according to his own nationality, but not one had ever made her what she was—a Jewess. The question at once rose in my mind—is it the same with the pictures of Christ? I examined many more carefully and found that several painters had given Him a really Jewish cast of face, somewhat idealized of course; but why this distinction between the Christ and the Virgin I cannot imagine. It is of course absurd to suppose that Mary looked like a stout, blonde Flemish woman, but she is so represented in several pictures here.

I note also that as there are many more wrong ways than right ways, so there are very few types of beauty and many of ugliness. Those who picture ugliness therefore have an immense advantage. I wonder if this is the reason why any schoolboy can draw a caricature of the teacher while not one in a hundred can make even a passable outline drawing of the girl he likes. They tell me that in the American section there is no really distinct type of female beauty and that many years will probably pass before we have one, but of my own knowledge I haven't the thing down that fine yet. In the British section these same cultured friends go into raptures over a picture by Frederick Leighton representing the daughters of Hesperus with the dragon, and say the female forms present the truly ideal beauty. The picture is indeed beautiful, but it is evident that the Hesperides are "quite English."

I have, as aforesaid, some very cultured friends in Chicago, and they all agree that a certain "Psyche" in the German section (the catalogue credits it to Paul Thumann) is absolutely free from any trace of a race or local type—that is, it presents the purely ideal woman. I am therefore using it for educational purposes and am beginning to flatter myself that I see what they mean. It is a delicately outlined blonde figure, with gossamer wings, leaning over the water to see the reflection therein, and every group of women who come near it break out in exclamations of delight. As to working one's nationality into a picture I think the French are more given to that than the English and Americans, especially in military scenes. So far as I have examined their great victories show in the pictures that they were victories, but in the scenes of 1870 there is nothing to show which side whipped. On second thought, however, I do not remember seeing in any of our capitols a picture of Americans running from British or Mexicans or Indians, though they certainly did it a few times. As to all the rest of the 5,000 and odd pictures in the Art palace, of course they have "tone" and "depth" and "finish" and "chiaro-oscuro" and all the other things pictures ought to have. And this is all I know (and considerable more) of high art at present.

The relics of ancient art interest me aside from any idea of beauty because they represent so much history, and in the Anthropological building is one very curious collection of articles discovered only two years ago. It is supposed to be the remains of a school of art which was founded in the extreme northwestern part of India during the short period the Greeks held that region. Perhaps it is only the result of an overflow of Greek ideas from Persia during the period that Alexander's successors ruled there. At any rate it shows an overlapping, so to speak, of Greek forms, faces and ideals on a Buddhist basis. To put it in [illegible] words the figures show Buddhist ceremonies and indicate that to have been the faith the artist meant to gratify, but he has either followed Greek models or was so far a Greek that he worked his nationality into the figures, just as these Dutch painters have made the Virgin Mary a stout blonde.

The most [illegible] which Surgeon Captain Stoney [illegible] British army found in [illegible] thirteen fig[illegible] on a throne, over him a lotus leaf canopy. He is pouring oil on the head of a boy and the attendant priests are conducting the religious ceremonies. The action is Hindoo, but the faces are Greek. Another figure, unearthed by H. C. Thomson just after Surgeon Stoney's discovery had caused a general search, represents an orator. It is pure Greek throughout, face, form and costume and is so much like the famous statue of Demosthenes at Athens that some think it represents that orator. As the find was in the Peshawer district which Alexander conquered in 330 B. C. this is not entirely improbable, though from their political relations I cannot see why the conqueror should have had that orator commemorated there.

Buddhism is always to be spoken of with profound respect because it is the faith of one-third of the human race, but it certainly is not a very artistic faith. And looking on this odd combination of the art of one nation with the faith of another I am again impressed with the old, old problem: How did it happen that a faith so lightly held, if indeed it could be called a faith, as the mythology of the ancient Greeks, gave form to the most beautiful and most enduring of all developments of art? With a sort of rude humor the exhibitors have surrounded these beautiful and curious figures with the queerest array of unsightly gods in the whole building. There are gods of stone, wood, bone, shells and feathers, and some that look like sun-baked mud, from the south seas and Alaska, from the Maoris of New Zealand and the Gaboon in Africa. They are classed, however, as objects of superstition, not of art.

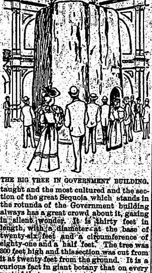
It requires no education in art to appreciate the big trees which are so numerous here. They appeal equally to the untaught and the most cultured and the section of the great Sequoia which stands in the rotunda of the Government building always has a great crowd about it, gazing in silent wonder. It is thirty feet in length, with a diameter at the base of twenty-six feet and a circumference of eighty-one and a half feet. The tree was 300 feet high and this section was cut from it at twenty feet from the ground. It is a curious fact in giant botany that on every part of that great mountain range, that is on the western slope, and at about the same elevation, big timber grows, from far down in California to far up in British Columbia.



THE BIG TREE IN GOVERNMENT BUILDING.

In the northern part of California I once journeyed seventy miles through a forest where, so far as I could see, no axe had ever been used. The trees ranged from one to ten feet in diameter, with a few much larger; they rose about 100 feet without a limb and their spreading tops were so thickly joined that for an hour's travel at a time one never found the sun's rays striking the earth. Far above the sighing of the wind was heard and the higher branches could be seen swaying before it, but down among the mammoth trunks there was a dead calm. Now vast strips of that wonderful region bear nothing but stumps, but the figures in the Washington building still claim 23,000,000 acres of unbroken forest for that state, on which are still standing the raw materials of 410,000,000,000 feet of sound inch lumber, worth as it stands $260,000,000. "And," adds one exhibitor with grim humor, "your goll derned congress can't demonetize that."

Mrs. Mary Miller, who owns a generous tract of this tall timber, selected the straightest and prettiest "stick" she could find on her land for a flagstaff for the Washington building. It is straight as an arrow and was 228 feet long, but in bringing it down to the railroad twenty-three feet was broken off, so, as they say, "our state has to put up with a little weed of a flagstaff only 205 feet high." More than one-fourth the entire population of the state depends on the lumber industries for labor and business, but as 1,000,000 acres of splendid coal lands are already located and opened enough to prove them, and there is much more, that interest must eventually be greater. The big trees of California are shown in many places and the whole Forestry building is itself an exhibit, being composed of every kind of logs and bark from every state in the Union. It illustrates the forestry wealth of the world in a general way and of the United States in complete detail.

It is observable that each day for special state, race or national exhibit increases in interest. Today is for the colored people, tomorrow for Missouri, the 30th for the grocers and the 31st for the Netherlands and the Ottoman empire, but no extensive programmes are made out. Sept. 1 is Nicaragua day and Sportsman's day. On the 4th comes the Welsh Eisteddfod which will be a wonderful affair, of course. The games of all nations and races excite universal interest and as such performances increase so the attendance increases.

One of the most magnificent views of the fair is from Lake Michigan at night. Steaming down from the city, the shore lights gleam and twinkle all the way and the fair itself is an illumined dream. The fireworks cast red lights on the enormous white buildings and the peristyle stands glowing against the lighted grand basin, with its surmounting statues outlined against the drifting smoke. Shouts of the crowds on shore float out across the iridescent waves, the crash of bombs re-echo doubly [illegible] and the smoke from [illegible] takes on odd fantastic shapes [illegible]

FRENCH WOMEN JOURNALISTS.

Some Are Ranked Among the Notables of Paris—Their Work and Manners.

The newspaper women of France are comparatively few. They are constantly accused of a total lack of the critical faculty and of a want of perception of the ridiculous. Furthermore, their ideas on ethics and philosophy are said to be "stale." Nevertheless it is true that their contributions to magazines and periodicals are impatiently awaited and widely read, after which many of the masculine writers go into mental convulsions and tear their vocabularies in tatters in trying to prove that these feminine effusions were worse than worthless.

The women who, in spite of this, persist in writing do not have sinecures. Not long ago at a celebrated criminal trial a woman journalist presented herself at the court as the judiciary reporter of a leading morning newspaper in Paris. The police are said to have been aghast when Mme. Severine drew forth her pad and pencil and demanded admission to the press tables. The guards were somewhat taken aback, and, with a deplorable lack of French chivalry, wanted to turn her away. But, by wit or wiles of some sort, she gained her point and cleared a pathway for all women reporters who shall come after her.

Mme. Edmond Adam is another woman journalist, perhaps the leading one in Paris. She is a politician, author and editor. She has been honored by the municipality of Paris in having her name given to one of the streets of the capital, an honor rarely bestowed on a person during his lifetime. It isn't much of a street, to be sure, the Rue Juliette Lamber but it is young and may grow some day. Under Napoleon III Mme. Adam had a salon in opposition to the imperial government, and there she reigned. She was young and handsome then, with soft, pretty hair and bright blue eyes. She was an intense republican and a great friend of Garibaldi. At the close of the Franco-Prussian war she had no one in France to particularly oppose, so she selected Bismarck. Such phrases as these have been attributed to her: "Bismarck and me!" "Bismarck was to have been overthrown by me!" "At last the czar condescends to follow my political views!" She is a good speaker and can talk on almost any subject. Her dinners are decidedly interesting. One-fourth of her guests are usually officers of the French army, another fourth is composed of political men, and the others are artists and literary people. The dinners are usually followed by receptions, which are attended by cabinet ministers, deputies, senators, diplomats and journalists. There are, except on special occasions, few women.

Mme. Severine is both more valiant and more sentimental than Mme. Adam. Severine, as she is familiarly called, is a well known figure in Paris. She has been nicknamed Mamzelle Gavroche and Jenny L'Ouvriere, and although she is much given to literary floods of tears, she writes vigorously and well. She has her own particular conceptions of good and evil. Severine imbibes her political views from The Cri du Peuple (The Voice of the People), and Mme. Adam drinks of the fountain of La Republique Francaise, founded by Gambetta. Severine's ambition is to secure the abolition of capital punishment.

Mme. Yver is a curious figure in the newspaper world. She frequents the prefecture of police, and is remarkable for her persistent praise of the police and the justice they dispense. "Good," in her mind, is represented by the prefect of police, the detectives and the gendarmes, but never by the prisoners.

Gyp is another woman journalist, but her name—Mme. de Martel—is better known in connection with novels on Parisian high life and as author of a few comedies. She is a noted contributor, in a very light vein, to that lively publication, La Vie Parisienne. Gyp is popular, and, besides being a writer of great talent, paints with success.

Perhaps the most successful newspaper women in Paris are those who write about the thing they know best—fashions. But men are encroaching somewhat upon this territory, and altogether woman's place in French journalism is not all that could be desired.—New York Sun.

Why Is It?

Why is it that a woman can struggle until she is red in the face and worn out both in temper and body by a window in a railroad train in her vain endeavors to close or open it when all that a man has to do is to walk up and go over exactly the same line of action that she has already exhausted, and down comes the refractory window in a jiffy? It is a most humiliating fact, but a very true one nevertheless, that not five women out of a dozen ever succeed in arranging a window to their satisfaction. They pull and tug until they are embarrassed, and finally, in a pleading manner, look around at some slip of a man, who without any nonsense brings about the desired effect, while the woman looks on in silent wonder at his marvelous skill and dexterity.—Philadelphia Times.

Birds Enjoy a Shower Bath.

A friend reports a pretty incident. During the hot, dry weather the birds about her house were apparently much in need of bathing places, and the lady discovered this recently when she went out to water her flowers. A little bird hovered about as if he wanted something. Presently he revealed what he did want by getting under the sprinkling of the water, just beneath the dripping plants, and fluffing his feathers in this shower bath just as he would in a pool, and plainly enjoying it in the highest degree. He began to watch for the daily coming of the lady to water her plants and gave himself up to his bath with gay abandon.—Boston Transcript.

A View of the Common Herd.

The society journal Vogue has as one of its correspondents an alleged member of the "Four Hundred," who writes as follows: "What is the attraction yearly at the horse show, which is always jammed to its doors? The horses? No. Society in the boxes, and the people cheerfully pay their money to be able to gaze at the beings so far removed from them, constituting an inner circle. It was this feeling which caused Broadway to be choked with a howling mob on the day of the wedding of Miss Bradley-Martin to the Earl of Craven, and it is this same impulse which prompts the crowds in the upper tiers at the opera and in the orchestra stalls to spend the time of the intermissions in gazing around the house at the fashionables as if they were waxwork from Mme. Tussaud's or the Eden Musee and following them up by aid of the little printed list on the bill, whereby each box owner is conveniently numbered and catalogued.

"We stand as royalty does abroad, and we are prepared for this homage. Those who cannot see us read of us, but unfortunately frequently through the medium of writers who commence their observations in the style of one who a few years ago started his paragraph in this way, 'I dropped in at Mrs. Astor's last night,' and evoked, consequently, the pungent reflection of Mr. Joseph Howard, Jr., a writer of the people, who evidently knew his man:

"'Dropped in at Mrs. Astor's! Good heavens! for what—the ash barrel?'"

Washington's Cabin.

There are few buildings that attract the admirers of Washington that have more of interest in them than a decaying cabin which stands alone in an old pasture field a half mile from Berryville, in the [illegible] valley of Virginia.

The old [illegible] the home of Washington when [illegible] a surveyor. He came here direct from the maternal roof to begin the arduous and at the time dangerous work of surveying the lands of Thomas, Lord Fairfax, who owned all the northern part of Virginia under the king's patent. The work was arduous because of the physical aspect of the country, then a dense wilderness, and dangerous because of the character of the inhabitants, who were principally Indians or scarcely less wild trappers or squatters upon his lordship's domain.

Washington had been selected by the nobleman because of his belief in the youth's ability to cope with these elements early in 1748, just after the completion of his sixteenth year, his only companion being George William Fairfax, nephew of old Lord Thomas.

Whether these boys erected the building or found it already in place history does not state, but well authenticated tradition says that they built it themselves. That they used it for an office, kept their instruments there and slept in the upper room there is ample proof.—Washington Post.

Cementing the Russian Empire.

The czar of Russia shows undoubted sagacity in adopting the best physical means to hold together his vast empire. He has pushed the transcaspian military railway southeastward until it has almost reached the frontiers of British India and China, the two powers most likely to dispute with him the acquisition of further dominion in Central Asia. Having thus assured the safety of the Russian position in the southeast, he has undertaken a more stupendous work in beginning the construction of an unbroken line of railway to connect European Russia with a port on the Pacific ocean. The whole length of the Asiatic or main Siberian line is 4,800 miles.

The estimated cost is $200,000,000. The work, which is now progressing from both ends toward the center, is to be completed in about 10 years. There will then be a stretch of railway, all located upon Russian territory, about 6,000 miles in length, holding European Russia and Asiatic Russia firmly together with a continuous band of steel. Until the proposed railway running north and south to connect the two Americas shall have been built there will be nothing on earth to rival this great stretch of eastern and western railway across the Russian empire.—Omaha Bee.

Folly of Hoarding.

It is really remarkable that so many people in this country, who have funds from which they might earn a good rate of interest, persist in locking up notes in safe deposit vaults or pack them away in old stockings. Money will earn today large returns, with the best of real estate security as first class collateral to protect the lender, and yet a great many individuals, waiting for they know not what, decline to take advantage of what is an unusual opportunity for making money. The currency of a country is intended to circulate as evidence of credit. If it does not, it becomes absolutely useless to everybody. In a famine a community would be no better off if it locked up millions of barrels of flour than if it had none at all. The same is precisely true of money.—Washington News.

Browning to Coleridge.

Browning loaned Lord Coleridge one of his works to read, and afterward, meeting the poet, the lord chief justice said to him: "What I could understand I heartily admired, and parts ought to be immortal. But as to much of it I really could not tell whether I admired it or not, because for the life of me I could not understand it." Browning replied, "If a reader of your caliber understands 10 per cent of what I write, I think I ought to be content."—San Francisco Argonaut.

A Hard Conundrum.

Of the 1,300,000,000 or 1,400,000,000 of people populating the earth how many may be said to dominate it? The direction of all affairs is still in the hands of more or less than 10,000 men and women [illegible]

THE JUDGMENT DAY.

ITS NEAR APPROACH HAS BEEN MANY TIMES PREDICTED.

In All Ages Convulsions of Nature Have Produced Popular Alarms—How Lieutenant Totten Interprets the Signs of the Times—He Foresees the Millennium.

Few facts in history are more remarkable than the periodicity of popular alarms about the approach of the end of the world and the day of judgment. The signs accepted as portentous of the last great cataclysm have been many and various, and men have never been lacking to take advantage of the delusion for the furtherance of objects dear to them, and even for their own financial profit. To the long prevalence of a scare of this kind more than to any other cause may be attributed the great revival of interest in religious matters during the tenth century and the erection of many of the churches and other ecclesiastical edifices that remain today as mute but eloquent architectural testimonies of men's faith in Christianity's saving power.

Wars, famines, pestilences, eclipses, comets and earthquakes have all more than once been among the immediate causes of these popular panics, but history shows that whether they became general or were merely local they always had the assistance of prophets who based their dire predictions on the still older prophecies of holy writ. The Christians of the first century believed quite generally that the end would come within a hundred years of the birth of Christ. When that epoch had passed, they began to date from the time of the ascension, and when this period was also completed they looked forward to the fall of the Roman empire as the critical juncture in mundane affairs.

LIEUTENANT TOTTEN.

But the empire fell and the end came not, and once again the prophets were forced to revise their predictions. They then fell back upon the twentieth chapter of Revelation and taught that the church would reign for a thousand years and that then "satan would be bound" for another thousand years, after which judgment and the end would come.

This put the disaster far off in the future and immediately found enthusiastic believers. But time moved on and the tenth century approached; to the dismay of millions who had gained but a dim idea of the millennial doctrine and misapprehended its purport for the idea that the end was to come in 1,000 years. Once more the prophets turned loose their eloquence, once more the miseries that fell upon the population of Europe seemed to justify the conclusion that the prophets were correct, and once more the subsequent prophets were able to point out the mistakes of those who had preceded them.

Ever since then there have been believers in the millennial doctrine, and various dates have been set for the "accomplishment of the prophesies," and still the world wags on. But there have been a number of alarms during the intervening centuries that had no necessary connection with this doctrine except it might be on the general ground that it predisposed people to be panicky. Most of these were but of local influence, but several became quite general. One in the sixteenth century was occasioned by a German astronomer named Stoffler, who was also an astrologer. He predicted that on Feb. 20, 1524, there would be a second deluge, and not a few people believed him.

The famous eclipse of 1654 produced another panic principally because people did not understand eclipses very well then, and the great comet of 1679, which was visible for six months, occasioned yet another. The disastrous earthquake in 1755, known as the Lisbon earthquake, also impressed many people with the idea that the end of the world was imminent, and most of the great quakes since then have produced the same effect.

The Millerite delusion is still remembered by many people as an event of their youth and had the advantage or disadvantage of having four different years set for its fulfillment—1842, 1847, 1848 and 1857. Since then various other times have been fixed upon by believers in the millennial theory, the latest and consequently the most interesting by Lieutenant C. L. A. Totten of the United States army, formerly a professor in Yale university, whose theory has brought him a good deal of notoriety during the past four years.

Lieutenant Totten, however, does not believe that the end of the world is near, nor does he accept the common belief as to the day of judgment. The earth, he thinks, will abide forever, and the day of judgment is a period of seven years which has already commenced and will end in the spring of 1899, when the dawn of the millennium will be ushered in. The recent trouble in the financial world afforded him opportunity for his latest jeremiad. "Things will not get better," he says, "but worse. We are approaching the crisis which must precede the millennium. These troubles are world wide. They will not down. They mean disaster to rotten institutions, the bursting of all inflated enterprises, the exposure of deceits of every description and the trial as by fire of every man's work [illegible]

A Gleam of Sunshine.

I stood in the great courtyard of Sing Sing prison two days before the famous escape of Roehl and Pallister. The genial keeper had shown us everything and everybody of the hundreds of prisoners save the fatal five in the condemned cells. We had seen the workshops, the dining room, the tiny sleeping apartments, the chapel painted by a convict's pencil with scenes from the "Prodigal Son." As we turned to go away the attendant called to me:

"Look yonder."

There was a little girl, the daughter of an official of the prison, surrounded by three men in stripes. How they kissed her innocent face and almost worshiped her as she stood among them with the sunlight playing around her slender form!

"Strange thing, sir, but these fellows do so love children!" said the keeper. "If we only let them play where the prisoners can see them, they will watch them by the hour and spend days in making little toys for them. Ay," continued he, "and robins, mice, rats, anything alive, they will catch, tame and cherish."

The scene in the grim, gaunt prison was a fascinating one. As the great iron gate clanged behind us I turned and looked again. The group was still there, gilded by the April sunlight.—New York Ledger.

A Cyclist Catches a Train.

"We have all seen men run for a train," said a traveler. "The other day I saw a man make a break for one on a bicycle. We had halted at a station from which a straight, level road ran back at a right angle to the railroad. At a considerable distance up that road we saw a man coming on a bicycle. A man afoot couldn't have got anywhere near us from that distance, and it didn't seem as though the man on the wheel could get within rods of us, but he came down the street whizzing. When he had come about half the distance, the conductor gave the signal to start, and the engineer sounded the whistle and started the train. It was astonishing how fast the man on the wheel was coming now. There was a broad, level space around the station. The bicyclist swept over this in a great curve that landed him alongside the baggage car. Dismounting, he lifted his wheel up to the waiting hands of the baggage master. A fraction of a second later the steps of the first passenger car came along, and the bicyclist stepped aboard a winner."—New York Sun.

About How He Felt.

Mr. and Mrs. Fitts were out driving. "I wonder," said she, "just what the poor horse's feelings are? It must be just horrid to be driven and dragged around, without any idea as to where one is going, except as some one directs."

"I fancy I can appreciate his feelings," replied Mr. Fitts calmly. "I imagine he feels just about as I do when you take me out on a shopping trip."—London Tit-Bits.

SECRETARY CARLISLE TALKS OF A CHANGE IN RATIO.

It Would Cost the United States Over a Hundred Millions For Recoinage to Adopt Any Ratio In Advance of the Present One—Voorhees' Trump Card.

Washington, Aug. 21.—In an article headed "The Present Situation," which the Washington Post makes the most prominent feature in Sunday's issue, it says: The free coinage of silver at a ratio of 20 to 1 or at any increased ratio is practically impossible. This is the trump card which Senator Voorhees is to play in the senate on Tuesday. It is behind this barrier that he is to intrench himself. This is to be his explanation for abandoning the convictions of a lifetime. This is to be his answer to those who will quote against him his Memorable Speeches in the Past.

This trump card has been played in Senator Voorhees' hand by the administration. Secretary Carlisle, who despite all assertions to the contrary, is loyal to the president in the last degree, first gave to Senator Voorhees verbally the data to make good this assertion that free coinage is impracticable. He has gone further than this and has prepared an elaborate letter which the senator will read in the senate on Tuesday. In this letter the statement is made that it will cost the country between $112,000,000 and $113,000,000 to carry out the provisions of Senator Vest's free coinage bill. It is true that there is nothing in Senator Vest's bill about recoinage. But it does not need a prophet's vision to know that which only the government is compelled to take, will drift into the treasury in payment of customs duties and taxes, and will there remain to the conjestion of the currency. Unless they can be recoined they would be useless as money, and if there is free coinage at an increased ratio, some of the silver financiers in the senate must provide the secretary of the treasury with over a hundred millions of dollars to execute the law. Altogether it would seem as if the silver men were involved in a situation from which it will be difficult to extricate themselves.

IN THE SENATE.

Bill to Repeal the Sherman Law Reported Favorably.

Washington, Aug. 19.—The finance committee of the senate has presented, through its chairman, Mr. Voorhees (Dem., Ind.), a bill to repeal the purchasing clauses of the Sherman law and containing a declaration that it is the policy of the government to maintain the parity between gold and silver coins. The minority of the committee, through its spokesman, Mr. Vest (Dem., Mo.) presented a substitute fixing the number of grains of silver to be contained in the dollars, half dollars, quarters and dimes on a 20 to 1 ratio. The bill and substitute went to the calender, and their consideration is to begin on Tuesday next after the morning hour. The bill to allow national banks to increase their circulation up to the par value of their bonds on deposits occupied the attention of the senate most of the day. There was a long discussion on the amendment offered by Mr. Allen (Pop., Neb.) for the cessation of interest on the bonds on which the increase is to be based, and on the amendment offered by Mr. Cockrell (Dem., Mo.) for the redemption in greenbacks of such 2 per cent bonds as may be offered. Mr. Allen's amendment was defeated, 39 to 11, and Mr. Cockrell's had not been acted upon when the senate adjourned.

REPRESENTATIVE CHIPMAN.

News of His Death Received With Regret at Washington.

Washington, Aug. 18.—The announcement of the death of Representative Chipman at Detroit, which first came by bulletin over the United Press wires, was received with genuine sorrow by his associates in the house. They had been led from recent reports regarding his condition to expect a recovery from the illness that afflicted him, and the news had the added poignancy that comes from the unexpected. The death of Judge Chipman was announced to the house later in the day and adjournment followed.

SURE TO BE SEATED.

Governor Osborne Receives Private Advices as to Appointed Senators.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Aug. 19.—Governor Osborne has received private advices from Washington to the effect that the appointed senators from Wyoming, Montana and Washington are sure to be seated. As soon as this decision of the senate is announced the governor will immediately name a senator to fill the place made vacant by the resignation of A. C. Beckwith.

Dispensary Law Void.

Greenville, S. C., Aug. 22.—Judge Simonton in the United States circuit court has filed his decision in the case against Sanford, agent for the Richmond and Danville railroad, arrested for delivering to the consignee a keg of whisky shipped from an outside state. The court holds that the state dispensary liquor law is in conflict with the state and United States constitutions and is therefore void. The state will probably appeal [illegible]

PROHIBITION OWNED.

Hawkeye Republicans Reverse Their Policy on the Liquor Question.

DES MOINES, Aug. 17.—The policy of the Republican party in Iowa is changed. The state convention has repudiated prohibition by adopting a local option plank in its platform and naming an anti-Prohibitionist as candidate for governor. This means almost certain repeal of the prohibitory law by the next legislature as the Democratic party has always opposed it.

After permanent organization and pending the report of the committee on resolutions, nominations for governor were made. The first ballot stood as follows: F. D. Jackson, 498; Lafayette Young, 241; F. F. Drake, 154; J. A. Lyons, 84; E. S. Ormsby, 81; W. P. Torbert, 67; F. S. Coffin, 16; Albert Head, 36; D. B. Henderson, 3; James Harlan, 2; whole number of votes cast, 1,204; necessary to a choice, 603.

A second ballot was taken and various counties swung swiftly to Jackson. He received more than 800 votes, and on motion of Captain Fee of Appanoose county the nomination was made unanimous. The nominee is in New York on business and has not been in Iowa for two weeks.

The committee on resolutions next appeared and Editor Clark of Keokuk read the platform, the liquor plank of which was as follows:

The Liquor Plank.

"That prohibition is no test of Republicanism. The general assembly has given to the state a prohibitory law as strong as any that has ever been enacted by any country. Like any other criminal statute its retention, modification or repeal must be determined by the general assembly elected by and in sympathy with the people and to them is relegated the subject to take such action as they may deem just and best in the matter, maintaining the present law in those portions of the state where it is now or can be made efficient, and give to the localities such methods of controlling and regulating the liquor traffic as will best serve the cause of temperance and morality."

There was a long discussion over the prohibition plank, but the whole platform was adopted by a majority of 590 to 63. Adjournment was then taken until 9 p. m.

At the evening session Warren S. Dungan of Lucas county, was nominated for lieutenant governor on the second ballot. For railroad commissioner J. W. Luke of Hampton county, was renominated, and G. S. Robinson of Buena Vista county, was renominated for judge of the supreme court. Ex-Supintendent Henry Sabin of Clinton, was nominated on the third ballot for state superintendent of instruction. The convention adjourned at 11:45 p. m.

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 18.—An invasion of grasshoppers as marked as that of 1875-76 occurred at Fort Scott, Kan., during the night. COLONEL PHILLIPS' SPECTACLES.

Story of Their Use as Related by the Big Hairy Man From the Prairies.

"The way you Chicago people look at things reminds me of my old friend Colonel John Phillips."

The speaker was a large, hairy man, with a big slouch hat and a voice evidently better adapted to the acoustic properties of the prairie than the smoking room. He appeared to realize this as he glanced around and saw every man in the room looking toward him, some smiling, some scowling.

"Tell us about your friend, the colonel," suggested a real estate agent who had the hairy giant on the string for a big cash trade.

"Why," continued the big man with the prairie voice, "Phillips saw everything that belonged to him big and everything belonging to me small"——

"That's human nature—" the agent was suggesting, but the prairie man interrupted with:

"No, 'twan't no human nature. 'Twas spectacles! He got 'em made in this town. I believe you people all wear 'em too."

"What peculiar properties did your friend's spectacles possess?" asked a curious listener.

"Just as I've said. They made his property loom up in regular Chicago World's fair fashion, but squashed other people's stuff worse'n a Zimri Dwiggins bank"——

"How could he do this?"

"Why, the blamed lenses worked on an axis and showed things telescope fashion, you know. S'pose there was a horse trade up; he'd let you look at your own horse through the ordinary little end of his glasses, but when you came to look at his he'd get at his specks again under some pretext—just flipping 'em over the magnifying way—and you'd see a magnificent animal. It was the same way with houses, tracts of land, wheatfields, changing money—anything. Once you looked through his glasses at anything, you were his victim, for you felt as if you couldn't live until you'd traded just as Phillips wanted you to. But he met his reward. He tried a bluff game on big Buffalo Jones of Arizona, to whom he had by that spectacled jugglery sold 100 jackass rabbits for burrows, and looked at big Jones' six gun through the little end of his glasses, trying to put him down small, you know. But, alas, it didn't work!"

"What happened?" asked the agent.

"Big Jones' gun went off repeatedly just as Colonel Phillips was adjusting his glasses. It was as well perhaps," continued the prairie man, dropping his voice so low that the bellowing of tugs in the river and lake could again be heard, "for my friend had acquired such a habit of trying to talk up to the magnifying side of these glasses that his long enjoyed reputation for veracity was entirely sp'iled. We buried him at Big Jones' expense, and to prevent a recurrence of such a tragedy I took possession of the spectacles, and"——

"Whatever became of them?" asked a hungry looking man who had gone broke on a World's fair hotel scheme.

"I now wear 'em myself," said the big, hairy prairie man.—Chicago Tribune.

This Frog Weighed a Ton.

The labyrinthodon, a huge creature resembling a toad or a frog, and which lived in the earlier periods of our planet's history, has been found in a surprising state of preservation in the marl beds of Huezelweitz, Hungary. All species of this gigantic frog are now extinct and are known to the naturalists only through the investigations of the geologists, who have often found parts or entire fossils of the monster in strata of the triassic portion of the mesozoic period. Southwick mentions it in a three line entry in his "Quizzism and Key," under the head "A Frog as Large as an Ox," and in Barnett's "Geological Epochs" it is considered in a chapter on "Huge Froglike Creatures of the Mesozoic Age."

The specimen unearthed in the Hungarian marl bed is entire with the exception of the left forearm and the lower jaw. The skull measures 18 inches between the eye sockets and weighs, exclusive of the missing underjaw, 812 pounds. The bones which have been discovered up to date (and there is still hopes of finding the missing parts), with the adhering matrix, weigh 1,860 pounds, almost a ton.—St. Louis Republic.

The Jury Suited the Lawyer.

A Chicago attorney, somewhat noted for his sharp practice, sent his client one day to watch the case. Word came to him that his case was next on the docket, and he hurried over to find the opposing counsel already beginning. In vain he looked for his client. He was nowhere to be seen. In vain he asked for delay, but the court told him that the carelessness of a client would not allow such a thing. At last he glanced into the jury box and saw his client there.

The stupid man had thought he heard his name called and had marched in with the rest. The opposing counsel was so anxious to hurry the case along that he neglected to examine the jury. Seeing the thing was in his own hands, the Chicago attorney turned to the court. "I withdraw all objection," he said. "I have my client where I want him."—Green Bag.

No Bogus Italian Counts.

American heiresses need have little fear of bogus Italian counts for the same reason that there is no imitation Italian wine—the real article is too cheap. The possession of a title in Palermo gives nothing great of itself, but its indispensable accompaniment is a carriage, horses and drivers in livery. To maintain these on an income of next to nothing a year it is often necessary to eat macaroni and thick soup [illegible]

Growing More Liberal

That's what the human race is doing,—particularly the American part of it.

There are a few left who are satisfied with ancient history. But most people are ready to apply modern progress and common-sense to the treatment of the human stomach—an organ that demands its rights whether or no; that resents the insults of worn-out methods. All this is to emphasize the facts about

Cottolene

There was once a prejudice against Cottonseed oil. But people who are alive, who investigate, who have no bigotry in their composition, have found that pure, refined cottonseed oil combined with selected beef suet is a better article in every conceivable way than hog's lard. And so they wisely use it for cooking—and are correspondingly healthy and happy. The sales of COTTOLENE are enormous and constantly increasing; a proof that it is appreciated by appreciative persons. Ask your grocer for it.

H. A. Ronaan, a prominent merchant of Halstad, was doing business in the city last Thursday. He reports everything lovely down there, and says Halstad is getting to be quite a town.

H. Steege has been improving every hour of daylight since harvest began with two binders and intends to get through cutting this week. Then for the threshing which will be done from the shock.

Rev. L. W. Squier, who is giving a series of Sunday evening sermons on popular topics, preached last Sunday evening on "Our Young Men", and only thing to be regretted about it, was that there were not more young men in attendance. Mr. Squier gave an excellent discourse, full of practical modern ideas.

Mrs. John Miller, whose illness has been previously noted in these columns died at her residence, the Germania hotel, about midnight Saturday. The funeral was attended by a large concourse of friends and relatives on Monday at 3:30. The services were conducted at the house, the Rev. J. G. Smith officiating.

Chris Houston has been trying the doubtful experiment of cutting three hundred acres with one binder. He has run it during every hour of daylight for ten days not stopping for dinner but changing teams frequently during the day. Some of his grain is bound to get too ripe though even if he makes it win. P. S. He was obliged to buy a new binder.

A couple of strangers with what they advertised as the shriveled remains of a Norwegian giant nine feet tall, and the body of a petrified woman, did a good business in the vacant store in the McKinnon block, last week. While the people generally regarded it as a fake, still they gave up their money freely to see what kind of a fake it was. Such is human nature.

Tommy Wallace found that his McCormick was inadequate to the task of cutting his grain which was ripening too fast so he came in and had John McKinnon set up a Wood machine on Friday which he took out and set to work. Tommy said: "I shall put this machine at work and if I can't keep up then I shall keep them at work Sunday and all until I finish. I have an excellent crop and I am determined to use every endeavor to save it. It ripens up very fast and when too ripe shells very badly."

P. S. Ware has been appointed deputy U. S. marshal with headquarters at Thief River Falls. The appointment is worthily bestowed if we have got a democratic administration.

Well the farmers have one thing to console them if wheat is low it will not cost so much for harvesting and threshing and they have also saved a good deal by good weather.

Miss Hattie Maxwell, of Tacoma, who has been visiting with Mrs. I. U. Jennings, returned to her home in the far west on Wednesday morning. She expressed great pleasure in our bright young city and its people.

While everybody was as busy as could be cutting wheat last week, Henry Stone was plowing his stubble having finished cutting. He had to move the shocks over on the plowed ground as fast as he would reach them.

By the frost chart compiled by the Pioneer Fuel Co., of Minneapolis, we figure that the first killing frost will occur about Sept. 14th this year. If this chart is correct there will be no frosted wheat in Polk county this year.

Martin Swanson is preparing to take the field with his threshing outfit just as soon as the business is ready. The JOURNAL is informed that he offers to deliver the grain from the shock into the sack at eight cents per bushel all round.

Eli Steenerson and Chris Hoch returned last week from a trip to the pine lands on the Red Lake Reservation having been gone about 18 days, some of the time cruising about on foot viewing the magnificent pine trees. Eli has seven forties of excellent pine and talks of taking a quarter section more in the same neighborhood and Chris thinks of taking the balance of the pine on the Reservation that Eli don't want. The boys report having had a grand time though they had to foot it all the time—couldn't drive a team about where they wanted to go on account of numerous windfalls of timber.

On Saturday morning of last week occurred another one of those events that always fills the farmers heart with dread—a hailstorm. It was more or less general throughout the county but more severe on a trip running from [illegible] in Polk County to Twin Valley in Norman County, in which strip thousands of acres of [illegible] grain in shocks were damaged from one-third to one half of the grain [illegible] has been cut. Gardens were ruined and potato fields cut down. Very little if any insurance was had on the crops destroyed.

Tuesday's rain caused some farmers, who have over-ripe wheat, to look serious.

Max Ericsson returned on Sunday from a visit to Germany and is expected up this week.

Since Earnest Roisch changed his steady doctor for a tinner he is doing nicely on the game leg. Dr. Laman fixed him all O. K. and didn't charge him anything either.

Leopold Marchand of the town of Lambert was in the city this week selling cheese. The Marchand Bros. haue turned out a lot of cheese this this summer—and its first-class too.

Potatoes and late fall feed were greatly benefitted by the copious rain that fell on Saturday and Tuesday. It will also put the stubble in excellent condition for plowing. The land was indeed becoming very dry.

Comrade C. Snyder brought in a sample of the finest potatoes we have seen in years and tells us that is a sample of his crop this year, While everybody complains that the drouth has ruined potatoes Snyder does not seem to be troubled that way.

Oren Simmons, who lives in Russia reports that Saturday morning's hail did no damage in his vicinity, but, said he, "for about a minute or so I would not have given $50 for my chances of a crop the prospects were so bright for a big storm. We got a little but not enough to hurt."

Tom Bjoin has sold three complete Buffalo Pitts threshing rigs and one separator this season. Chas. Gilbert of the town of Roome, Jos. Sauve of Gentilly, and J. E. Swenson, who will go to Reynolds, N. D., have bought complete rigs, and Oscar Jenson of the town of Lowell, a separator.

After attending a meeting of the judges of the state at St. Paul on the 24th inst., Judge Ives goes to Chicago to see the Fair, then he will go on to Boston to see Mrs. Ives, and as soon as she is able they will again return to Crookston. Mrs. Ives has been dangerously ill during the summer but all will be glad to learn that she is nearly well again.

The JOURNAL receives the sad intelligence of the death of Olive L., only daughter of D. C. Hallock, of Reis township, which occurred recently at the residence of her uncle at Pleasant Valley, Wis. of quick consumption. Miss Hallock had devoted her life to missionary work and intended soon to enter upon a course of study to fit her for that calling but the All-wise Father has ruled otherwise and her friends have now only a sacred memory.

The I. O. G. T. lodge organized in this city last spring has grown very encouragingly all summer, we are informed. On Tuesday night this week their weekly meeting was the scene of initiating three new members followed by festivities. It seems that the membership is divided into sections which are rival sides in getting up literary programmes, and the side that wins is banqueted at the end of the quarter by the side that is beaten. So, on Tuesday night this quarterly festivity of the order come off. Ice cream, cakes, pears and peaches were heartily enjoyed under "The Good of the Order."

Mrs. Tom Brown was in from Euclid last week visiting relatives and friends.

L. Davis told our reporter on Monday that he had nearly all of his cutting yet to do, that owing to wet lands in his neighborhood very much grain yet remains to be cut. Said that B. C. Jorgenson had a solid quarter section of wheat that was not ripe enough to cut yet. The wheat was filling nicely, however, and if the frost holds off will be an excellent crop.

Many of the friends of Mrs. J. B. Copeland and daughters gathered at the Great Northern depot on Thursday morning to bid them farewell and wish them a safe and pleasant journey to their new home in Seattle. They have been residents of this city for many years and few could go from our midst who would be missed more than "Cope's folks." J. B. was an old-time conductor on the line until promoted to the responsible position of superintendent, with headquarters at Seattle, and his friends here are legion.

E. O. Flanders says the JOURNAL got the wrong pig by the ear when it rung in the name of W. L. Palmer. He says it was G. H. Palmer whose life he saved in the recent war with Africa. Palmer had gone to war with only a ball bat and if he hadn't happened to come up with the reserves and plenty of ammunition Palmer would have been food for fishes long since. He says Palmer is much more grateful to him than there is any need of for he only saved his life. As it was the only life he had about him at the time it was natural that he should kind of like to have it saved.

Talk about your drouth; this wee bit dry weather we have had for a month past aint a patchin' to what they are having in old Steuben county, New York if the following account of the prevailing drouth, which we take from the Bath Plaindealer is within a rod of the correct thing. The Plaindealer says: "We have been having a regular old-fashioned drouth. A large portion of the vegetation is all dried and shrivelled up. Many farmers are feeding their stock hay. The heat and dust is very oppressive. It is bad enough right here in this village, but outside reports are worse. Some of them are that over in Sonoro they have to drive their hogs into the creek every few days and soak them up so they'll hold swill. That they have to run sprinklers ahead of the boats on Lake Keuka to keep the dust down. Up in Prattsburgh they have to keep their hens in ice-houses to keep them from laying hard-boiled eggs. Campbell creek is so dry that your can wipe your face on sheets of its water."

Our reporter encountered Lawyer Watts, bright and early Monday morning with 17 or 90 yards of canvas onto him, headed for the prairie. Our reporter had a binder whip, something less than 'steen miles long and an ile can in his vest pocket and was on his way out to see how things were going on "the farm, the farm, the expensive old farm" as the poet says. Watts informed us that he was on his way out to his 80(0) acre wheat field to set up his binder so we jest nachelly talked shop from an agricultural point of view. We came to the unanimous conclusion that if we should farm it as successfully for 99 years more we would make enough, (if it don't hail and we don't get no frosts) to keep our executors guessing how to divide the spoils. "Why" said Watts as a wave of enthusiasm darted athwart his classic countenance, "If this 'ere crop what I am now harvestin' will pan out 20 or 25 bushels per acre and I can get 80 or 85 cents per bushel for it I can come darn close to paying the expense of making the crop this year all but this 'ere canvas carrier, and I calkilate I can stand off Larsen, Carpenter & Co. about a year for it, if I can't do that I recon I can bring another suit for Billy McKensie vs the county, and thus help the crop pay all expenses. We unanimously concluded that what business men of Crookston don't know about farming would fill a large sized book and Watts and we then and there decided to run for a county office next time one comes along that we would like.

The success of Mrs. Annie M. Beam of McKeesport, Pennsylvania, in the treatment of diarrhœa in her children will undoubtedly be of interest to many mothers. I got some of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy from Rev. Mr. Chapman. It cured both of them. I knew of several other cases where it was equally successful. A Visit to Waterloo.

M. Jules Claretie, the administrator of the Comedie Francaise, paid a visit shortly before his arrival in London to the battlefield of Waterloo. It was 78 years ago that the battle was fought, yet M. Claretie was still able to glean something in the locality from actual eye witnesses of that mighty historic event. In the little wineshop called the "Belle Alliance," where Wellington and Blucher, according to an inscription, met and saluted after their victory, he found two old women engaged in darning stockings. They appeared to take very little notice of the strangers, but on being questioned the elder of the two declared that she was over 90 years of age. "I was 13 years old," she said, "at the time of the battle. I was living with my parents at Plancepoit.

"We took refuge all of us on the Friday in the woods with the cattle. It was on a Sunday they fought. It was just after my first communion and on the day of St. Donnat, a saint in whose honor there is a pilgrimage in the neighborhood. When all was over, we went out and saw dead bodies everywhere. At night after the battle there was a storm. The bodies became swollen through the rain, and there were fears of a pestilence. They were buried in heaps, with dry branches between each layer, and then the branches were set fire to or quicklime was poured in the trenches."—London News.

THAT SEWER.

The Fixing of the Third Street Sewer Outlet is Becoming a Serious Problem.

The City Council Divided in Opinion Upon the Best way to Remedy It.

The Break Under the Railroad Track Has Cost the City $4,000 Already.

The break in the Third street sewer last fall, and the heavy expense entailed upon the city since is becoming a very serious matter, and one which the city council will have to take some action on before long. During the spring and summer the Great Northern people have been at work trying to stop the landslide, and the council has been waiting until they would get the slide stopped permanently before attempting to put the sewer through under the track again. In the mean time the city has had to keep the water pumped out of the sewer, and the expense incident thereto, up to date, amounts to $4000. The railroad company has thus far failed to stop the slide, and the city council is in a quandary. They do not know whether to wait any longer in the hope that the railroad people will eventually check the slide, or change the sewer outlet, and thus setttle the question for all time to come. Those of the aldermen who favor the idea of making a new outlet are met with the obstacle of a lack of funds to do this. There is one thing certain and that is, that if anything is to be done in the matter it should be done soon, or it will have to go over to next year, and cost the city two or three thousand dollars more. At the last meeting of the council City Engineer Arnold submitted a report in which he recommended that the sewer outlet be changed. His plan was to connect an outlet from the manhole at the centre of Second street and Main, and run west on Second street to the railway right of way, then south to Robert street and west on Robert street to the river. Then rebuild the sewer on Main street from Third to Second street, so that the sewage would run to Second street and the job would be complete. To do this would involve an expense of probably $4000. The present sewerage plan provides for an overflow on Main, Broadway and Ash streets from the Sixth street line into the Third street outlet. The proposed change would do away with this overflow, and turn all the drainage north of Fourth street and in the district around the schoolhouse from the Third street line into the Sixth street line. The proposed Sixth street sewer is to be a four-foot brick, circular sewer, and is therefore able to take care of all the drainage from the hill district west of the Northern Pacific railway, besides the additional sewage caused by the proposed changes.

The formation of the bank of the river opposite the end of Second street is such that a slide is liable to occur there, and so the engineer is of the opinion that if another outlet be made, the city had better not take any chances of a repetition of the Third street trouble and that is his reason for recommending that the outlet be made on Robert street.

Will Begin on the Sand Hill.

Ezra J. Valentine and N. D. Miller, two of the commissioners appointed to look after the drainage matter, came up last week for the purpose of locating the point at which the work should be commenced this fall, and went up and spent one day on the Tamarac river. Returning on Thursday evening, they were joined by E. D. Childs who went with them to look the ground over on the Sand Hill River. Having thoroughly done this it was decided to begin work on the Sand Hill River and push it as far as the means will permit this fall. They will at once advertise for bids. One point that decides the location of the work at that point this fall is the fact that on the Sand Hill a dredge can be worked while it cannot on the Tamarac owing to a lack of sufficient water. Mr. Valentine told our reporter that the work will be done thoroughly and as cheaply as possible to obtain it, so as to make the funds go as far as it is possible and the object is to show the people of the State what can be done for this section by drainage, whereas, if they should commence at several places at once as many want them to do no substantial results could be obtained. The obstructed course of the Sand Hill River will be opened to the Red River. If this work can all be completed this fall next spring will show conclusively what the benefits will be. It is the intention of the commissioners to give work to every farmer who wants it.

Generosity.

Among the exhibitors at the County Fair at Crookston, July 26, 27, 28 and 29, 1893, E. D. Childs & Co. received in premium awards $20.50, and at a meeting of the Directors of the Association held August 24th, 1893, the following communication was read in open meeting:

CROOKSTON, Minn., Aug. 22d, 1893.
J. V. E. Wyatt, Sec'y.,
Crookston, Minn.

Dear Sir: We return herewith premium slips drawn on your secretary for amount specified, with the request that your society accept the gift of these premiums from us as an expression of our good will and appreciation of the valuable work your Association is doing for the interests of agriculture in this Northern portion of the state. We wish that every farmer could so fully appreciate the work and ability your officers and committees have displayed, that they should do likewise and help your society in its infancy from the financial burden of these premiums. The display certainly much more than compensated any exhibitor for all trouble he may have been to in contributing to the success of the Fair. With kind and earnest wishes for the future success of your enterprise, we remain

Respectfully Yours,
E. D. CHILDS & Co.

The secretary was instructed to tender E. D. Childs & Co. a written vote of thanks from the officers and directors of the associaton for his good-will and the donation.

Winter Rye.

It has been said by those who have tried it, that raising winter rye is one of the best means for getting rid of noxious weeds that there is. This looks natural for the rye is ready to cut by the time the weeds are ready to bloom, hence harvesting the rye prevents the weeds going to seed and as wild oats and mustard depend upon their seed for their continuance this would seem a good way to kill them out. It is also said to be better for the land than summer fallowing. Farmers in this vicinity have an excellent opportunity to try the experiment on a few acres as E. D. Childs has procured a carload and will supply all who wish to try the experiment at just the exact cost of the seed to him. All who want seed should engage it at once, for the supply is liable to be inadequate to the demand.

Death's Doings.

Mrs. O. S. Buckley, of Neilsville, died of consumption on the 24th inst. and was buried on the 27th. She was 45 years of age.

Chas. Henry, a little son of Mr. and Mrs Henry Jones of this city, died of convulsions the 22nd inst. and was buried on the 24th.

On Sunday afternoon B. J. Duntley received a telegram requesting him to find Mr. D. R. Carr and inform him that his daughter Jennie was sinking rapidly and to come at once. Mr. Carr left for his home in Minneapolis on Sunday evening but did not get there in time to see his daughter alive as a dispatch arrived here on Monday stating that she died about 7 o'clock Sabbath evening. Miss Carr would have been twenty had she lived until Sept. 3rd next. Miss Carr spent some years of her life in this city where she has many friends to whom this news will come with sadness as they remember her many graces. Mrs. B. J. Duntley went down on Monday's train to attend the last sad obsequies. Mr. Carr will probably remain the balance of the week and return by Monday to resume his labors at the mill.

Manager Satolli's Impressions.

The Papal Ablegate made an official trip to the Pacific coast in July, via the Great Northern Railway visiting Great Falls, Helena, Butte, Spokane, Everett and Seattle. On his return to St. Paul he expressed much pleasure with the appointments of the passenger service on the new transcontinental route, noting specially the comforts of the buffet car, with its library, magazines, smoking rooms, writing tables, easy chairs, bath room, barber shop and observation windows, run in connection with palace dining and sleeping cars and spoke eloquently of the grand scenery in the Rocky and Cascade mountains.

Mrs. Leslie's Sanctum.

Mrs. Frank Leslie's sanctum is the corner room on the third floor of the Judge building, at Sixteenth street and Fifth avenue. It is quite different from the average "office," being filled with books and chairs and handsome tables. Mrs. Leslie herself occupies a heavily covered chair of antique pattern. She is always richly dressed, even at her desk, and is by no means shorn of the handsome jewelry she possesses.

In speaking of the recent theft of her brooch by a Brooklyn young woman, who also forged Mrs. Leslie's checks, she said that she had never been more completely deceived.

"Why, the girl was so deadly respectable! And as for her claiming to be only twenty-one, she must be thirty. She told me she was twenty-one, and I simply laughed—thought she was joking. It was as if I should say to you that I was only five. And it is so strange that all of the talk is about the theft of the brooch, while the great offense—the forging of Mr. Gerlach's name and that of another friend—is almost unmentioned."—New York Recorder.

DOZENS OF DEAD.

TERRIBLE HURRICANE VISITS THE SOUTH ATLANTIC COAST.

The Storm One of the Severest Ever Known at Atlanta—A Dozen Dead and Forty or Fifty Missing—Meagre Details.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Aug. 28.—Almost on the anniversary of the great hurricane of 1881 Savannah was again swept by one of the severest storms it has ever known. The storm, which had been predicted by the weather bureau for several days, began early in the afternoon and increased from then on until it reached the climax between 11 and 12 at night, having blown for eight hours in a terrific hurricane. A view of the city at daylight revealed a scene of wreck and ruin that surpassed that of the great hurricane of 1881. It is impossible at this hour to estimate the damage as the result of the storm, but it was very general and it is safe to say that it will go up in the hundreds of thousands and perhaps more.

The List of Fatalities

is gradually growing and it is impossible to tell to what extent it will go. Several bodies of drowned people were picked up during the morning and searches are now being made for others who are missing. Every hour seems to bring some new story of a death as a result of the storm. The drowning of Mr. A. C. Ulmer, assistant cashier of the Central Railroad bank, on Hutchinson's Island, was one of the most unfortunate fatalities of the storm. Mr. Ulmer owns a farm on the island and had gone over to pay off his hands and attend to other duties. Miller, his dairyman, has not been found and it is presumed he was drowned. The other fatalities so far as reported are as follows: Tony Haimes, colored; four unknown negroes, drowned on the Brampton plantation four miles from the city; Lewis Gaggnett, colored; The Squire, a 6-year-old colored boy, drowned on Hutchinson's Island; John Williams, Mary Butler and Sarah Green, drowned on a rice plantation south of the city; two unknown sailors, drowned at Tybee island.

Fifty Persons Missing.

There are 40 or 50 other persons who are reported missing and, as nothing has been heard from them, it is supposed that their bodies will be found later.

The ruin at quarantine is immeasurable. The wharves are gone, the new fumigation plant, which has cost the city so much, is at the bottom of the sea, and nine vessels which were waiting for release to come to the city are high and dry on the marsh, and no doubt will be totally wrecked. The tug Paulsen arrived in the city at 5 p. m. She brought up about 60 passengers from Tybee. Mr. Revers, one of them, stated that four negroes engaged in clearing the railroad track were drowned. A sailor and cabin boy on the schooner Harsl, which is on her side on North beach, are drowned. It is reported that eight of the crew of a terrapin sloop which went ashore on the South beach were drowned.

MANY LIVES LOST.

Some Results of the Storm on the Atlantic Coast.

Stories of loss to life and shipping are still coming in. Stephen Cooper of the pilot boat Thomas D. Harrison, reported that when 20 miles off the highlands he picked up a man clinging to the masthead of a sunken wreck. He proved to be the only survivor of the schooner Narragansett, Captain Chase, bound from Philadelphia for Waltham, Mass., coal laden, which foundered during the hurricane. The crew of five men were all lost, and the survivor was for seven hours on the mast before being picked up. He is Henry Suza, a Portuguese.

Two Vessels Went Down.

SOUTHAMPTON, L. I., Aug. 25.—About 2 a. m. two vessels, a coal barge and a towing vessel, were wrecked off the coast at this point. Up to the present writing six men from the wrecked vessels have been washed ashore, three alive and three beyond resuscitation. The 15 other men of the crews are believed to have been drowned, thus making the total loss of life 18 persons.

Eighteen Perished.

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—The fishing schooners Empire State, with a crew of 10 men, and the Ella M. Johnson, with a crew of eight men, went down during the night off Manasquan, on the Jersey coast, and all on board were lost.

CHICAGO'S BIG FIRE.

One Hundred and Thirty-one Houses Were Destroyed.

CHICAGO, Aug. 25.—Insurance agents and adjusters were busy all day among the ruins of the South Chicago fire. Daylight and cooler investigation reduces the actual number of houses destroyed fully 25 per cent. What was while a red hot smoking mass of embers, thought to be the ruins of between 200 and 250 homes, is conceded by the police to be 131 homes. The district burned abounded in one and two-story frame dwellings, the average cost of which was $1,500. Most of the owners were insured, though very few carried insurance on their personal effects.

From the brick building in which the fire had its origin, and before the few fire engines of the district could make the slightest impression upon the flames, they bounded eastward, between Ninety-first and Ninetieth streets, in the direction of the lake. House after house rapidly fell before the sweep of fire, which hurled blazing brands far in advance. After Superior avenue, the flames crossed Ontario avenue, Buffalo avenue, Mackinaw avenue and Green Bay avenue.

Despite the rapidity with which the flames spread and the crash and panic which at one time choked up the streets, no lives, as far as known, were lost, but half a dozen persons were injured. Over 5,000 people were rendered homeless by the fire and the total loss will reach nearly $1,000,000.

In the frightful collision that ensued the two rear cars of the five that made up the Manhattan Beach train were demolished and the middle car was overturned. Hardly one of the scores of passengers aboard these three cars escaped unhurt.

In addition to those killed at least 15 others were seriously injured, several of whom will die.

THE EDWARDS PLAN.

The Banks at Mayville, N. D., Propose to Move Crops.

MAYVILLE, Aug. 29.—After long consideration Bankers Rosholt of the First National bank and Edwards of the Goose River bank of Mayville have put into successful operation a plan that will solve the moving of the crop problem that is before the minds of the people of the Northwest and will relieve the currency famine in this vicinity. The "Edwards" plan as it is called here, is as follows: The banks issue drafts on their Minneapolis and St. Paul banks payable to bearer, in small denominations of $5, $10 and $20. These, together with some silver, the elevator men pay the farmers in exchange for wheat. The farmers use these drafts in paying their store bills, twine notes, machine notes, and, in fact, the drafts will pass current everywhere in this country. The grain men ship the wheat and sell it in the markets below, receiving drafts in payment. These are received by the banks here and sent to their correspondents below for credit, and thus, with but little trouble and no anxiety, the crop will be sold, the farmers and merchants get their accounts paid, the banks their notes paid, and the great problem is at once solved. The bonanza farmers are paying their men under this plan, and it meets satisfaction.

ELEVATORS OPEN.

They Claim to Have Been Promised Money by Eastern Banks.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 26.—The big elevator companies of Minnesota, having failed to make an agreement with the farmers and banks as to a method of moving the grain crop, have taken the bull by the horns and resolved themselves to to push the crop to central markets as possible. Ten elevators have been opened at Lake Crystal, Garden City, Vernon, Amboy, Elmore, Madelia, Brewster, Sheldon, Sioux Falls and Montrose. Twenty-six more will be opened on Monday. The companies claim they have the promise of plenty of funds from eastern banks and will pay currency or certified checks for all grain purchased. [illegible]

A Wicked American Abroad.

I was once in a village on the Welsh coast. The Welsh, I have been informed, are a sober people, and so some of them may be. A certain wicked traveler chanced to come that way. According to his own account he had "struck oil" in the western states of America—and, possibly, he had "struck" some peculiar notions, t... For a whole week he "stood Sam" at the local hostelry, to everybody who chose to come and drink.

For a whole week every soul in the place, to all intents and purposes, was drunk—all the men, many of the women and some of the children. The occasion offered, and they rose to it. They had never before enjoyed themselves so much in their lives—that being their idea of enjoyment. No doubt to this hour many of those amusement seekers look back to that week as being the most amusing week they ever spent.—All the Year Round.

Patience With Eccentricity.

Many of the leading people in English society regarded Thomas Carlyle with a feeling almost akin to reverent delight when he chose to behave like an ignorant boor in their drawing rooms, even taking his seat, it is said, unbidden in the presence of the queen. This generation, however, has little patience with such eccentricities.

It was an English bishop that is still living who, when the historian Freeman had worn out his patience with his rudeness, introduced him to a waiting audience as "the distinguished scholar that so admirably describes and illustrates the savagery of our ancestors."—Youth's Companion.

Chemical Effects of Lightning.

Lightning works chemically. It has the power of developing a peculiar odor, which has been variously compared to that of phosphorus, nitrous gas and most frequently burning sulphur. Wafen mentions a storm on the isthmus of Darien which diffused such a sulphurous stench through the atmosphere that he and his marauding companions could scarcely breathe, particularly when they plunged into the wood.—Chambers' Journal.

Lace Industry In Ireland.

The development of the lace industry in Ireland has been a great boon to the impoverished people. In embroidery alone 12,000 girls are employed and 1,065,000 dozen handkerchiefs were sent last year to the American market.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Montana, Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

On reading and filing the petition of Julia Walter, Executrix of said estate, setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into her hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid; and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead, of which said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate, with their residences; and praying that license be to her granted to sell all of the real estate mentioned and described in her petition on file.

And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said Julia Walter to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate.

It is therefore ordered, that all persons interested in said estate appear before this Court, on Monday, the 18th day of September 1893, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the Probate office in the city of Crookston in said County, then and there to show cause (if any there be) why license should not be granted to said Julia Walter to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts legacies and expenses.

And it is further ordered, that this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Polk County Journal, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

ART AND MYTHOLOGY.

Greek Gods in the Palace of Fine Arts.

IN FORMS OF ENDURING MARBLE.

The Great Mystery of How the Greeks So Far Outran All Other Nations in Sculpture Manifested Anew at the World's Columbian Exposition—The Paintings of Holland and Russia.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 1.—[Special.]—I have taken some more lessons in high art, and have progressed so rapidly that I now understand the whole outside of the building and all the figures on it from Victory to Ceres and from the tall angels to the little caryatides. As everybody knows, the Art palace is more solidly constructed than any of the other buildings as it is to remain here, while the others, with possibly one or two exceptions, are to be removed. It stands on the north shore of the north lagoon, almost exactly in the north center of the grounds and is 320x500 feet in the main, with two annexes, eastern and western, each 120x200 feet.

The main oblong is intersected each way by nave and transept, each 100 feet wide and 70 feet high, and at their center is the great dome, the concave side of which is 125 feet from the floor and atop of it is the winged Victory. The entire structure still retains its original clear, white color and externally as well as internally it is in truth a palace of art. Few visitors study the outside. They appreciate the general effect in beauty, but fail to note the Ionic purity of the columns, the chaste and yet massive simplicity of the statues, pediments and bas-reliefs, in short, all the figures suggestive of the progress of art from the dawn of history to the present time. In truth, it requires a special education to get the idea meant to be conveyed, for there certainly is not another building on the grounds and possibly not another in the country, of which the exterior more fitly suggests its purpose.

And herein is manifested anew that great mystery which has been discussed by the learned for the last 400 years and was discussed even in Rome while the fact was yet new—the mystery that a mere handful of people in a little corner of southwestern Europe, a region not so large as New Jersey, should have so far outrun all the rest of the world in this art and produced masterpieces so perfect that the modern can only admire and imitate but cannot hope to surpass. The traveler through the modern world sees on every side strange symbols of a long dead and discarded faith. Over the insurance offices is the fabled Phœnix, rising freshly hatched from the ashes of the parent bird; in the drug store windows appears Atlas, bending under the weight of the globe, or Esculapius with the serpent curling around his staff, and elsewhere are Diana and Juno, Minerva and Jupiter and Apollo and other classic gods.

The literature of every Aryan land abounds with references to these creations of religious fancy and there is scarcely a political demonstration or a Veiled Prophet or other carnival display which does not in some way revive the old religion. In this Palace of Art, with its 7,000 statues and pictures, the Greek gods are constantly recurring and even in pictures with very modern titles one can see that the old mythology was still present in the painter's mind. One must know at least a little about it to get the idea, and while it is not well to appear arrogantly instructive, perhaps the unlearned reader will stand a paragraph or two on mythology while we are yet on the porch of the Art palace.

Know then, inquiring friend, that several thousand years ago the original Aryans lived on the highlands of south central and southwestern Asia and worshipped the powers of nature. As they sent off successive swarms of emigrants and founded new races and nations their original language gave rise in turn to Zend, Sanskrit, Greek, Latin and all the Keltic and Teutonic tongues. But as the language slowly changed the names of things came to be considered the names of persons. Instead of thunder as a power they put the thunder-god as a person. The Aryan said, "The sun dries up the dew." His Greek descendant, retaining the names without their meaning, said; "Helios devours Prokris." When the obscured sun sent a peculiar ray through the clouds the Aryan said as our own children say, "The sun is drawing water." His Hindoo descendants say, "Indra's elephant is filling his trunk to shower the fields."

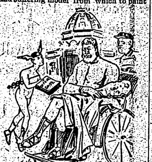
The exploits of great pioneers and other leaders were interwoven with the actions of gods and the fancy of poets did the rest. Hence that wonderful mythology which enters so fully into modern art. But this still leaves the great problem of Greek pre-eminence unsolved. Of course each separated branch of the Aryan stock developed its mythology according to the nature of the country in which it is located. The Aryans in India, dazzled and overpowered by the awful phenomena of that tropical country, developed that gorgeous system of millions of gods of which missionaries have told us so much. Hence that queer array of many-armed and snaky and long-snouted gods to be seen here in the India exhibits. The Teutons went far to the north and so they created Thor and Woden and Friga, with gods of ice and fire and hail, gnomes, and kobolds, night-riding hags and witches and monsters not fit to be described in a family paper, which did unutterable things in the depths of forests or on the black and blasted heath.

These were the two extremes. Midway between them was our Aryan race which worshipped the beautiful and especially the beautiful in human form. In what way the Greek mind took this direction we cannot say. It certainly did and to an extent that seems miraculous, but the how and the why remain a mystery. Every myth of the Greek faith or fancy was put in the loveliest forms of enduring marble and we have them here.

Of Diana, for instance, there are four very beautiful statues in the French section alone and very many paintings elsewhere. And very appropriately, too, for she was goddess of the cold, chaste moon, the friend of hunters, patroness of old maids and guardian of chastity. She was so set in her way that one fellow who offered to see her home was instantly consumed to ashes, and when the great hunter Aktaeon accidently came upon her while bathing in the forest she changed him into a stag and sicked his own hounds on him. They made a meal of him in short order and this is the only authentic instance I can find of a stag supper that was approved by old maids. And there was Prometheus, who gave us fire. The gods had intended to leave mankind without this blessing, but when Prometheus saw that man alone among the animals had no natural weapons, he went up to heaven and stole fire from the chariot of the sun and by its aid man became the head of creation. For this Jupiter had him chained down on Mount Caucasus with vultures devouring his ever-growing liver, and if any one doubts this story he can come here and see Prometheus, life size, and all the sorrowing sisters of the mountain weeping about him, while the horrid, grim-eyed birds tear at his vitals. (Austrian section, No. 50.)

"Cupid and Psyche, or Love and Soul," are everywhere, in all sorts of combinations, and every reader knows their history. Venus is also reproduced in all kinds of marble and more paintings than I could think of counting, and every reader knows her, at least by name. She was engendered by some of the blood of Jupiter which fell in the sea and as she rose from the waves near Rhodos she was called Aphrodite, which is perhaps a poetically Greek way of saying that beauty comes of good blood and bathing. When she entered the court of Olympus all the gods broke out in acclamations, and she was unanimously elected goddess of love and beauty. Jupiter gave her in marriage to his lame son Vulcan, but she preferred Mars, the red god of war, and there was material for the divorce court. Perhaps this is one reason why Mars and Vulcan are so seldom seen in art.

It was this Vulcan who made the chains for Prometheus, and it was to get a living and suffering model from which to paint the scene that Parrhasius of Athens tortured an old slave to death, as the poet says:



HERCULES AND MERCURY ON THEIR VACATION.

"Parrhasius stood gazing forgetfully
Upon his canvass. There Prometheus lay,
Chained to the cold rocks of Mount Caucasus,
The vultures at his vitals and the links
Of the lame Lemnian festering in his flesh."

It is gratifying to add that Prometheus possessed the eternal secret on which the stability of the universe depended, and Jupiter finally had to release him to get at it. Unfortunately we do not know what the secret was. Hercules is another great character in art and mythology, the emblem of strength. His statue is everywhere and almost any Fourth of July orator feels free to mention the infant Hercules strangling the serpents. Mercury was the messenger of the gods and is known in art by the wings on his helm and heels. It was he who set the fashion of wearing bird wings on hats, and he and Hercules may be seen, in types as it were, any day on the avenues of the park. And here I must mention the singular fact that in all the Holland section I have not found a single picture in which the classic gods are prominent. Nearly all the Holland paintings show work or workers or suggest work. There are peasants plowing and peasants digging and peasants driving cattle; there are many scenes in humble homes and there are boats and canals and ports crowded with shipping. There are also many beautiful pastoral scenes. But nearly all are of the utilitarian cast. And what is not utilitarian is religious. The Dutch appear to have found an art in work as well as made a gospel of it. And after two pretty thorough surveys I am satisfied that I shall never learn to like these Dutch pictures. The female forms in them are all alike to my eye, from the Virgin to the women pulling the canal boat. When I mentioned this to Mrs. C. S. Brooks, the butter sculptress, she assured me there was really great and ideal beauty in them—to a Hollander. May be so. But they are all Dutch to me.

Another section I cannot learn to like is the Russian, though it is always crowded with ardent admirers. Several of the pictures are indeed wonders in art, but they are so dreadfully intense. There is so much knocking down and dragging out. There are three large pictures in which the whole black tragedy of Russian history seems to be concentrated and the main one (No. 84 A, "Pugatchoff, Impersonator of Peter III") appears to draw and fascinate the crowd very much as a rattlesnake might. Another represents a sort of riot among the guests at the "Wedding of the Grand Duke Vasalia II." Does the Russian artistic mind turn naturally towards the dark and the dreadful? Verily, it seems so.

J. B. PARKE.

Handling the Crowds.

More than a quarter of a million people attended the fair on Illinois Day, and yet the transportation facilities were not taxed to anything like their utmost. The crowds were handled admirably, or rather they handled themselves admirably. Both the transportation companies and the public are much better educated on the subject of getting to and from the fair than they were the Fourth of July. Not one of the harrowing scenes of that day, of people physically exhausted, struggling for a chance to get home, were repeated. At no time were there any such late crowds on the streets along the north and west side cable loops as there were the Fourth of July. The Fourth of July the World's fair steamboats carried in all something over 48,000 people. As late as 10 o'clock at night steamboat inspectors were busy preventing them from overloading on the trip down. On Illinois night the last boat, the John A. Dix, left the World's fair pier soon after 11 o'clock with very few passengers. The inspectors say that from 8 o'clock until 11 in the morning and from 2 o'clock until 7 in the afternoon the boats did a replica of the Fourth of July business in carrying people to the fair.

Souvenir Tickets.

Souvenir tickets of the World's Columbian exposition are on sale at all entrances, at Van Buren street and at the leading hotels. The series consists of Lincoln, Columbus, Washington, Indian. They are the finest engraved tickets that can be executed. A ticket purchased at any of the gates is good for a single admission any time between its purchase and the close of the exposition.

ENORMOUS COST OF BAD ROADS.

More Than Double the Annual Road Tax Sunk in the Mud.

Nearly 1,000 merchants, marketmen, legislators, members of the League of American Wheelmen, county and state road improvement associations, and farmers, editors, city and county officials, bankers and others at 818 cities and towns in 28 states east of the Rocky mountains have sent replies to Bradstreet's inquiry as to the condition of neighboring country roads, the effects of the same on prices of agricultural products and farm lands, on mercantile collections, interests and discount rates, and to kindred inquiries.

An attempt was made to arrive at a uniform basis for reporting the per capita country road tax in all states covered by the report, but conditions underlying the raising of funds for road improvement differ in so many instances that no generalization from replies to this question is possible. It remains to be stated that with direct county or state appropriations for country road improvement, such as prevail in some portions of the east, the best class of roads are a result with little friction or disagreement. At the south and southwest, where are found the farming out of road improvement to tollgate companies, the system of working county prisoners on country roads, a direct road tax and the requiring of men of from 21 to 50 years of age or thereabouts to work from two to six days on the roads each year, or the payment of what is regarded as an equivalent sum of money—where all these systems of improving roads are employed results shown are far from satisfactory.

From Maine to Texas and from Georgia to Minnesota prices of farm products have been advanced unduly because of delays to interior wagon traffic by heavy roads. In comparatively few instances no advance is reported because good roads have been in existence for a number of years, thus leading correspondents to report "no effect" on prices of agricultural staples due to bad roads. Quotations for potatoes, hay, butter and eggs, and almost all farm products, are included among those specified. In many instances prices of these products have been high in cities and towns, owing to scarcity, and the farmer, if roads would have permitted him to get to town and sell his surplus, would have been able to pay his road tax from the extra profit.

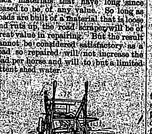
The effect of bad country roadways on mercantile collections, interest and discount rates can no longer be questioned, so many of the correspondents have pointed out an extremely unfavorable influence on mercantile collections not only during the past spring, but in the spring and fall of preceding years. Many bankers and others having financial dealings with country merchants explain that rates of discount on country paper are largely influenced to the detriment of makers by bad roads, and the tendency among banks is to get remuneration for the annoyance of past due obligations, with a disposition to curtail accommodations where prompt attention is not given.

Perhaps the most ambitious question among those sent out was that which asked for the "total direct and indirect excess cost annually to farmers and country merchants in your vicinity of bad roads, because of delayed or irregular wagon traffic in its effect on farm values, discounts, collections, etc.," and it is significant to note that while the number of replies is comparatively few those which have been received are from exceptionally well informed people in all instances and lead to the conclusion that most of the estimates which have heretofore been made in public prints and elsewhere as to the aggregate loss of this character have been understated rather than exaggerated. In one instance four independent replies to the question (from a single county) ranged within $10,000 of an alleged grand total direct and indirect loss there amounting to $100,000 per annum from causes as quoted above.

The replies make it plain that one or two years' losses in this direction would come near gridironing the country districts east of the Missouri river with roads which would compare favorably with the best macadamized or telford avenues of large cities anywhere in the United States. The heretofore prevailing estimate of the total annual road tax of $120,000,000 is therefore probably less than one-half the total annual loss due to bad country highways.—New York Sporting Times.

Repairing Roads With a Road Scraper.

In ordinary repairs the road machine plays an important part, its use being in the main to give shape by dragging back materials that have long since ceased to be of any value. So long as roads are built of a material that is loose and ruts up, the road scraper will be of great value in repairing. But the result cannot be considered satisfactory as a road so repaired will not increase the load per horse and will to but a limited extent shed water.

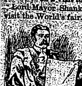


ROAD SCRAPER.

Water below but near the surface is a destroying element, and the whole theory and practice are to get it out and keep it out. There is no division of opinion on this point. The division comes on the cheapest and most practical way of doing this. A dirt road, under cover, would doubtless give satisfaction to light travel, and it would probably retain its shape for a long time if sprinkled just enough to prevent dust forming and not enough to make mud.—Good Roads.

DUBLIN'S LORD MAYOR.

He Will Accompany Other Irish Officials on a Visit to the Fair.



LORD MAYOR SHANKS.

Lord Mayor Shanks of Dublin is to visit the World's fair. He comes as the official representative of the capital city of Ireland and was duly authorized to make the journey by resolutions passed by the city's aldermen and councilors. With him will come ex-Lord Mayors Meade, Gill and Sullivan, High Sheriff Doherty, Corporation Clerk Campbell and Alderman Mayne, who hopes to be lord mayor himself some day.

The present lord mayor is one of the most popular chief executives Dublin has ever had. He has been a leader in the city council for a number of years and is possessed of considerable influence other than political. He is a home ruler of the stanchest sort and has a strong admiration for Gladstone. His age is about 55 years, and he is a man of good address and a fair public speaker.

Mr. Shanks is especially interested in Irish representation at the fair and did a great deal publicly and privately to assist Lady Aberdeen in establishing the Irish village in the Midway plaisance. He has also given liberally to help along the cottage industries. He is a man of wealth, having made a great deal of money in the manufacture of ginger ale and mineral waters. He is also interested in a bicycle manufactory and in several other business enterprises.

Aldermen Meade and Mayne are even more interested in the success of the Irish village than the lord mayor. The former is chairman of the executive committee that established the village, and Blarney castle is one of his pet projects. He, too, is a man of great wealth, liberality and public spirit. As a contractor for public works he has had much to do with the best improvements in Dublin.

Alderman Mayne's interest in the Irish village is personal as well as national, for Mrs. White and Miss Agnes Mayne, who manage it, are his daughters. He is one of the most progressive members of the Dublin council and had a great deal to do with the lighting of the city by electricity and other improvements. He was a member of parliment for Tipperay for a long time and did good service for his constituency, being active in everything that tends to better the condition of his native land.

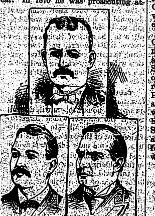
THE OHIO CAMPAIGN.

Something About Gubernatorial Candidates Bracken, Neal and McKinley.

Aside from the issues involved, the Ohio gubernatorial campaign comes at an opportune time to attract national attention. Only 18 of the states hold elections this fall, and of these only five ballot for new governors—Ohio, Virginia, Massachusetts, Iowa and Wisconsin. These five will all be closely watched by the whole country, but the prominence given to national questions in the Buckeye fight has a tendency to centralize interest upon it.

Edward J. Bracken, who is the nominee of the People's Party for governor, is a veteran in the ranks of labor agitators. He was formerly president of the Columbus Trades assembly and is a man of more than ordinary intellectual force and intelligence. Recently he has been the Columbus correspondent for several journals devoted exclusively to labor's interests, and in this capacity has assisted the passage of many of the bills demanded by workingmen.

Lawrence T. Neal, the Democratic gubernatorial candidate, is known the country over as the author of the tariff plank in the last Democratic national platform. He is a lawyer and was city solicitor of Chillicothe in 1867 and a member of the legislature in the same year. In 1870 he was prosecuting attorney of Ross county, and in 1872 was sent to congress from the Seventh district, being re-elected in 1874. He was a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor in 1889, and again in 1891, but was each time defeated by Governor Campbell. He was also before the Democratic caucus for the United States senatorship when Brice was selected. He is a native of Parkersburg, W. Va., 50 years of age and a bachelor.



BRACKEN.
NEAL. McKINLEY.

Of Governor McKinley, who has been renominated by the Republicans, little need be said beyond the statement that he is 50 years of age and served seven terms as a member of congress, where he became famous because of his prominence in tariff matters. He was elected governor in 1891 by a plurality of 21,511 votes. The particulars of the financial disaster which overtook him last winter are still fresh in the public mind.

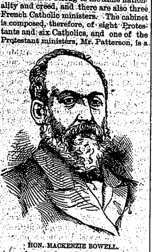
A CANADIAN CRISIS.

Trouble In the Dominion Cabinet Over Mackenzie Bowell's Indiscretion.

A resolution condemning Gladstone's Irish policy recently passed by the Orange grand lodge of Canada is likely to split the Dominion cabinet and cause a political crisis. It was introduced by Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, minister of trade and commerce, who is acting premier in the absence abroad of Sir John Thompson.

The situation is peculiar. Sir John Thompson, the leader of the government, is an Irish Catholic. Two other members of the cabinet belong to the same nationality and creed, and there are also three French Catholic ministers. The cabinet is composed, therefore, of eight Protestants and six Catholics, and one of the Protestant ministers, Mr. Patterson, is a strong home ruler. Yet Mr. Bowell, the acting premier, by moving a resolution condemning Irish home rule and directing that money be forwarded to the Ulster Orangemen, placed the whole Canadian government squarely in antagonism to the policy of the present government of Great Britain and seriously compromized his party.



HON. MACKENZIE BOWELL.

The Irish Catholics, who form a considerable part of the Thompson government's following, condemn Bowell's conduct severely, and the Catholic members of the ministry dare not attempt to uphold Mr. Bowell's course, so unless the cabinet is reconstructed before next winter there is likely to be a lively discussion and possibly a crisis in parliament over the matter.

Mr. Bowell is an ex-grand master of the Orange order and was for many years looked on as its leader. As a member of Sir John MacDonald's cabinet, however, he twice supported resolutions in favor of home rule, and this caused him to be regarded as "unsound" by his fellow Orangemen. The introduction of the recent resolutions seems to have been an effort to rehabilitate himself. He has been a member of parliament since 1867 and was first called to the cabinet in 1878, since when he has been almost continuously a member of the government.

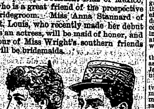
AFTER AN AMERICAN BRIDE.

General Ezeta Coming From Salvador to Wed Ida Dent Wright.

That a wealthy foreigner of distinction should wed a dowerless American girl is a reversal of the usual rule in international marriages, but that is what General Antonio Ezeta, at present vice president, and soon to be president, of the little republic of Salvador, is going to do. The maiden of his choice is Ida Dent Wright, a native of Georgia, the daughter of Mrs. Marie Robinson Wright, a writer for the New York press. The wedding is to be in St. Patrick's cathedral, New York, and Cardinal Gibbons will perform the ceremony.

Miss Wright is fair and tall and has blue eyes and golden hair. She was educated in France and has traveled extensively in Europe. She first met General Ezeta at a ball in San Salvador while on a tour of Mexico and Central America with her mother. She talks German, French and Spanish fluently, a very fortunate circumstance, for General Ezeta speaks no English.

The wedding will be a brilliant affair. General Ezeta will be accompanied by a military suite of 25 Salvadorian officers, and the minister and members of the Salvadorian legation at Washington and other prominent Central American representatives will attend. Governor Prince of New Mexico is also expected, and perhaps President Diaz of Mexico, who is a great friend of the prospective bridegroom. Miss Anna Stannard of St. Louis, who recently made her debut as an actress, will be maid of honor, and four of Miss Wright's southern friends will be bridesmaids.



IDA DENT WRIGHT. GENERAL EZETA.

General Ezeta, who is a widower and the father of three children, is a very wealthy man. He has large estates in Salvador, among them several valuable coffee plantations. New York artists are now engaged in refurnishing and decorating the palace to which he will escort his bride. His wedding present, it is said, will be a necklace of diamonds and black pearls valued at $40,000.

Besides being vice president of Salvador, General Ezeta is commander in chief of the Salvadorian army, which position he achieved during the revolution that resulted in the election to the presidency of his brother, Senor Carlos Ezeta, who still holds that office, but will vacate it next year to give place to General Antonio. The Salvadorian congress recently appropriated $100,000 to send President Carlos to the World's fair.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

WHEREAS, MILTON VAN DYKE, UNmarried, of the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, as mortgagor, did, on the 14th day of December A. D. 1889, duly execute and deliver to the "Union Central Life Insurance Company" a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Ohio and having its principal office in the City of Cincinnati, Ohio, as mortgagee, his mortgage bearing date the 14th day of December A. D. 1889, whereby he mortgaged to said mortgagee the following described lands situate in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, viz: The west half (1-2) of section thirty-four (34) in township one hundred and forty nine (149) north of range forty-three (43) west, containing 320 acres of land; and which mortgage was, with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for Polk County, Minnesota, on the 16th day of December A. And which mortgage was given to secure the payment of one thousand ($1000) dollars and interest thereon at eight per cent per annum payable on the 1st day of January of each year, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with interest coupons attached made by said mortgagor and payable to the order of said mortgagee and which note became due on December 14th, 1899.

THE latest advices that we have seem to indicate that the elevators will soon have money enough to handle the crop without having to adopt the the certificate plan. This is as it should be.

THE health of the president is said by some to be in a precarious condition others say he is all right. Be that as it may the fact remains that he convened congress and then skipped out for his summer resort with great alacrity as though to wash his hands of the whole business.

THE appearances all indicate an early return of that confidence that has been said to be missing from business circles for some weeks now and a full resumption of business all along the line. It looks as though the money to handle the wheat crop will be forth-coming and things get down to their normal condition soon.

Minneapolis says she can't find the money with which to handle our wheat crop. What does Duluth say? This is what the Duluth News Tribune has to say about it: "The wheat crop will soon be moving and Duluth will get a large share of it. What is more she will be able to handle it. Make no mistake about that. The money will be found all right."

ST. PAUL and Minneapolis papers do not seem to appreciate the fact that the north part of their own state lies in that very Red River valley whose praises they are now constantly ringing as the "bread-basket of the world," in connection with the visit of the foreign commissioners to us. They constantly refer to the glories of North Dakota; entirely ignoring the fact that Minnesota is right in it.

THE Wilson bill, to repeal the Sherman law passed the lower house of Congress on Monday, by a vote of 239 for repeal to 110 against. Amendments for free coinage from 6 to 1 to 20 to 1 inclusive were sucessively voted down by a large maority in each case, then the final ote resulted as above. It is said hat the senate will now discuss the atter until about September 15, efore a final vote is taken.

THE speech of Senator Hill on the ilver question in the senate last week as a direct bid for the presidential omination in '96. The way he cored the administration was musing but if anybody could get ny idea of what Hill's policy would e by his speech he would be a good ortune-teller. He makes a direct id for the support of populists and e disaffected members of his party. here are those who predict that ave will be the next presidential ominee of the democratic party.

Bro. Lamphire, of the Moorhead ews does not approve of the prosed plan for handling the crops is fall. This is what he has to say out it: With due deference to e judgment to Ex-Governor Meram and other high-minded and triotic men who honestly desire relieve the present business and dustrial distress caused by the oney famine, and have proposed d advocate the scheme of issuing -called clearing house certificates, ne checks or other substitutes for oney, in order to move the crops d tide over present difficulties, the ws ventures to speak in disapoval of the plan. We have a vernment "of the people for the ople and by the people." Its presentatives are now in session e very important power that has en imposed upon Congress by the nstitution is to provide for the coining of hard money and the issue of paper or credit money. Let that body do its duty and do it speedily. To allow banks and associations of banks, corporations, firms or individuals to issue substitutes for money under regulation of law, would be an experiment too dangerous; to permit them to do it without law or against the law, indicates a helplessness and imbecility on the part of the national administration that we never expected to see in our life-time. The plan now talked of in Washington of passing an act authorising the secretary of treasury to issue notes, based on the silver bullion now in the treasury, is sensible. It is in line of what this paper has advocated. It can be done within forty-eight hours and the paper can be paid out by the million at once. It would instantly relieve the congestion and squelch the shylocks of New York who are trading on the necessities of the people by charging and receiving from 1 to 4 per cent bonus for currency.

Minneapolis has the very best permanent Exposition Building in the country. It is to be filled next September with the most elaborate products of field, factory and atelier ever seen in the Northwest.

In addition to the general display there will be a splendid exhibition of dairy, horticultural and agricultural products, for which premiums aggregating in value $7,000 are offered.

Many novel and attractive manufacturing exhibits will be seen.

The Exposition is held during the four weeks commencing September 6.

Reduced rates on all railroad lines have been secured for the Minneapolis Exposition, which is to be held this year from September 6 to October 7.

Under the excellent management of W. M. Brackett, last year's Exposition was a great success. Mr. Brackett is again at the helm, and has the entire business community of Minneapolis behind him.

We are informed that the exhibits at this year's Exposition will surpass those at any of the proceeding seven displays at the "Flour City."

The President of the Norwegain "Storthing"

Viggo Ullmann, the radical leader of the liberal party in Norway and president of the Norwegian "Storthing" (parliament), will deliver two lectures in Crookston and probably in two or three other cities in this part of the state, about the middle of September. One lecture will be on the political situation in Norway and the one on the latest Norwegian literature. Notice of the exact time place will be given in this paper and in the "Red River Dalen" of Crookston Minn.

The Fashionable Flower.

Everybody who is anybody knows that it is the thing just now to wear violets. They look so dainty, sweet, modest and girlish, and then there's something sc aristocratic about them.

But their cost is aristocratic too.

So the girls, after spending all their spare pennies for them and going without soda water in order to purchase the wee purple flowers, hit upon the plan of buying very natural looking artificial violets and wearing them with that sweetly innocent air that deceives a man every time. Sometimes they are very successful, and if the violets are pinned on just right and droop at the proper angle, with a realistic background of green leaves, nobody ever suspects that they are not real. Sometimes a girl meets another girl acquaintance who is just mean enough when there's a man one knows with her to sniff at the violets and then cry in that innocent, surprised way that some girls know how to assume so well: "Why, dear me! your violets aren't real! I never dreamed they were artificial and tried to smell them. How clever you are, you sly creature!"

Then the wearer of the flowers would like to weep from mortification. Some girls are so hateful.—Chicago News-Record.

Making the Most of Household Pets.

Whatever beast is kept it should have its own quarters in which it is at home and free from intrusion and to which it can retire when it chooses. This home should be kept clean and sweet by frequent changes of bedding and the use of soap and water. No one has a right to keep an animal in confinement who finds it too much trouble to attend to its health and comfort. It should be regularly fed on food that is most healthful for it, and what is quite as essential to its happiness and consequently to its health, it should be talked to and noticed as much as anybody.

I am certain many animals and birds suffer and die in our homes from pure loneliness and from being regarded by their human neighbors as creatures of an altogether different nature. Whereas the truth is, if one will but cultivate their acquaintance, he will be astonished to see how the dullest and most stupid will wake out of its apparent torpor and show understanding and character.

I know a family very fond of pets, in which the creatures show most extraordinary individuality. Their cats do things no cat was ever before known to do, their parrots and other birds show what we call human nature in a wonderful degree, and their dogs almost talk. The reason is plain; the animal or bird is made one of the family. It is talked to and petted as well as cared for. Its intelligence develops, and the beast becomes very like the human being.—

STORY OF A MUDDY ROAD.

How the Mud Turtle Beat the Hare—A Modern Version of Æsop's Fable.

Once upon a time, during a spring thaw, a mud turtle came out of the comatose state in which he had remained all winter and started for a millpond. On the way he met a frisky young hare, who straightway began to guy him because of his slowness. This caused the mud turtle to get exceeding wroth, whereupon the frisky young hare renewed his efforts.

Now, the mud turtle was a regular subscriber to his home paper and therefore was up to snuff. He knew that every spring the trail between Yellow Creek and Loran was one wild waste of soft and sticky mud, so he promptly offered to bet the cigars with the hare that the latter wouldn't stand half a show with him in a race between Kleckner's corner, Yellow Creek, and Fry's corner, Loran. This tickled the hare immensely, for he thought it was the biggest bluff that was ever promulgated by any being on this terrestial sphere. But as he had no particular objection to filling his vest pocket with good Havanas he snapped up the offer so quick that the mud turtle, who was considerable of a snapper himself, opened wide his mouth in admiration.

HE WINKED HIS OFF EYE.

Arrangements were soon perfected for this grand track event. The contestants toed the scratch, and the word was given for them to go. With a few jumps down the sidewalk the hare was far in the lead. He turned once to yell back to the mud turtle, inviting him to start, but the latter kept in the road and sawed mud and said nothing. Being in his natural element, the mud turtle knew he was all right.

In about six jiffies the hare had made half a mile and found himself at the end of Main street. Here he had to leave the dry sidewalk and take to the highway. Two leaps landed him in the middle of the road. He stuck there.

Along about 8 o'clock in the afternoon the mud turtle came to the spot, and with a pitying glance at the hare, supplemented by a wink of his off eye, he forged past.

Three weeks later news came that the turtle had reached the goal slightly disfigured, but still very much on the turf, while the last heard of the hare was that he was still struggling and calling the road authorities very bad names.—Good Roads.

Add Another R.

Education in the art of roadbuilding is so much needed and so hard to obtain that an enthusiastic advocate of the road reform movement declares that to the proverbial three R's there should be added a fourth—roads.

The great scientific British roadbuilders, Macadam and Telford, were incited to their inventions by the pressing needs of agriculture and commerce. The fine, permanent highways which they laid out took the place of clumsy turnpikes with heavy tolls, which in their turn had been preceded by roads so wretched that 200 years ago, it is said, produce was often allowed to rot in one English village when in another only 20 miles away there was actual want.

Somewhat similar as to cause and effect are the well proved facts that in some parts of this country farms only 10 miles from large cities are worth but $25 an acre because of the bad roads leading to the city markets, while elsewhere farms 20 miles from a city, but connected with it by model highways, are valued at from $200 to $300 an acre.

In some sections of the country also it costs a quarter of the price received for grain to pay for carting it to market over bad roads.

If the farmers once knew what good roads could do for them, they would no longer, as Professor Shaler expresses it, "wallow in the mire of their ways, pay excessive tolls—endure, in a word, a grinding taxation generation after generation without appreciating the burden which rests upon them."—Youth's Companion.

Caution with Canned Fruit.

Now that the season of canned fruit is again upon us housekeepers will do well to repeat the caution which forgetful maids need periodically—to empty the provisions out of the can as soon as it is opened. Often a most dangerous acid is formed by the chemical action of the air upon the soldering of the cans.

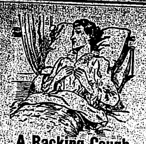
It is this acid, indeed, which is responsible for much of the prejudice against canned food. Many of the reported accidents would, if they could be thoroughly investigated, be found to have resulted from carelessness. The thrifty cook who, wishing everything in ample time, opens her can of corn or peas an hour or more before it is put into the saucepan exposes the family to a danger which is none the less serious because usually avoided. Open the cans if necessary, but empty their contents at once, and never set a remnant away in them for future use.—Her Point of View in New York Times.

No Advancement In Roads.

No other civilized nation on earth has as bad, cheap roads as there are in America, and foreigners who visit the country wonder that people who have developed so marvelously in almost every other commendable direction are so backward in a line of improvement that yields so handsome a return for money invested as does this one.—Detroit Free Press.

Get Him Interested.

Once convince a man that $5 worth of labor spent on the road passing his farm means the saving of two or three times that sum in the transportation of his goods over the roads and he will not only join in the movement himself, but will see to it that his neighbors are interested.—Utica (N. Y.) Observer.



A Racking Cough

Cured by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Mrs. P. D. HALL, 217 Genesee St., Lockport, N. Y., says:

"Over thirty years ago, I remember hearing my father describe the wonderful curative effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. During a recent attack of La Grippe, which assumed the form of a catarrh, soreness of the lungs, accompanied by an aggravating cough, I used various remedies and prescriptions. While some of these medicines partially alleviated the coughing during the day, none of them afforded me any relief from that spasmodic action of the lungs which would seize me the moment I attempted to lie down at night. After ten or twelve such nights, I was and had about decided to sit up all night in my easy chair, and procure what sleep I could in that way. It then occurred to me that I had a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took a spoonful of this preparation in a little water, and was able to lie down without coughing. In a few moments I fell asleep, and awoke in the morning greatly refreshed and feeling much better. I took a teaspoonful of the Pectoral every night for a week, then gradually decreased the dose, and in two weeks my cough was cured."

Dear Sir:—Allow me to compliment your company through these lines for the perfect comfort, the beautiful scenery, the smoothness of its road-bed, and the great speed, which make traveling on your lines a pleasure of the highest order.

I have traveled a good deal for the last year, both in Europe and America, but I do not know that I have ever enjoyed a trip on a railroad more than a recent trip from Minneapolis to La Crosse.

The scenery along the great Father of Waters, is such a magnificent and such a varied one, that one forgets it late or never. The reclining chairs and the well equipped cars are all of the best that I have ever met with. The usual smoke, dust and dirt, which make traveling a hardship on most roads, are entirely absent on yours. I remain,

Yours very truly,

THE BILL PASSED.

VOTE IN THE HOUSE ON THE WILSON BILL.

After All the Amendments Had Been Defeated by Overwhelming Majorities, Mr. Wilson's Measure Was Passed by a Vote of 240 to 110. Those Who Voted Aye on the Amendments.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—Under the impression that the order under which the house has been operating the past two weeks, so far as the hour of meeting was concerned, prevailed, the public galleries of the house of representatives were filled before 11 a. m., and many members were in their seats on the floor at that hour. The surrounding corridors and lobbies of the floor were also filled with a throng of people, curious to know the outcome of the oratorical contest which has been going on within the chamber for 14 days.

No New Amendments.

After the reading of the journal Mr. Weaver of New York appeared at the bar of the house on the arm of his colleague, General Tracey, and was sworn in by the speaker. The resolution contained in the order of procedure on the silver question was reported by the clerk providing for a vote first upon free coinage of silver at the present ratio of 16 to 1. Representative Bailey of Texas asked if, in the event of all the amendments included in the order being defeated, it would be in order to propose an additional amendment germane to the subject. Speaker Crisp replied that as at present advised he would answer no; that the order provides exhaustively all that the house may conclusively consider, but when the time came to formally present the question the gentleman from Texas might be heard. Representative McMillin of Tennessee desired to offer an amendment providing for the free coinage of a product of the silver mines of the United States, but Mr. Bland objected even to having read, saying that such a proposition was not free coinage at all.

The Balloting Begun.

The roll was called upon the amendment to the Wilson bill providing for free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. It resulted, yeas 123, nays 225. Not nearly as much interest was taken on the second vote, which was on the ratio of 17 to 1. The decisive vote on the 16 to 1 ratio seemed to dishearten the silver men and in place of the attention which was paid to the first was substituted a listlessness which spread throughout the hall. The vote resulted in the defeat of the amendment, yeas 100, nays 225. The 18 to 1 standard was defeated by a vote of yeas 102, nays 239. The house then voted immediately on the 19 to 1 amendment and it was also defeated by a vote of yeas 104, nays 238. Then came the 20 to 1 amendment and this in turn was defeated though it showed more strength, the vote standing yeas 121, nays 222. No one who voted for 19 to 1 voted against 20 to 1, but there was a decided gain. The proposition to re-enact the Bland-Allison act as a proviso to the repeal bill received the strongest support, but even that was defeated by a majority of 77, the vote standing yeas 136, nays 213. The vote was taken upon the final passage of the Wilson bill and it was passed, yeas 240, nays 110. Those voting against repeal were as follows:

Democrats—Messrs. Abbott, Alexander, Allen, Arnold, Bailey, Bankhead, Bell, Blanchard, Bland, Boatner, Bower, Branch, Bryan, Burnes, Caminetti, Clark, Cobb, Cockrell, Coffen, Cooper, Cox, Crawford, Culberson, Dearmond, Denison, Dinsmore, Dockery, Ellis, Enloe, Epes, Fithian, Fyan, Goodnight, Grady, Hall, Hatch, Heard, Henderson, Hooker, Hutcheson, Ikert, Jones, Kilgore, Kyle, Lane, Latimer, Livingstone, Maddox, Maguire, Mallory, Marshall, McCulloch, McDearmont, McLaurin, McRae, Money, Morgan, Moses, Neill, Richardson (Tenn.), Robbins, Robertson, Sayers, Sibley, Snodgrass, Stallings, Stockdale, Strait, Talbert, Tarsney, Tate, Terry, Wheeler, Williams, Williams, Woodward.

Republicans—Aitkin, Bowers, Broderick, Cannon, Curtis, Ellis, Funston, Hager, Hainer, Hartman, Hepburn, Hermann, Hilborn, Hopkins, Loud, Lucas, Meikeljohn, Pickler, Smith, Sweet, Wilson.

Populists—Baker, Bell, Boen, Davis, Harris, Kem, Hudson, McKeighen, Newlands, Pence, Simpson.

The anti-silver men knew that they were playing a winning game from the start and when this overwhelming majority was shown for the Wilson bill its advocates did not indulge in enthusiastic cheers, but contented themselves with a single round of applause.

Mr. Catchings (Dem., Miss.) gave notice that he would ask the house to next consider the rules and then, at 3:30 the house adjourned.

ON THE RETIRED LIST.

Mantle and Allen Not Entitled to Seats in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—There was an unusually small gathering of spectators in the senate during the morning, the vote in the house on the silver bill having attracted the curious and the sightseers to the south wing of the Capitol. Notice was given by Mr. Sherman that he would address the senate next Wednesday on the silver question and by Mr. Wolcott (Rep., Colo.) for Thursday.

The bill allowing the national banks to increase their circulation up to the par value of the bonds deposited by them was taken up, the question being on the amendment offered by Mr. Cockrell (Dem., Mo.) for the redemption of such 2 per cent bonds as may be presented, and the payment thereof in a new issue of treasury notes. The vote was taken without the discussion being renewed and the amendment was rejected by yeas 28, nays 29.

Mr. Cockrell offered an amendment authorizing the holder of any United States bonds to deposit them and to receive in exchange legal tender notes equal to the face value of the bond. The bond is to be held in the treasury subject to redemption in the same amount of legal tender notes which are then to be destroyed. The amendment was discussed until 2 o'clock, when the Lee Mantle case was taken up.

Senatorial Cases Settled.

Mr. Vance's motion to lay on the table Mr. Manderson's motion to reconsider the vote by which the senate decided last week that Mr. Mantle was not entitled to a seat was the first question considered. The vote was taken and resulted yeas 31, nays 28. So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to. The vote was then taken on the original resolution as amended and it was agreed to, yeas 32, nays 29. The effect of the vote is a declaration that Mr. Mantle is not entitled to the seat. A vote was then taken on the right of John B. Allen to a seat from the state of Washington, claimed under similar circumstances, and it was also decided in the negative by exactly the same vote, 32 to 29. No action was taken on the third case from the state of Wyoming, Mr. Beckwith having resigned. The consideration of the national bank circulation bill was then resumed.

Without action on the amendment the senate proceeded to executive business and at 5 p. m. adjourned.

BY ACCLAMATION.

Hawkeye Democrats Renominate Governor Boies.

DES MOINES, Aug. 28.—The Democratic state convention, by a rising vote which was entirely unanimous, and with cheers which were many times repeated, for the third time placed Horace Boies in nomination for governor. The report Tuesday night that he would not refuse was all that was needed to secure for him the honor in the face of his letter of two weeks ago opposing third terms and expressing a determination to retire to private life.

The ticket was completed as follows: Lieutenant governor, A. L. Bestow; judge of supreme court, John Cligett; superintendent of schools, J. B. Knoefler; railroad commissioner, Thomas Bowman.

LOOKS LIKE A STRIKE.

Employes of the Milwaukee Will Not Accept a Cut.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 28.—"It looks very much as if there would be a strike on the Milwaukee road next Friday," said an employe of the system during the day. "I have it as straight as it can come from headquarters," he continued, "that the company will not recede from its position regarding a cut of 10 per cent in the trainmen's wages Sept. 1, and I also have the word of one of the members of the grievance committee, which met here a week ago, that its members are as equally determined not to accept the cut. I understand that the committee is not at all satisfied with the company's representations as to its losses of business. The committeeman who talked to me said he did not believe the earnings of the road had decreased as much as the published reports indicated; in fact he thought the statements had been prepared for the purpose of frightening the men. I can see no other outcome than a strike, which will probably take place Friday or at the outside Saturday."

Dozen Convicts From Bismarck Penitentiary Break For Liberty.

BISMARCK, N. D., Aug. 28.—Twelve of the 22 convicts engaged in a brick yard adjoining town, and about two miles from the penitentiary, while being conveyed to the prison from work about 5 p. m., broke away from the guards and ran in different directions, most of them to the timber and thick underbrush south of the city. Six only have been recaptured. Hundreds of armed men have surrounded the timber, and, as it is bright moonlight, it is believed others will be captured before morning.

Foreign Visitors at Grand Forks.

GRAND FORKS, N. D., Aug. 28.—Since Grand Forks was founded some 16 years ago her citizens never entertained guests of such diverse nationality as those who gathered here when the world's fair representatives left the Great Northern special train, and, as the guests of the city, gathered at the banquet table spread for them in the main hotel of this pretty little city. In the afternoon the guests were driven about the city and paid a visit to the state university.

Chief Arthur Settles.

TOLEDO, O., Aug. 28.—Judge Ricks has made an order allowing the receiver of the Ann Arbor Railroad company and Chief Arthur of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers to settle the $300,000 damage suit brought by the railroad company against Chief Arthur during the late trouble. Arthur agrees to pay $2,500 and the costs in this case and also the costs in the case of the Ann Arbor against the Pennsylvania and other connecting lines that were brought into the affair.

Surveying Contracts Let.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—The commissioner of the general land office has let the contracts for surveys in South Dakota as follows: Elbert D. Hawkins of Vermillion, S. D., to survey four townships in the Lower Brule Indian reservation for allotments to Indians, the price is $1,750; Carl Gunderson, Vermillion, S. D., to survey two townships in the Blue Ridge Indian reservation for allotments to Indians, the price being $900.

WEALTHY CHILDREN.

HOW THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF THE RICH ARE BROUGHT UP.

Young People Who Travel All Over the Civilized World Without Interruption to Their Studies—Plain Food and Few Sweetmeats For Most of Them.

There are in the United States about 100 children who, upon arriving at the age of maturity, will come into the possession of very large fortunes. They will each have many millions of dollars. In fact one-sixth of the wealth of the United States is supposed to be in the hands of 20 millionaire families, and each child of each family will some day own the millions that have been accumulated for it by its parents and grandparents.

The parents of the children who will some day own one-sixth of all the wealth in this country are very careful about the training and the education of these fortunate youngsters. They are bringing them up as carefully as ever the children of the royal families of England and Germany were brought up. Their teachers are selected from the best in the world, and they are taught, disciplined and drilled in a wonderful way—a way that many children would consider very hard, strict and tiresome.

These millionaire children must be well trained, because they will control many of the railroads of America, telegraph companies, and gold, silver and oil mines, besides iron interests and other great industries.

As a rule they travel a great deal, and some of them have been over our whole country.

Take the Vanderbilt children for example. They are constantly on the go. In the summer they are at Newport. Later they visit Lenox. Then they go to Europe in a private steam yacht and return just in time to spend Christmas at home. From February until June they travel through the west in a private car.

But during all these trips their studies are uninterrupted. A corps of teachers, governess and private tutors accompany them everywhere. Their studies are no more disturbed by a departure for Mexico than a public school child's studies are disturbed by a hailstorm.

Some time ago Mr. Seward Webb and his wife and children journeyed to the World's fair in a special train. They stopped to visit Mexico, Texas and California first. During all this long trip the Webb children and some little cousins who accompanied them went on with their studies as usual. There was a special car just for that purpose. The car was called the "Idler," and it was gorgeously hung with blue tapestries and fine pictures. It had a blue carpet and blue chairs, and all its furnishings suggested a daintily appointed schoolroom rather than a railroad car.

While on such trips the children are taught geography from observation, and it is easy to see that they get a fine knowledge of the country which they will some day control to a great extent.

When the W. K. Vanderbilt children are at home they are taught in a schoolroom which is beautifully decorated with Mother Goose melodies and nursery rhymes. There are also simple quotations from Shakespeare for the older children. Nothing is spared to make the book education complete.

In their daily lives, their goings and their comings and their play, nearly all of the little American aristocrats are brought up alike. And that is with extreme simplicity. They dress with one-half the elegance of other children, and they eat plainer food. Such children as these wear no jewelry at all. They do not know what it is to have gold rings, bangle bracelets and necklaces. Nor do they carry watches.

Mrs. Paran Stevens, who is a very rich woman, says that her daughter, who is now the wealthy Mrs. Arthur Paget of London and New York, went wild with delight over a simple little ring given to her when she was 18. It was her very first bit of jewelry.

Mrs. Whitney, the wife of ex-Secretary Whitney, used to make it a point to take her lunch at the children's dinner hour, and it was then that she took occasion to teach her little ones by precept and example the little elegances of manner which mark the well bred person. Mrs. Flagler, the wife of the rich Standard Oil man, goes farther and often lunches with her children in their schoolroom and devotes many hours to personal instructions.

But of course the daily life of rich children is not all discipline. Though they do not have candy and jewelry and rich clothes and rich food, they have luxuries which other children do not have. They own beautiful horses and fine dogs, all of the best breeds. A millionaire boy has his saddle horse and often his tandem team when at his country home, and some of these boys have a four in hand. When one of these boys wants a new horse, he buys one or selects one from his father's stables. He has a kennel of dogs, besides rare birds and other pets. And if he wants to own a collection of stamps or stones or butterflies or any other one thing, his father gives him money to buy the best that can be bought.

When young William Astor Chanler, who is now exploring the heart of Africa, was spending his summers at Lake George not many years ago, he was seized with a fancy for owning boats of all kinds. He wanted canoes, duckboats, yachts and launches.

And he got them all. But the children of the neighborhood used to say that "poor Willie Chanler" was never allowed to buy soda water or candy. One day the temptation to buy candy became too strong for the boy millionaire, and he marched boldly into a candy store with a company of Lake George boys at his heels.

"Give me 25 cents' worth of candy," said he, "and charge it to William A."—New York Press.

Assertion unsupported by fact is nugatory. Surmise and general abuse, in however elegant language, ought not to pass for truth.—Junius.

A View of the Common Herd.

The society journal Vogue has as one of its correspondents an alleged member of the "Four Hundred," who writes as follows: "What is the attraction yearly at the horse show, which is always jammed to the doors? The horses? No. Society in the boxes, and the people cheerfully pay their money to be able to gaze at the beings so far removed from them, constituting an inner circle. It was this feeling which caused Broadway to be choked with a howling mob on the day of the wedding of Miss Bradley-Martin to the Earl of Craven, and it is this same impulse which prompts the crowds in the upper tiers at the opera and in the orchestra stalls to spend the time of the intermissions in gazing around the house at the fashionables as if they were waxwork from Mme. Tussaud's or the Eden Musée and following them up by aid of the little printed list on the bill, whereby each box owner is conveniently numbered and catalogued.

"We stand as royalty does abroad, and we are prepared for this homage. Those who cannot see us read of us, but unfortunately frequently through the medium of writers who commence their observations in the style of one who a few years ago started his paragraph in this way, 'I dropped in at Mrs. Astor's last night,' and evoked, consequently, the pungent reflection of Mr. Joseph Howard, Jr., a writer of the people, who evidently knew his man:

"'Dropped in at Mrs. Astor's! Good heavens! for what—the ash barrel?'"

Washington's Cabin.

There are few buildings that attract the admirers of Washington that have more of interest in them than a decaying cabin which stands alone in an old pasture field a half mile from Berryville, in the beautiful Shenandoah valley of Virginia.

The old cabin was the home of Washington when he was a surveyor. He came here direct from the maternal roof to begin the arduous and at the time dangerous work of surveying the lands of Thomas, Lord Fairfax, who owned all the northern part of Virginia under the king's patent. The work was arduous because of the physical aspect of the country, then a dense wilderness, and dangerous because of the character of the inhabitants, who were principally Indians or scarcely less wild trappers or squatters upon his lordship's domain.

Washington had been selected by the nobleman because of his belief in the youth's ability to cope with these elements early in 1748, just after the completion of his sixteenth year, his only companion being George William Fairfax, nephew of old Lord Thomas.

Whether these boys erected the building or found it already in place history does not state, but well authenticated tradition says that they built it themselves. That they used it for an office, kept their instruments there and slept in the upper room there is ample proof.—Washington Post.

Cementing the Russian Empire.

The czar of Russia shows undoubted sagacity in adopting the best physical means to hold together his vast empire. He has pushed the transcaspian military railway southeastward until it has almost reached the frontiers of British India and China, the two powers most likely to dispute with him the acquisition of further dominion in Central Asia. Having thus assured the safety of the Russian position in the southeast, he has undertaken a more stupendous work in beginning the construction of an unbroken line of railway to connect European Russia with a port on the Pacific ocean. The whole length of the Asiatic or main Siberian line is 4,800 miles.

The estimated cost is $200,000,000. The work, which is now progressing from both ends toward the center, is to be completed in about 10 years. There will then be a stretch of railway, all located upon Russian territory, about 6,000 miles in length, holding European Russia and Asiatic Russia firmly together with a continuous band of steel. Until the proposed railway running north and south to connect the two Americas shall have been built there will be nothing on earth to rival this great stretch of eastern and western railway across the Russian empire.—Omaha Bee.

Folly of Hoarding.

It is really remarkable that so many people in this country, who have funds from which they might earn a good rate of interest, persist in locking up notes in safe deposit vaults or pack them away in old stockings. Money will earn today large returns, with the best of real estate security as first class collateral to protect the lender, and yet a great many individuals, waiting for they know not what, decline to take advantage of what is an unusual opportunity for making money. The currency of a country is intended to circulate as evidence of credit. If it does not, it becomes absolutely useless to everybody. In a famine a community would be no better off if it locked up millions of barrels of flour than if it had none at all. The same is precisely true of money.—Washington News.

Browning to Coleridge.

Browning loaned Lord Coleridge one of his works to read, and afterward, meeting the poet, the lord chief justice said to him: "What I could understand I heartily admired, and parts ought to be immortal. But as to much of it I really could not tell whether I admired it or not, because for the life of me I could not understand it." Browning replied, "If a reader of your caliber understands 10 per cent of what I write, I think I ought to be content."—San Francisco Argonaut.

A Hard Conundrum.

Of the 1,300,000,000 or 1,400,000,000 of people populating the earth how many may be said to dominate it? Is the direction of all affairs sublunary in the hands of more or less than 10,000 men and women? I do not mean as elected or hereditary rulers of nations merely, but persons in the capacity of rulers, financiers, priests, soldiers, writers, statesmen, etc.—Cor. New York Sun.

FRENCH WOMEN JOURNALISTS.

Some Are Ranked Among the Notables of Paris—Their Work and Manners.

The newspaper women of France are comparatively few. They are constantly accused of a total lack of the critical faculty and of a want of perception of the ridiculous. Furthermore, their ideas on ethics and philosophy are said to be "stale." Nevertheless it is true that their contributions to magazines and periodicals are impatiently awaited and widely read, after which many of the masculine writers go into mental convulsions and tear their vocabularies in tatters in trying to prove that these feminine effusions were worse than worthless.

The women who, in spite of this, persist in writing do not have sinecures. Not long ago at a celebrated criminal trial a woman journalist presented herself at the court as the judiciary reporter of a leading morning newspaper in Paris. The police are said to have been aghast when Mme. Severine drew forth her pad and pencil and demanded admission to the press tables. The guards were somewhat taken aback, and, with a deplorable lack of French chivalry, wanted to turn her away. But, by wit or wiles of some sort, she gained her point and cleared a pathway for all women reporters who shall come after her.

Mme. Edmond Adam is another woman journalist, perhaps the leading one in Paris. She is a politician, author and editor. She has been honored by the municipality of Paris in having her name given to one of the streets of the capital, an honor rarely bestowed on a person during his lifetime. It isn't much of a street, to be sure, the Rue Juliette Lamber but it is young and may grow some day. Under Napoleon III Mme. Adam had a salon in opposition to the imperial government, and there she reigned. She was young and handsome then, with soft, pretty hair and bright blue eyes. She was an intense republican and a great friend of Garibaldi. At the close of the Franco-Prussian war she had no one in France to particularly oppose, so she selected Bismarck. Such phrases as these have been attributed to her: "Bismarck and me!" "Bismarck was to have been overthrown by me!" "At last the czar condescends to follow my political views!" She is a good speaker and can talk on almost any subject. Her dinners are decidedly interesting. One-fourth of her guests are usually officers of the French army, another fourth is composed of political men, and the others are artists and literary people. The dinners are usually followed by receptions, which are attended by cabinet ministers, deputies, senators, diplomats and journalists. There are, except on special occasions, few women.

Mme. Severine is both more valiant and more sentimental than Mme. Adam. Severine, as she is familiarly called, is a well known figure in Paris. She has been nicknamed Mamzelle Gavroche and Jenny L'Ouvriere, and although she is much given to literary floods of tears, she writes vigorously and well. She has her own particular conceptions of good and evil. Severine imbibes her political views from The Cri du Peuple (The Voice of the People), and Mme. Adam drinks of the fountain of La Republique Francaise, founded by Gambetta. Severine's ambition is to secure the abolition of capital punishment.

Mme. Yver is a curious figure in the newspaper world. She frequents the prefecture of police, and is remarkable for her persistent praise of the police and the justice they dispense. "Good," in her mind, is represented by the prefect of police, the detectives and the gendarmes, but never by the prisoners.

Gyp is another woman journalist, but her name—Mme. de Martel—is better known in connection with novels on Parisian high life and as author of a few comedies. She is a noted contributor, in a very light vein, to that lively publication, La Vie Parisienne. Gyp is popular, and, besides being a writer of great talent, paints with success.

Perhaps the most successful newspaper women in Paris are those who write about the thing they know best—fashions. But men are encroaching somewhat upon this territory, and altogether woman's place in French journalism is not all that could be desired.—New York Sun.

Why Is It?

Why is it that a woman can struggle until she is red in the face and worn out both in temper and body by a window in a railroad train in her vain endeavors to close or open it when all that a man has to do is to walk up and go over exactly the same line of action that she has already exhausted, and down comes the refractory window in a jiffy? It is a most humiliating fact, but a very true one nevertheless, that not five women out of a dozen ever succeed in arranging a window to their satisfaction. They pull and tug until they are embarrassed, and finally, in a pleading manner, look around at some slip of a man, who, without any nonsense, brings about the desired effect, while the woman looks on in silent wonder at his marvelous skill and dexterity.—Philadelphia Times.

Birds Enjoy a Shower Bath.

A friend reports a pretty incident. During the hot, dry weather the birds about her house were apparently much in need of bathing places, and the lady discovered that every day when she went out to water her flowers a little bird hovered about as if he wanted something. Presently he revealed what he did want by getting under the sprinkling of the water pot or beneath the dripping plants, and fluffing his feathers in this shower bath just as he would in a pool, and plainly enjoying it in the highest degree. He began to watch for the daily coming of the lady to water her plants and gave himself up to his bath with gay abandon.—Boston Transcript.

AT HOME DAYS.

"At Homes" a Clear Gain as Compared With Calls Paid Against Time.

Afternoon calling is not exactly what it was when the present generation were children and when their mothers paid and received calls. In those days "at home days" were unknown and afternoon at homes singularly few. Afternoon calls were made in the expectation of finding people at home, which expectation was generally realized, for beyond the afternoon drive ladies had but few engagements. A change has come over the spirit of the age, and the restless desire to be here, there and everywhere, to be doing something, seeing something or organizing something, leaves little leisure or inclination for sitting quietly at home to be called upon in a desultory manner by friends and acquaintances. Thus it came about that afternoon calling gradually developed into afternoon card leaving. Society was seldom or never at home to callers, and they considered it rather a bore when it was. Four calls in one afternoon of 20 minutes' length took up an hour and 20 minutes at least, added to which the distance to be got over from house to house nearly exhausted the calling hours, and a large circle of acquaintances could hardly be called upon within a couple of months at this rate of progress.

Calling became irksome and dull, and society ladies with much to get through were more surprised than pleased to find their friends at home. A short visit was discourteous, a long visit meant a tax upon time, and thus "at home days" gradually came to the rescue. They were at first protested against and pronounced rather bad style than not, but they were a useful institution. They supplied a need. They bound society together. They made their way and became generally accepted. Most ladies have three or four "at home days" to attend every day more or less. They go early to one and late to another and take them all in turn. They know the hostess will be at home to them, and not only can they have a few minutes' talk with her, but they can also see from 10 to 20 friends and acquaintances at each house during their short stay. The host is also not infrequently visible and has a pleasant word to say to his wife's friends. Then, too, agreeable men drop in occasionally. Thus it may be said that "at homes" and "at home days" are a clear gain as compared with afternoon calls paid against time.

A Cyclist Catches a Train.

"We have all seen men run for a train," said a traveler. "The other day I saw a man make a break for one on a bicycle. We had halted at a station from which a straight, level road ran back at a right angle to the railroad. At a considerable distance up that road we saw a man coming on a bicycle. A man afoot couldn't have got anywhere near us from that distance, and it didn't seem as though the man on the wheel could get within rods of us, but he came down the street whizzing. When he had come about half the distance, the conductor gave the signal to start, and the engineer sounded the whistle and started the train. It was astonishing how fast the man on the wheel was coming now. There was a broad, level space around the station. The bicyclist swept over this in a great curve that landed him alongside the baggage car. Dismounting, he lifted his wheel up to the waiting hands of the baggage master. A fraction of a second later the steps of the first passenger car came along, and the bicyclist stepped aboard a winner."—New York Sun.

About How He Felt.

Mr. and Mrs. Fitts were out driving. "I wonder," said she, "just what the poor horse's feelings are? It must be just horrid to be driven and dragged around, without any idea as to where one is going, except as some one directs."

"I fancy I can appreciate his feelings," replied Mr. Fitts calmly. "I imagine he feels just about as I do when you take me out on a shopping trip."—London Tit-Bits.

A BAND OF COMRADES.

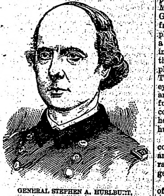
THE GRAND ARMY MUSTER AT INDIANAPOLIS ON SEPT. 4.

The Birthplace of the National Encampment to Be Honored by a Mighty Host of Boys In Blue—History and Principles of the Order.

Onward to the World's fair by the way of the Grand Army encampment at Indianapolis will be the rallying cry of the veterans the first week in September. The pilgrimage to Indianapolis, like that to Chicago, is for the celebration of a new discovery—namely comradeship. The universality and strength of the tie that binds old soldiers together were first revealed at Indianapolis in 1866, when the first national encampment of the infant order convened there. Up to that time the idea of a society of veterans was only a dream, fermenting in the minds of a handful of enthusiasts, led by Major B. F. Stephenson, the father of the Grand Army. At that gathering the hopes of the dreamers were taken up by the old soldiers and sailors of the nation, the mystic password was whispered to the men of the east, the middle states and the great west, and they returned to their homes bearing the seed of a marvelous and a mammoth organization.

There were then but few posts in existence. The first had been organized at Decatur, Ills., by Stephenson in April, 1866. Stephenson and a few comrades who were charter members of the Decatur post had worked out the plan while campaigning in Sherman's army the last year of the war. Springfield, Ills., the home of Stephenson at that time, also had a post, but the banner post of the order was at Indianapolis. It mustered over 1,000 comrades, and although Illinois was the stronger in the number of posts the first encampment was called at Indianapolis, where there was a certainty of a rousing and enthusiastic welcome. The call for the meeting extended an invitation to all old soldiers and sailors in and out of the order to fall into line and test the strength of the old army ties. Thousands responded, and 11 states were represented by delegates who had been invited and bore state credentials. The encampment was held in Morrison's Opera House, the stage of which had been transformed into a field camp and draped with the battle torn banners of the Indiana regiments. Unbounded enthusiasm swept over the great gathering of soldiers and was communicated to the people of the city and of the whole state.

After the business was finished and the organization perfected on a national basis, a rousing public meeting was held, and Governor Morton, Indiana's war governor, spoke to the veterans, praising the devotion to one another and predicting a wonderful future for the new Grand Army. As an echo of that encampment, when the news was flashed over the country, a mighty cheer went up from the Atlantic to the Pacific and ten times ten thousand voices shouted "Comradeship is a fact." The national body of officers included veterans from eight states—namely, Illinois, New York, Indiana, Missouri, Iowa, Ohio, Kentucky and Pennsylvania. General Stephen A. Hurlburt of Illinois was chosen commander in chief.



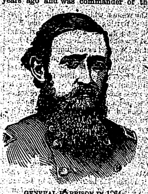
GENERAL STEPHEN A. HURLBURT.

The second national encampment, held in Philadelphia in 1868, was undoubtedly the most important of the earlier gatherings of the veterans, for then were fixed the character and scope of the new movement, but that encampment was made possible by the sendoff given at Indianapolis. The deliberations at Philadelphia decided what the veteran order should be; the enthusiasm at Indianapolis declared that there should be an order of veterans, so there is little reason to fear but the old soldiers who muster in the western city 100,000 strong will know what they are there for and acknowledge in hearty fraternal spirit the claims of the Hoosier capital upon their good will. Thousands of comrades who had the best chance to know these things, because they were a part of them as workers in building up the order, have gone to join the "grand army above," for the ranks are thinning by Time's unsparing hand almost as fast as the bullets thinned them in the war days. But what the founders knew their juniors have learned.

Tradition is strong where sentiment is concerned, and what is the fraternal idea if not sentiment? That was the discovery made at Indianapolis. The war was over, and everybody weary of it and of everything which echoed its thunders and its passions. "What good?" cried the practical ones when asked to join the new army. I have never forgotten, though my memory is a poor staff to lean upon, the setback which I received from a veteran of distinction in civil and social life when I asked the use of his name to call together a body of veterans and agitate the establishment of a post of the Grand Army. He had been a splendid war man and comrade and was a believer in progress in every good work.

Said he: "Old soldiers can have no interests not common to all citizens, hence I do not see the need of a veteran organization." Since then the wave of comradeship set moving in Indianapolis has drawn him within the magic circle, and he finds enough interest in the order to be won from the coveted retirement of old age to an active official position. He is an old man now, and it is not rash to predict that he will be borne to his last resting place on the shoulders of his Grand Army comrades.

And the enthusiasm for comradeship is not a transient one to flash brilliantly and suddenly die out. An old hero was buried in New York city the other day who was among the very first to catch up the ringing watchword sounded by Stephenson in 1866. I refer to General Edward Jardine, the martyr of the draft riot. He was active in rallying old soldiers into the Grand Army ranks 20 to 25 years ago and was commander of the department early in the seventies. His injuries compelled him to withdraw from prominence in Grand Army affairs, and for 20 years he has been lost to view except among the members of his own post. But at his death the comrades of the city united to give him a military burial. A guard was placed over the remains, and the services of the order were read in the presence of a large body of comrades, who made up a worthy cortege to follow the well nigh forgotten hero to his tomb. Who in the rushing metropolis would stop in the excitement of financial panic and brave the sweltering heat to remember a veteran, although he shed his blood to prevent pillage and destruction of the city in 1863? But for comradeship to hold vigil over the ebb and flow of life and death and revive old memories a ten line obituary would be the ignoble ending of a glorious career.



GENERAL HARRISON IN 1864.

Nor has the enthusiasm for comradeship died out in the land of its birth. It was an Indiana comrade who after 25 years of familiarity with its ceremonies, a time long enough to have discovered their true character and significance, in his presidential message to congress, declared that amid all the cares and honors of the office of chief magistrate he could not forget that the ties of comradeship in the Grand Army of the Republic placed obligations upon him equally with the most obscure veteran. General Harrison may be forgotten by the nation at large, as a dethroned king is fated to be, but the old soldiers will ever remember that while he was president he was always a comrade in a simple, unaffected and hearty way.

To explain this comradeship, which had its birth so humbly in the hearts of a few men and has grown until it affects the lives of 500,000 veterans, would puzzle the shrewdest of the initiated. Many an idea from the time of the great Galilean down has swept the world from its feet and yet could not be explained. A veteran one day entertained a company of his regimental comrades in arms at his home and introduced them to his devoted young wife as "people I think the most of in all the world." Tears came into the startled woman's eyes, and looking at the babe in the cradle and two or three little tots hiding bashfully in the corners of the room she recovered herself enough to say between her sighs, "That is saying a good deal, husband."

"Yes, it is saying a good deal, but it comes from my heart, and I mean it as an expression of how dear my old comrades are to me. We braved death together, and that is the whole of it."

It was that sentiment common to men of one company or regiment who had been close companions in many battles which the enthusiasts of Indianapolis believed would be broadened so as to thrill the breast of every man who wore the blue. Friends and neighbors are doomed to separation; real brothers in arms, like brothers of the blood, cannot always keep together. Comradeship left to itself would lose cohesive power and vanish amid the clashing changes of active civil life. And if it was sublime to face death together it was sublime to have faced death at all for the same cause. So the old and powerful ties of state pride, of army conceit, of corps enthusiasm and of regimental and battery feeling were swept away. A new standard was held aloft, and the old soldiers thrilled by a bugle blast never heard before except in the thunder and smoke of battle, where all were for once alike in the presence of death, where the inspiration that nerved the arm of each was but a spark of the fire that swayed the hearts of all.

If the war fever had been nothing more than extravagant enthusiasm, then a fraternal bond based upon it would have proven a rope of sand when it came to the test of strain, for men are not angels, take the best of them. But the old soldiers are prouder today of their war enthusiasm than they were then. It has long since given way to a stern unyielding conviction. The war was an awful reality, and patriotism of the grandest and loftiest kind saved the country, and naturally pride in the enthusiasm that made them comrades and pride in the deeds performed while comrades are sentiments common to those whose flag and whose cause and whose sufferings and risks were common.

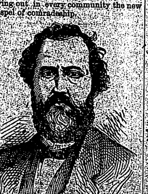
A great many spectators on the outside of the Grand Army are alarmed because old soldiers show little sensitiveness where the honor of veterans is apparently in jeopardy. It is because the test of honor was applied long ago. The Grand Army is past all that. If a comrade or a body of comrades forget themselves and do a foolish thing, they have the same quick conscience to discover the error as their more discreet brothers, only give them time. They will see the error and undo it or avoid repetition, and it is comradeship to give them time and not force the good work by zealous preaching. There is only one spirit that can rule the Grand Army or that does rule it in the long run, and that is the spirit of true comradeship, the fraternal, charitable, devoted spirit of brothers. The Masons have their differences and their discipline to themselves, and the church has the same in so far as it can have them and not revive the odious Inquisition.

The Grand Army is so constituted that discretion must be left to individual members and posts. It is not an institution emanating from a center. The life is in the individuals who associate themselves in a post. There in the post, with the members gathered together, is a little Grand Army world, there the alpha and the omega, the beginning and the end. The departments and national body are the machinery maintaining a touch of elbow between distant posts and between the states. Naturally there is friction, but seldom a collision that the outsiders hear about. When there is a speck of trouble that gets noised abroad, it never amounts to the open war some people try to make out.

The pension question has disturbed the country for nearly 20 years, but it didn't reach the Grand Army until less than 10 years ago. The Grand Army existed and flourished before the question was raised and will go on flourishing whichever way it is settled and if it never is settled. An outsider who should happen to lift the roof from a post encampment to hear the veterans deliberate on pensions would get weary over the long order of business to be gone through with before the question could get the floor and go away disgusted to find that 99 times in 100 it doesn't get the floor at all. The department and national encampments meet once a year, their sessions last from two to four days, and the pension business fares extremely well if it gets—outside of the committee rooms—one hour's consideration in the department councils and two hours in the national council. That is one hour a year in a department encampment and about two hours a year in the national encampment. Therefore it is extremely improbable that the Grand Army, which was born amid the throes of the nation's sublimest struggle and which has been built up and fostered with so much jealous zeal and care, will be destroyed by a clash of opinions over a subject of minor importance.

In the early days of the order partisanship seriously interfered with its usefulness and threatened to become a stumbling block to success. The evil was promptly met by legislating all political discussion and action out of encampment sessions. The Grand Army may be put upon the defensive in pension matters, and in that case there will be a substantial unity of action, but comradeship will never go to the wall for anything less noble and commendable. Every day added to the years of the aging veterans makes newer demands upon comradeship. Every day proves the wisdom of those dreamers who sounded the army long roll amid the pæans of peace at Indianapolis 27 years ago. Every day finds veterans stricken down beyond the reach of pension relief with its tantalizing delays. Every day adds thousands to the many, many millions already drawn from the Grand Army treasury to feed and shelter those whom the nation with all the solemnity of dying oaths promised should never come to want. But for the Grand Army and the fidelity of comrades to comrades every wayside would be thronged with army mendicants, the worthy and the unworthy, the genuine and the imposters commingling, and the country scandalized by the spectacle.

Two evils that follow in the wake of war have been spared this nation by the nobility of the soldiery. One was the saturnalia of disbanded armies and the other the pest of public mendicancy. Before the last drumbeat of the volunteers returning from the southern camps was hushed a Grand Army post was opened in every northern city of 10,000 inhabitants, and the encampment halls became new bivouacs whose fires should not grow dim and where the floating, disbanded soldiery were drawn into association with their settled and provident comrades. Committees of employment and relief promptly took up the burden that belonged to society. In a twinkling the old army passed out of sight, and in its place appeared a brotherhood of industrious, self respecting, loyal veterans living out in every community the new gospel of comradeship.



MAJOR B. F. STEPHENSON.

It is this record of 27 years of Grand Army work that will furnish inspiration to 100,000 boys in blue in their anniversary jubilee. They know what is back of the little bronze lapel button and the simple hailing salute which seems so meaningless to the uninitiated. They never lose sight for a day of the wonder working machinery set in motion at Indianapolis when the comrades of the east and of the west shook hands and vowed to stand together in peace as they had stood together in war.

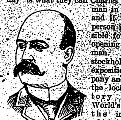
COMPELLED SUNDAY OPENING.

Charles W. Clingman Is Entitled to That Distinction.



CHARLES W. CLINGMAN.

"The man who opened the fair on Sunday" is what they call Charles W. Clingman in Chicago, and if any one person is responsible for Sunday opening he is the man. He is a stockholder in the exposition company and one of the local directory of the World's fair, but the injunction which he obtained restraining the directors from closing Jackson park on Sunday was granted to him as a private citizen and taxpayer of Chicago.

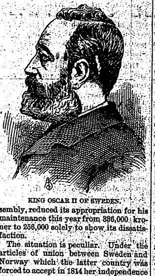
The history of the case is peculiar. The injunction, for violating which several of the prominent directors and other exposition officials were fined $1,000 each, was obtained with their knowledge and consent when they resolved to open the fair on Sunday and was intended to head off a counter injunction by those opposed to Sunday opening. When the directors found that Sunday opening did not pay, they ordered the fair closed on that day, ignoring the fact that the injunction was still in force. In this consisted the contempt of court for which Judge Stein fined them, and the fact that they were men of the highest standing and intelligence in the community had weight with the court as adding to the aggravation of their offense and the necessity for exemplary punishment. As the appeal which was at once taken cannot be heard before October, it is probable the fair will be open on Sundays during the remainder of its existence.

Mr. Clingman, who is mainly responsible for this state of affairs, is a commercial traveler who is very well known on the Pacific coast and in Indiana and Illinois. He is a native of Chicago and about 43 years of age. He was for 20 years a member of the First Presbyterian church in Chicago, and during that time was a member of the Bible class and librarian of the Sunday school.

NORWAY DESIRES INDEPENDENCE.

A Peaceful Political Revolution In Progress In Scandinavia.

A republic in Norway would not be an astonishing outcome of the present strained relations between the people of that country and King Oscar II, though press and politicians alike declare, even while treating of the wrongs of Norway in the most radical strains, that they do not desire any such revolution as the establishment of a republic would necessitate. It is very doubtful if such a revolution could be inaugurated during King Oscar's reign, for he is personally popular with the Norwegian people, though the storthing, or great assembly, reduced its appropriation for his maintenance this year from 336,000 kroner to 256,000 solely to show its dissatisfaction.



KING OSCAR II OF SWEDEN.

The situation is peculiar. Under the articles of union between Sweden and Norway which the latter country was forced to accept in 1814 her independence was guaranteed and she was to have her own representatives abroad and the right to conclude treaties with foreign nations. These rights have been tacitly abrogated by Sweden, and it is upon the demand for their re-establishment that the bitter agitation of the past two years in the Norwegian parliament has been based. King Oscar of course refused to approve the resolution for the appointment of separate Norwegian consuls. Had he done otherwise his seat upon the Swedish throne would have been imperiled. Then the storthing refused supplies for the consular service as at present conducted and reduced the royal appropriation as above stated.

The king finds it no easy task to satisfy the desires of the people of his two kingdoms, for their interests are not only different, but somewhat antagonistic. Norway is a land of poor soil, and her people are a seafaring and trading race and in favor of free trade. Sweden is an agricultural and industrial country, and the Swedes are protectionists. Each nation has its own parliament, and the king has to pass upon much diverse and sometimes contrary legislation. He is in constant danger therefore of offending one country by his action upon matters submitted by the other, and the irksomeness of his position is aggravated by the racial jealousies of the two peoples.

The political union of the countries, though of long continuance, has failed to unite them in sentiment, and Norway's constitutional agitation is at bottom a struggle for independence. With King Oscar's death or the decline of his personal influence, the establishment of a republic is among the possibilities.

Hanged For Begging.

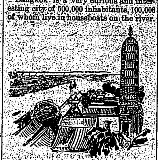
During the reign of Henry VIII 71,400 persons were legally executed in England, the larger portion of whom were guilty of no offense worse than misdemeanor. In one year 1800 starving beggars were hanged for asking.

THE SIAMESE CAPITAL.

Bangkok a Very Unhealthy City For Europeans to Live In.

The trouble between France and Siam is the old and familiar one. The great and civilized nation which has long controlled the lower part of the peninsula and now owns all Anam wants more territory, and Siam refuses to give up the Me-Kong valley.

Bangkok is a very curious and interesting city of 500,000 inhabitants, 100,000 of whom live in houseboats on the river.



A BIT OF BANGKOK.

The larger part of the city is uninhabitable by Europeans on account of filth, especially during the dry season. The tide sets back far enough to make the river Menam brackish, and it is sluggish at all times, and for months together rotting carcasses and vegetation almost choke the current. The water is like pea soup in looks. Powdered alum is used to clear it, but even when it looks clear as mountain spring water it is often deadly to Europeans.

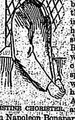
The natives drink it without clearing, and when a cholera season comes they die by tens of thousands. All the carrion birds of the vicinity flock to the city, but cannot devour the corpses that are tumbled out on the plain. Many times, says an authority, over a third of the people have died in a summer—say, 150,000 or 200,000—but they await their fate with the helpless apathy of Asiatics or the sullen torpor of despair. The wet monsoon ends the epidemic. The rain descends in such torrents as to almost strangle one exposed to it, the filth is washed away, the country laborers crowd in till the population is restored and all goes on as before.

Siam contains about 300,000 square miles, and intelligent explorers have pronounced it the richest section of earth by nature. The valleys may be called excessively fertile, and in the hills are timber and medicinal plants of immense value. Probably no other equal area in the world contains so great a variety of plants and animals, including reptiles, and the animals are usually the largest and most vigorous of their species. The common elephant of Siam is not equaled in any other country, but the so called white elephant is smaller. There are also deer, musk oxen, wild cattle of every kind, wild hogs, every variety of apes and monkeys, birds of almost every known species and of the most brilliant plumage, and reptiles in scores of species from the largest crocodiles to the little green lizard.

A list of the valuable plants would almost fill this column, and there are also rich lodes of various metals. For many years Siamese jealousy kept out all who would develop these riches, but King Khoulaloukorn I, who came to the throne in 1868, has encouraged the introduction of European methods.

THE SISTINE CHOIR.

Oldest and Most Peculiar Musical Organization In the World.



A SISTINE CHORISTER.

His Holiness Leo XIII has astonished the cardinals, and indeed all the Catholic world, by giving permission for the famous Sistine choir to come to the United States and sing at the World's fair. To realize how great a compliment to America this is it must be remembered that only twice in all its history has this choir sung outside of Rome, and both were cases of necessity, so to speak. One was when the pope had to retreat to Avignon, France, and the other was when Napoleon Bonaparte was crowned emperor.

The choir consists of 32 men, and for centuries its music has been composed by one of its own members. Its Italian title is Il Collegio dei Cuppillani Cantori della Capella Pontificia—that is, it is the pope's personal choir, and only sings when he officiates at mass or on the death of a cardinal.

It is the oldest musical organization in the world, dating back to the fourth century, when Pope Sylvester set up a school for training the voices of boys. For a time all the churches in Rome were supplied from this school, and only the best were retained for the pope's choir. In the time of Gregory the Great the honor of membership was so highly regarded that persons of most noble birth contended eagerly for places, and many of the choir went to take charge of the music in the principal churches of other countries. After various changes the number in the choir was fixed at 32 in 1550 and has remained at that ever since.

That was during the short period that the famous Palestrina was master of the choir. He was the only married man who ever served in it and was removed by Pope Paul IV for that reason. It was long thought very remarkable that such fine soprano voices were heard in this exclusive male choir, and many curious stories were told to account for it, but it is now known to have been the result of a special training begun in childhood. This system, known as the [illegible], is still in use in Spain, and voices thus trained retain their sweetness to extreme old age. Four years ago one member of this choir died at the age of 74, having retained the purity of his voice almost to the last [illegible]

RIDING PRETTY HARD.

An Old Wartime Engineer Tells About an Eventful Railway Journey.

Bivouacked around a campfire one evening were a party of officers busily engaged in roasting goobers in the ashes and washing them down with the contents of their canteens. "Never heard tell o' the time I got lost in the mountains with a engin', did ye?" asked a tall, lanky, good humored comrade, who strolled up and helped himself to a handful of the goobers.

Every man present expressed his bitter regret at never having had the opportunity of hearing the story.

"Waal," said the tall man, seating himself on an upturned bucket, "I mout's well tell ye, long's ther's time afore taps. I wur runnin an engin' fur the guv'ment doorin the war down in Ferginny. She wur an ol hookmotion Rogers an smart enuff to clim' a tree ef she'd 'a' got toe holt onto it.

"I had a nigger fireman as was afraid of his shadder, w'ich didn't prevent him goin to sleep at any minute, day or night, whilst he wur standin up lookin ahead, 'parently wide awake. But I wuz goin to tell ye about gettin lost. Ye see, 'twar this way: They started us out one dark night over a branch that we didn't know, and we had to go to it blin. The track wur in turr'ble shape, an 'twould hev puzzled ye to say when we wuz on the rails an when we wuzn't. I should say we everidged 'bout half and half. We was plowin 'long 'bout so so, when all of a suddent I saw by the headlight thet we was a-goin into a tunnil.

"I giv Zeb a kick and hollered, 'Zeb, is ther' a tunnil on this line?'

"'Can't tell for shuah, boss,' said he; 'mighty cur'us doin's these days. 'Twasn't so 'fo' de wah.'

"'Waal, keep yer eye skinned fer snags,' I sung out, an as I wuz sort of sleepy myself I snoozed off an on, mostly on, I guess, fer a spell, till finally the old gal giv' a snort an stopped dead. We both on us waked up to wunst.

"'Twas so dark I couldn't see Zeb to kick him fer goin to sleep, but I cussed him fer lettin us hit a snag. 'Git down ther', ye coon, an see if we're on the rails,' sez I.

"He took the torch an clim'ed down an wallered roun awhile. Fust I knowed he wus back ag'in, his face white's a sheet.

"'Well, what's the matter now?' I asked him.

"'Fo' de Lo'd, boss,' he sez, 'we's in de tun'l yit, an dere ain't a rail in sight!'

"Jest ez I was gittin down to 'vestigate, long comes the conductor. 'What in thunder do you mean,' says he, 'by running this train six miles into a cave?'

"Shore enuff, those Johnnies had taken up the rails and turned 'em into that cave, and that ol hook motion kept on a goin with us till we struck the end of it. I 'member thinkin she was ridin pretty hard, but I s'posed she hed got off the ties onto the roadbed, which wasn't graded very well."—Kate Field's Washington.

Artificial Features.

Artificial noses are now made of aluminium, and they are so perfectly shaped, colored and adjusted as to defy detection. The aluminium is first covered with some light cloth—muslin generally—and is then painted, and the color of the skin is so closely adhered to that it is impossible to tell which is the false nose and which the true until you pull it. The materials formerly used for this purpose were vulcanite, wax, celluloid, wood and porcelain, but for many reasons aluminium is the superior of them all, it being lighter as well as stronger. Aluminium ears have become quite as fashionable as aluminium noses.

There are more of these false noses and ears on the street than one would suppose until one deliberately looks into the subject. Scores of people wear these deceptive noses and ears, and so artistically are they made that it is impossible to tell the false with the naked eye. I have said that the best way to tell a real nose from the false member is to give it a jerk. Yet I must admit that if one were to go about jerking the noses of friends an strangers just to detect the false noses life might be made decidedly unpleasant for that one.—Chicago Tribune.

Yankee Sententiousness Saving Salt.

In our opinion sententiousness is rarely effective without a considerable dash of humor. How much more telling Emerson's sententiousness was than that of most of his contemporaries (Goethe, for example, or Carlyle), just because Emerson was seldom sententious without a smile, while Carlyle was most sententious when he was least humorous. A Yankee, indeed, seldom gives advice without a little irony pointed to himself for giving it, but Germans and Englishmen are sententious in grim earnest and are very apt to be quite as self important as they are earnest. Very few of the so called wise sayings of Goethe and Carlyle are free from this fault of ponderosity.—London Spectator.

Steam Vessel First Used as a Transport.

There is a curious fact that may have been overlooked—that troops withdrawn from Canada upon the close of the American war of 1812-15 for the purpose of joining the army intended to crush Napoleon after his return from Elba were transported down the St. Lawrence by a Canadian steamer. This was probably the first occasion on which a steam vessel was used for purposes of military transport.—Toronto News.

A Sensible Prayer.

"And now, parson," said the editor, "will you ask a blessing before we dine?"

"Good Lord," said the parson, "have mercy upon this man and open his eyes that he may see and understand that greens are not greens without bacon, and that grace without grits is dead."—Atlanta Constitution.

S. L. Dobson informs the JOURNAL that he will commence grinding oatmeal as soon as oats come into market providing they are large and plentiful enough. He would like to secure a sufficient quantity to keep the mill running all the fall and the coming winter. He is encouraged to believe that there are plenty of oats in the county of excellent quality.

Taken as a whole the harvesting season has been very propitious and the grain has been put into the shock in good condition. Much of it is now in stack and the stacking is being rapidly completed. Stacking this season seems to be more general than ever before which, in the condition of the money market is a good thing. If the wheat should be rushed upon the market from the shock it would have a tendency to keep the price down.

From W. A. Marin, who was in the city on Saturday we learn that the hail-storm of a week ago damaged his crop considerably; also injured the crops of J. P. Bullan, Durdall Bros., O. S. Johnson, Mr. Hoff and several others to a considerable extent, practically destroying all their grain that was not cut, and injuring that in shocks considerably. The hail was quite severe and many others suffered some losses from it.

Mr. S. Lipscombe departed for Chatfield, Minn., last week, to which place his family preceded him a few weeks. He has secured a situation for the coming winter and may possibly conclude to make it his future home. Mr. L. is one of the early settlers in Crookston, has seen it grow from almost nothing to its present size and importance, and he leaves many friends here who will unite with the JOURNAL in best wishes for his future prosperity.

Warren Sheaf:—Wm. N. Box, of South Bend, Wash., arrived on Monday, and looks as hale and hearty as ever. He says times on the coast are dull, same as they are everywhere in the U. S. Mr. Box tells of a narrow escape from drowning which he experienced this summer, and judging from the earnestness with which he tells about it, it must be more than a common fish story. He and four other persons were out on the bay in a boat when the craft capsized throwing all in the water, and he and one more were the only ones saved.

Dave Robinson returned last week from a trip to the Red Lake reservation. Said that the trip from Thief River Falls by boat is one of the most pleasant that can be imagined. As far as the pine is concerned he is of the opinion that the very best is as yet unsurveyed, and lies along the northern boundary of the reservation. He says the Indians all agree that the best pine is as yet unsurveyed. The pine that is now ready for market is not of very good quality as a rule, having been mostly killed off and the second growth is not quite matured as yet. There is much tamarac but no convenient market for it yet. The agricultural lands are mostly conspicuous for their scarcity. He is of the opinion that it will be years before that country will be generally settled up.

The morning topic at the Methodist church next Sunday will be "Christian Socialism," and in the evening, "The tramp in America, and what to do with him."

Rev. Squier: I wish you would say that we want all the laboring-men to come to our services next Sunday. We want them to get rid of the idea that the church is only for the business man.

Everybody will want to attend the Andrews opera company's entertainment on Saturday evening. It will be remembered that this is the company that was in the disastrous wreck near Brainerd a while ago.

If any thing pleases Ed. Shraeder better than to pull the lines over an elegant driving team we do not know what it is—and that is just what we caught him at on Tuesday. He has a daisy team and no mistake about it.

C. Christianson, bookkeeper for Christianson Bros. returned Tuesday from a week's visit at the fair. While there he saw the big fire in South Chicago. He met Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brown, Sam Wallace and other Crookstonites who are doing the fair.

S. L. Collins: Notwithstanding the report one hears of excellent crops in Polk county, the average of wheat will not exceed 8 bushels per acre. Mark that prediction and when verified say I told you so—but the wheat will all be of excellent quality, my boy, remember that also.

Judging from the way the threshing crews go out this week there will be lots of grain threshed from the shock in Polk county. Almost every farmer is out of feed and obliged to thresh oats and barley from the shock. It is probable that more wheat will be shocked this year than is usual.

Rev. R. H. Battey preached at Mentor and Fertile on Sunday arriving home Monday morning. On Tuesday morning he shipped 16 barrels of cement to the Mentor church. Says the building will soon be ready for occupancy and when done will be a neat little edifice. He goes to Stephen next Sabbath.

The salvation army gave an ice-cream entertainment at their church on Saturday evening. It was well attended and was a big success socially and financially it is said. On Sunday evening the church building was filled to overflowing the occasion being the enlisting of several children in the ranks. The army seems to be in a very prosperous condition and florishing remarkably.

R. H. Carr was in from Fosston this week. Mr. Carr with one or two others went up toward the head-waters of the Mississippi this summer, about 50 miles from Fosston, but whether in Beltrami or Cass county they do not know and took up a claim each, built upon them and put up hay for winter's use and intend to move out there this fall with their families. At present they have no railroad facilities but expect to have as soon as the Fosston line is extended.

John Wyand appeared on the streets on Monday afternoon with a little sawed-off team of rats geared to a top buggy. They had such a distant appearance that at first his best friends did not recognize John who is wont to drive a fine thorough-bred Clyde colt that is built up solid all the way from his head to the buggy but these rats seemed to have been laid out wrong—with a 20 foot lane between the place where they stopped growing and the dash board. They had such a very distant appearance that John had to use a binder-whip to connect them with civilization. The team appeared in town somewhere about 2 p.m. and a half hour or so later John came along in the buggy looking as calm and placid as though he had a team. He called them bronchos and young at that and thinks they will be all right when they grew as long as the buggy tongue, but they look like rats more than anything else.

Agent Fegan informs the JOURNAL that there is a rumor afloat to the effect that a change will be made next Sunday in the time card of the Great Northern. The east bound passenger which reaches here at 8 p. m. will arrive at 1 a. m. No notification has been sent out from headquarters yet, and the rumor may be groundless.

One cannot call to mind an opera campany that has produced so great a variety of the standard and comic operas as the Andrews' Opera Company, and it is not going outside of bounds to say what is equally true that no company, past or present, existing or defunct, has produced as many operas with such marked success. However, not in one single instance is its work in the beautiful opera, Dorathy, been overshadowed, and it may be said in all good faith that it is the greatest Dorathy company that has ever been before the public. To be seen at the opera house Saturday evening next.

As a rule the farmers seem inclined to stack their grain this fall and we believe that is the best plan under existing circumstances. Of course this would be impracticable for everybody to do, as the machines must be kept busy constantly in order to finish the threshing in season and if everybody stacked all their grain the machines would necessarily have to remain idle too long. Oats and barley could be threshed from the shock and the wheat all stacked and this is what many intend doing—in fact will have to as most everybody is out of feed for fall's work. We think that all who stack their wheat will be the gainer as by the time stacked wheat is ready for market the price will unreservedly be better—if indeed it is to be at all this fall.

Dept. Sheriff Losey went up to Fosston on Tuesday.

Farmers are building granaries more than ever this fall.

The Andrews Opera Company will be with us next Saturday evening.

Much of the wheat will be in stack this week, and next week fall plowing will be well inaugurated. Early fall plowing is the very best to eradicate weeds.

The JOURNAL learns that Steege has given up the idea of threshing this week. The wheat is yet too soft he says. It seems to harden up very slowly this year.

Something like a half dozen threshing rigs pulled out of the city last week to commence operations in the fields and the machines are humming merrily this week.

The tramp crop is as good as usual this year and does not seem liable to be affected by frosts or hail. Some complaints reach us of these nuisances in the country.

The first frost of the season, a light one occurred on Sunday night. In some locations it was quite severe in others not so much so. No damage has been reported so far.

J. N. Priester returned to St. Paul this week, after a few days hunt in the county. While here he made arrangments to purchase the brewery and intends to form a stock company capitalized at $50,000.

The idiotic girl that was sent in from Woodside and whom Judge Benson tried to get sent to the asylum, was returned to her home in Woodside last week being refused admittance to the asylum.

You can never have a real good complexion until the impurity is cleansed from your blood. What you need is a thorough course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which is absolutely free from all harmful ingredients and therefore, perfectly safe.

Max Eriesson, who was up from St. Paul last week, says he had a splendid visit at the old home in Berlin, Germany but says times are extremely hard across the water. Says we don't know anything about hard times in America by comparison with the old country.

August Wentzel and family drove out to his farm on Sunday. August has one of the finest river farms in Polk county with plenty of wood and water handy. The shocks stand so thick upon his wheat fields that you can hardly drive between them. One secret of this is that August uses all the manure that is made on the place and any rainy day you will find his team busy hauling manure.

The way wheat is turning out this fall is a surprise to many who predicted only disaster from the fact that the straw is very short and the heads also. The wheat is plump, heavy and is rolling out in a manner truly surprising under the circumstances. The cost of harvesting and threshing also is a very great item being very much less than usual, but the extremely low price that seems inevitable is the only one great drawback to an unusally successful issue. Some predict enormous prices next year.

The Andrews Opera Company will produce the charming comic opera Dorathy, in three acts, at the Grand opera house in this city on Saturday evening next. In this opera one is at a loss to know which he most admires, the brilliant gems of the music or the keen wit and humor of the libretto. Ed. Andrews, as Luecher, an eccentric English constable, creates an endless round of laughable situations, and coupled with the lines he interprets with perfection born of genius, has never yet failed to meet the approbation and applause of his hearers. This company is always assisted by their own able orchestra.

R. J. Montague: I had an amusing thing happen me the other day. A farmer living near Fosston, who is among the number now being sued by the Millers and Manufacturers Insurance Co., wrote me asking my advice in the matter, and stating that there were about sixty farmers who would club together if I would take the case. As a similar case has been decided by the supreme court in favor of the insurance company, I wrote the Fosston man that, as the amount he owed was small, I thought the best thing he could do was to pay it. And now the farmer thinks that as I refused the case I must be employed by the insurance company.

W. D. Wilson left Sunday evening for a visit to Fargo.

Monday was one of those clear, bright days for which Minnesota is justly celebrated. Prospects good for lots more of them this fall.

O. J. Barnes and family have moved into the house recently vacated by Chief of Police Gonyea in Sampson's addition.

O. J. Barnes: We got a letter from the Copelands. They arrived safely at Seattle and are stopping with some former Crookston people. They like the country.

Miss F. Desmond of Philadelphia is visiting Mr. and Mrs W. E. Kelsey. She was a schoolmate of Mr. Kelsey's, and in fact they grew up together, but haven't seen each other for a number of years.

Attorney Watts went down to Duluth Monday evening to take some depositions in a couple of cases which will be tried by the court here.

The Hallock News says that Elmer C. Yetter, a prominent Hallock lawyer, was married in Wisconsin and returned last week with his bride.

Harvest help seems to have been abundant this year and the same holds good with regard to help in threshing. Seems to be lots of it available.

Ald. J. E. Morrisey, T. G. Thompson and Will Peterson went out for a hunt on Monday.

That is a dandy bulletin board in front of the Ideal restaurant. The lettering upon it shows that Shep is quite a genius in that line.

A. C. Schmidt took a buggy-load of his painters out for a hunt on Tuesday.

V. D. Carruth writes from Norwich New York, that he is enjoying a visit with old comrades and friends there, and expects to start for Crookston at an early day. Says times are extremely dull there and everybody feverishly anxious for the resumption of business that is expected to follow the repeal of the Sherman law.

Henry Shepard is having a severe time with a tumor on the right temple. It is a painful and troublesome customer.

One of Frank Bivins' colts was severely hurt on a wire fence on Monday. Dr. M. Leguee was called to sew up the wounds and the colt is doing nicely.

George Reilley, of Fisher, is the owner of as fine a roadster as you can see in a day's travel. He came up on Monday to have Dr. Leguee prescribe for it.

C. W. Palmer arrived from his home in Troy, N. Y. last week. Says the east feels the financial stringency in a greater degree than we do here and money seems harder to get hold of there than here, but he thinks the worst of it is over and that business will resume its wonted activity. He spent several days at the World's Fair enjoying the sights and scenes there. Says it is a big thing.

Whatever may be the cause of blanching, the hair may be restored to its original color by the use of that potent remedy Hall's Sicilian Hair Renewer.

Look Out for Bargains.

In a few days I will open up and dispose of about $1,000 worth of dry goods which we didn't dispose of last winter. These goods are clean and all right, and will be sacrificed for cash. Watch for announcement of time and place of opening.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is one of the few remedies which are recommended by every school of medicine. Its strength, purity and efficacy are too well established to admit of doubt as to its superiority over all other blood-purifiers whatever. Ayer's Sarsaparilla leads them all.

NEWSLETS.

Mr. I. I. Hillstad, who has served four years as postmaster at Fosston, and who sent in his resignation last March, has just been succeeded by Dr. E. A. Umland.

A barn at Fosston belonging to O. A. Hostetter, was burned last week, and its contents—aliant $3000 worth of saw mill machinery—was destroyed. There was $1000 insurance on the machinery.

The fall races of the Grand Forks Driving association will be held at Grand Forks on the 27th, 28th and 29th inst. $1675 will be given in prizes.

In North Dakota recently a blind pig was discovered in a St. Thomas meat market—and the proprietor of the shop was arrested.

The Northwestern Farmers Protective Elevator company, of Grand Forks, is going to handle wheat for its members on the following plan: The association proposes to pay cash at full market price for wheat shipped by members to its general agent, L. C. Horsven, at Duluth or Minneapolis. Checks will be sent for the wheat as soon as the wheat arrives, and the company has ample funds and ample storage room to take care of all wheat that comes. Members who do not desire to sell at the present low prices and have not sufficient storage room can ship their wheat; the company will pay the freight and store it as long as desired at the minimum charge. The members get all the money there is in the wheat, a very small commission only being required, which covers all expenses. The association already has 2,200 members and there is no risk whatever in sending wheat to the company. Mr. Horsven, the general agent of the company, is also the treasurer and is under $75,000 bonds. Mr. Thos. Ulven, of Grand Forks, is the secretary of the association.

Farmers Would Grade the Road.

Fertile Journal: The farmers living in the vicinity of Maple Bay are desirous of getting a railroad into that place and to that end in view have offered to do the grading for the Northern Pacific railroad from Lee's siding to the Bay and promise to have it done within a month from the time they commence work, and all they ask the railroad company to do is to lay the track. We have not learned as yet whether the Northern Pacific folks will accept the proposition or not.

The Gas Crookston Will Have.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: The Economic Gas company are meeting with many compliments on the results of their gas, and a great deal of the patronage seems to be coming their way. The stores in which the light is used present a fine appearance when illuminated. The Economic people may feel proud of it, as it is without doubt the best gas in existence.

Handsomer Than Ever.

Moorhead News: Building operations on Broadway, Fargo, are now at their height. If the work mapped out goes on uninterruptedly for sixty days, the street will present a handsomer appearance than it did before the fire.

The Fosston Fair.

Thirteen Towns: The posters advertising the Thirteen Towns Fair were received by the secretary last Saturday from the JOURNAL office Crookston, and are being distributed around the county as fast as possible. They make an attractive appearance, the colored picture at the top being very appropriate, showing a variety of stock, vegetables, machinery, etc., that will be seen here next month, 4th, 5th and 6th. But the association does not advertise like a circus. The latter always pictures many things that one never sees or expects to see at their show, but the Fair Association does not pretend to picture a quarter of what will be seen here next October.

Continue the medicine after every meal for a month or two and you will feel like a new man. The merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla is proven by its thousands of wonderful cures. Why don't you try it?

CASH FOR WHEAT.

The Farmers Can Obtain the Coin of the Realm for Their Wheat by Bringing it to Crookston.

Time Checks, Sight Drafts, Certified Checks, Money Orders nor Postal Notes Don't Go.

Plenty of Currency for Wheat, and the Market Shows Signs of Bracing Up.

Hear ye, all you farmers who wish to dispose of your wheat, you are hereby notified that you can get cash for it in Crookston. On Monday the McManns & Farley elevator people announced that they would pay cash for wheat; M. C. Malone, the independent track buyer, is paying cash for wheat; the Red River Valley elevator will be opened Monday, and will pay cash; the Valley Roller Mills are paying half cash; the Carman elevator will pay cash; and with all these cash buyers in the field, the farmers of this vicinity need not take anything but the currency of the country for their wheat—if they are disposed to sell it at the present price. It is right that it should be so. The farmer shouldn't have to wait for his money when he brings to market the best wheat in the world, and offers to sell it for 50 cents per bushel. It is said there are hundreds of thousands of dollars of English capital in Duluth to buy wheat with, but the only way they can buy is through the independent elevators and track buyers. But this has brought the elevators to time, and if they want any wheat they will have to plank down the hard cash. And if the elevator companies can pay the drafts which are issued to the farmers and then sent to headquarters, there don't seem any good reason why the money cannot just as well be paid to the farmer at the country elevator.

A Disciple of Doc Fish.

Recently the Plano Manufacturing Co. made a levy on the crop of Lars E. Nelson in the town of Knute, this county, and the sheriff posted a notice of said levy on said Larson's farm. Afterwards the following notice, written by Larson, was posted up beside the sheriff's notice.

My intention has never been to swindle any of my creditors, which can be proven by asking any one who knows me (with the exception of Ole Narveson.) Thus my intention was none other than to pay my debt to the Plano Manufacturing Co., which can also be proven by the fact that I to the above named company have paid the following notes: One for $15.00, one for $25.00, ($21.85 paid on a note of $70.00) and it has been my intention to pay capital and interest on what I had signed, but no other expenses, and now, if the worthy collecting agents are willing to compromise on this proposition, then very well. From what they now claim it appears that the proposition was to pay half the capital November 1st, 1894, and the other half November 1st, 1895, and then I should receive right, if not full possession of the land, is alright enough, and if Gilbertson, Espeseth or Berge would kindly (I should repay them for their trouble) bring over these documents for my signature, as I should very reluctantly stomach the oder of a butchery. Take warning and do not attempt to take anything by force from my farm while I live there, for whoever does shall be tendered a home in "the happy hunting grounds," and I have friends who will assist if need be.

And this is truth and no poetry to read for those that earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, but any day you can hear the bloodhounds and Pinkerton detectives sing the same with a gleeful halleluiah.

LARS E. NELSON.

This man has evidently been a reader of the Great West or the Normanden, and has got thoroughly imbued with the radical doctrines preached in these anarchistic sheets. There is too much freedom of the press in this country. The farmers knowingly and willingly assume obligations fully aware of the consequences of failure to meet these contracts when due. Then by the teachings of such papers as the Great West and the Normanden, these farmers are made to believe that their creditors are a lot of oppressors, monopolists, plutocrats, etc., and thus get the farmers so excited that, as in the case of this man Nelson, they are ready to do violence to resist the claims of their creditors.

LABOR DAY THOUGHTS.

Attorney Montague Thinks it a Good Time to Make a Kick for the Misguided Farmers.

CROOKSTON, Sept. 4, 1893.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—This being Labor Day, a day set apart by the state for the recognition of labor and the rights of the laborer, intending thereby to call special attention to the fact of the dignity of labor and the important position which the laborer holds in civilized society, I know of no better work than the statement to-day of the following facts, which if true, and I have reason to believe them true, are gross violations of the rights of labor and the robbing of laborers and the appropriation of the fruits of labor by those not entitled thereto.

Some years ago the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Co. was organized. Its financial standing was not recognized by the people to be very high. Its agents took a large number of applications for insurance in this county, generally by traveling through the country. Policies were issued on these applications, and the farmers' notes were given for the payment of the premiums. The fact that nearly all these policies were void, being issued on risks which the company would not recognize and in violation of the rules of the company and provisions of the policy, such as insuring a farm dwelling having a stove-pipe through the roof, and without chimney, placed the farmers who had given their notes in the position of having to pay without receiving anything in return, or without any chance of collecting in case of loss. Some losses occurred in different sections of the county, proofs of losses were sent to the company, the company denied its liability. The result was other farmers in the vicinity where such losses occurred and where payment was refused, generally failed to make any further payments on their notes given in consideration of these worthless policies.

If there was nothing further to it than this, we might say that it was simply another lesson to those who are too ready to subscribe and obligate themselves to pay simply because some stranger asked them to sign a paper or a note, and to teach people to run their own business in place of all owing it to be run by some agent who is a stranger to them. In other words, it might teach those who wanted insurance that the business way was to go to some office, state the facts to some person in whom they had confidence and from such person procure what insurance they required.

But this is not all; when the insurance company a few weeks ago undertook to enforce the payment of these notes against the farmers of this county, they found very willing and pliant persons holding public offices in this county to assist them. All the suits, about one hundred, were brought before one justice of the peace in the City of Crookston; the summonses were taken by a constable under contract to be served at an expense to the company of considerably less than one-half the fees charged to the farmer sued. My information is based on statements of different persons who have knowledge of the facts, and admissions of persons interested. Mr. Jones, the agent of the Millers and Manufacturers Co., which is the old company above referred to, re-organized, made a bargain with a justice of the peace in this city that he was to do all the work necessary as a justice, in each case for one dollar. Then Jones let to this justice the contract of issuing summonses and taking all proceedings as justice in all the cases the company had, about one hundred, in this county. Jones then made a contract with a constable allowing him a little more than a dollar a piece for serving the summonses. This constable relet the contract to one or two other constables for serving these sermonses, at one dollar each. This insured to the company that in case they failed to get judgment in any case that about two dollars would be all the costs they would have to pay, and defeat to the company under such an arrangement would be very improbable.

There might be nothing wrong in this if the contract provided that no more than these amounts were to be charged up to the farmers, but in the judgments entered and in the cases of those who have settled up, that Justice has charged against the farmer his full fees, in some cases more than two dollars, and in no cases where judgment was entered less than two dollars, and the constable's fees charged up to the farmer are in many cases from five to eight dollars. Now, it is easy to be seen that the insurance company, in a case where the constable's fees would be charged at $6. and the justice' fees $2, would be gainer by having brought the suit, of all that was due on the note, and about $5 profit on the excess of fees, charged by these officers more than paid for those services. Such is a direct inducement to the company to bring suits; such is a degredation of the office both of Justice of the Peace and constable, a making of them pliant tools and minions of the plaintiff. It is the robbing of these people who are sued of five or six hundred dollars illegal fees stolen along with the other spoils received out of the proceeds of the notes. Should not an inquiry be made into these matters, and this company deprived of its charter for so seeking to further its own interests by such attempts at prostitution of justice. I state the facts above as I have learned them from different sources, and believe them to be true.

Yours Truly,
R. J. MONTAGUE.

The Wheat Yield.

The following is a general summary of the weather and the yield of wheat, for several counties in the state, for the week ending September 5th, as compiled by the Minnesota weather bureau:

The temperature has averaged slightly above the normal; the first part being below with cool nights and light frosts which slightly injured in a few localities, corn, buckwheat and late potatoes.

The damage is not serious, and will have no material effect upon the total yield. The latter part of the week was warm and excellent weather for ripening corn and other late crops. The rainfall was greatly deficient and delays fall plowing and sowing of winter grain. It has also dried up the pastures so that in many places cattle have to be fed, but these injurious results are offset by the weather being excellent for stacking and threshing, which is now in full blast, except in a few places, where it is retarded; farmers holding off on account of low prices.

The following yields were reported during the week:—

Kittson County, 20 to 25 bushels, grade No. 1 hard and No. 1 Northern.
Polk Co., 5 to 16 bushels, and some exceptional fields as high as 22 bushels.
Becker Co., 10 bushels.
Grant Co., 4 to 10 bushels. Grade No. 1 Northern.
Big Stone Co., 12 bushels.
Wright Co., 6 to 12 bushels.
Stevens Co., 8 to 15 bushels.
Wabasha Co., 5 to 12 bushels.
Lyon Co., 15 to 18 bushels. No. 1 hard.
Faribault Co., 10 to 12 bushels.

Corn is being cut and ripening fast. The bulk of the crop will be secured during this week, providing no killing frosts occur. Plums are ripe and abundant, apples are light.

Among the incidents of childhood, that stand out in bold relief, as our memory reverts to the days when we were young, none are more prominent than severe sickness. The young mother vividly remembers that it was Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured her of croup, and in turn administers it to her own offspring and always with the best results. For sale by S. A. A little boy of Mrs. McDonald's, living near here, fell against a red hot stove and was fearfully burned. The pain was terrible, and it was thought the burn was so severe as to scar the child for life. I took the lady a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which after greasing the sore, she applied. It soon removed all the fire and eased the pain, and in ten days the boy was well, no trace of the scar remaining. J. D. McLaren, Keysport, Clinton county, Ill. For sale by S. A. Training Schools.

(R. H. Bailey in The Message.)

TEACHERS greatly enjoy and are greatly profited by the state summer training school. The expense thus incurred by the state is one of the best investments the commonwealth makes. Hundreds of young teachers whose invaluable services as the instructors of country children have no other professional instruction save what the state gives them in the four week's summer training schools. It is a boon to these young teachers. They are not only instructed but inspired.

From the twenty-four days of study and review in branches in which teachers are more or less deficient they go out from the summer school to teach better schools, develope better traits of their own characters as young people, and inspired to read up and keep abreast of the times in the profession of teaching. Also it is very apparent that those sections of the state more remote from our colleges and normal schools are profited most by the summer training school. The teachers attending the summer school at Hallock in Kittson County this summer for instance, had, very few of them ever attended any school higher than the district school a week in their lives. The writer of this article was engaged in his duties as conductor of the Hallock training school at the time that the training school instructors of the state held their meeting at Minneapolis last month and so he is unable to express opinion as to the other schools. But some things fell under his own observation in the conduct of the school above mentioned which call for notice. These schools being in various parts of the state must of necessity differ widely in the instruction given. We had large numbers of young teachers of Kittson and Marshall counties who could not perform examples in fractions and were as deficient in other branches as in arithmetic. We had to have three classes in arithmetic and two in English grammar. The improvement of the scholarship was of necessity a matter of first importance. The question arises what can be done to develope more thoroughness and more interest in what might be called academy work in these country villages. College work but few of these young teachers know anything about. What they specially need is a better scholarship in common branches below the high school course.

International Arbitration.

If we look upon the world-drama as we should look upon any tragicomedy on the boards of a theatre, it is obvious that its interest centers in the two leading personages—Britain and America. For the last hundred years the play has turned on the story of their alienation, their differences and their misunderstandings. But with the Alabama arbitration a change came over the spirit of the scene which all storytellers and dramatists lead us to expect when they are about two-thirds through their plot. The estranged lovers begin to draw together again. They discover that many deadly affronts were merely ridiculous misconceptions. Prejudices born of conflict melt in the sun of restored confidence, and the experienced observer knows that he is within a measureable distance of the time when the hero and heroine will marry and live happily ever afterwards. Without attempting to decide whether Britain or America is the hero or the heroine in this great romance of the century, it would really begin to appear that their reunion is going to come about after all. The debate on the proposed treaty of International Arbitration last month in the House of Commons, when a resolution was unanimously passed in favor of meeting the friendly overtures of the American government for the conclusion of a permanent treaty of arbitration, was a sign of the budding of the orange blossom, that familiar symbol of the coming bridal. Mr. Cremer, Sir John Lubbock and the peace Society have for years pressed this resolution upon Parliament; but it was not till last month that Mr. Gladstone—and with Mr. Gladstone the House of Commons—woke up to the discovery that what had previously been declared to be impossible, unconstitutional and most inexpedient, had now become so obviously desirable that not a single hostile vote could be registered against the motion. The two English-speaking peoples are now both committed to the principle of binding themselves in advance by treaty to submit all disputes to arbitration. They have already referred the Alabama and Bering Sea controversies to arbitration; but the new departure that is contemplated is to substitute for such haphazard references agreed to at the caprice of a Secretary of State for the time being, the solemn obligation of a permanent treaty binding both parties to resort to arbitration for the settlement of their disputes. From that to the constitution of the permanent international High Court, which will be the wedding ring of Britain and America, there is but a short and easily traversed road.—From the "Progress of the World," August Review of Reviews.

Danger in Japan.

By Rev. L. W. Squier in the Message.

"The Japan Gazette" of July 24th gives an account of an attack on a missionary lady of Yokohama by a jinrikisha coolie. It appears that the lady engaged the coolie to take her from the railway station to her home, agreeing on the price usually paid for the distance, but on arriving at the house, the coolie demanded an excess of pay over what was agreed upon. Being well aware of this avaricious habit of the Japanese coolies, the lady very properly refused to pay the extra fee demanded. What was her surprise a few moments later to find that the fellow had entered the house and followed her upstairs to her bedroom. She ordered him out of the house and herself opened the front door, when the scoundrel struck her a heavy blow in her face with his fist. Being alone she could only force him out and lock the doors against him.

The types that printed this outrage were hardly cool, before "The Japan Daily Advertiser" of July 27th comes out with the account of a murderous attack made by another coolie on an American gentleman by the name of Willett. Mr. Willett had engaged the Jap to take care of some stock but found the work sorely neglected and the stock suffering in consequence. The hot blood of the Oriental was stirred at the reproof the foreigner gave him, and procuring an ax he rushed upon Mr. Willett with evident intent to kill him. Mr. Willet tried to retreat but found it impossible, then pulling his revolver called on the Jap to stop, but the order being unheeded, Mr. Willett fired one shot into the ground just in front of the villain, who, however, was undaunted and now within short distance of his victim, when Mr. Willett fired again twice, each shot taking effect in the legs of his assailant and bringing him to the ground. Instantly the yard was filled with Japanese who proposed to make short work of the foreigner. Mr. Willett seeing his danger fled to the street, pursued by the mob, which increased every block, and finally cornered him in a store, he made his escape by a side door and across the street into another store room which was immediately closed and barricaded. Luckily by this time a detachment of police arrived, dispersed the mob, and permitted Mr. Willett to proceed to the United States Consulate for legal protection.

These attacks recall the assault made a couple of years ago by government students on the Rev. Dr. Imbrie of the Presbyterian Mission in Tokyo; and a similar assault made upon another missionary teacher only a few months ago. One also recollects the tragic murder of the Rev. Mr. Large of the Canadian Methodist mission in Tokyo who was killed in his own home and in the presence of his wife, by sword thrusts at the hands of masked Japanese. Other attacks of smaller moment have come to sight; and withal there is room for grave anxiety for the welfare of foreign residents in Japan.

That there has been a great change in the attitude of the Japanese toward the foreign residents in Japan can not be doubted. The kindly welcome of a few years ago has been replaced by a mere toleration of the foreigner's presence; the willing hearing of foreigner's doctrines of religion and of trade has been largely, in the open ports at least, supplanted by a silent contempt. And the Japanese instead of being the suave, gentle Oriental, has seemingly become a human tiger only waiting for an opportunity to spring upon the foreign intruder. Why this change, is a question that may not be answered by all foreigners in Japan alike. The following, however, are generally agreed upon:—

1. The Japanese, by religion and tradition, hold the instinct of national superiority over other peoples. Their national pride has been sorely humbled by the treatment Japan has received through her treaties with western nations.

2. The Japanese government has been earnestly trying to have the irksome treaties revised, but without success. Forbearance has nearly ceased to be a virtue.

3. "Japan for the Japanese" is the rallying cry of the youngest Japan,—it is the watch-word of the Empire, by the last generation held in abeyance thro' awe, but now coming to the front with increasing momentum.

4. The revival of Buddhism, stirring up the national pride of the people by appealing to their religious sentiments. Buddhist priests have ever been the foreigner's inveterate foe.

5. Personal ambition among politicians. The institution of the national parliament has developed rapidly a vast element of political aspiration, which in Japan, as elsewhere, inflames public opinion for demagogic purposes.

Besides, there may be a secret understanding throughout the Empire, that the foreigner must go. Letters recently received from Japan express incipient anxiety on this point.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Montana Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

"Waiting for the Verdict"

Is the title of a popular novel, as may be interesting to read of, but is very unpleasant practice. The judge and court officers get very weary waiting for the jury to come in, but the strain comes hardest on the prisoner at the bar on trial, it may be, for his life. Whether he shall be free, suffer a long term in prison walls, or take a long leap into the great unknown, depends on the verdict, and he waits for it in such alternate hope and fear as cannot be described. The Burlington Route has long since passed the point of waiting for the verdict—that has been rendered by the public, and is to the effect that it has the smoothest track, the finest equipment, makes the best time and of right is the favorite route North South, East and West. For maps, time tables and any information call on local agents or address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

How to Make Black Coffee.

After dinner or black coffee is made by simply doubling the proportion of coffee to the amount of water. Use 2 rounding tablespoonfuls of coffee to every cup of water. If you will dip the strainer or drip in cold water just before filtering the coffee, the fine grains will not go through. Do not fill up the strainer with water, but pour slowly and steadily until all the water has percolated through the coffee, keeping it where it will not cool. Serve at once.

How to Renovate Dress Linings.

Put them in warm water and let them stand awhile. Add boiling water and stir the pieces, then put in a pint or more of milk and let the liquid dry until cool enough to wring the linings. Wring as dry as possible and press at once with a hot iron.

How to Make Grape Ice.

Wash and press lightly 2½ pounds of ripe muscatel grapes, stir in a cupful of cold water and press the juice through a sieve. Add a quart of sugar sirup and the juice of 2 lemons. The addition of a little sherry is favored by some. When almost frozen stir in thoroughly the well beaten whites of 2 eggs sweetened with 2 ounces of pulverized sugar. Keep carefully packed in [illegible] ice and salt for an hour before serving.

DREAMS THAT COME.

STRANGE FANTASIES OF THE DAY TROUBLE US IN SLEEP.

A Few Examples of Disturbed Slumber That Illustrate a Bright Remark Made by an Illustrious Poet—Remarkable Experiences In Sleep.

A lawyer who had been overworked rose in his sleep, went into the hall of his house and discharged a pistol. The household hurried to the place and found him at the head of the stairway, awake, but much bewildered. He had dreamed of burglars and had gone to attack them. One member of the family slept through the noise. When he came into the dining room—before he had heard of the events of the night—he complained that his sleep had been much disturbed. He had dreamed that he had been condemned to be shot, that he had been led to the place of execution and had fallen senseless when the guns were fired.

A lady dreamed that a man came into her room, poured some water into a basin, carried the splashing water to her bedside and began to sprinkle it over her. She awoke and heard a loud splashing. At first she was motionless with fear, but presently she lighted a candle and went to the basin, where she found a mouse making frantic efforts to get out of the water.

Another dreamed that she had a severe earache, that she rose, unlocked a door that separated her room from one in which two children slept and went to a shelf where was a lotion which she applied to her ear. When she awoke, she found herself in her own bed and without pain. The door was still locked, but in a few minutes one of the children began to cry that his ear ached, and she rose and went to the shelf for the lotion.

A young man dreamed that he was in his office, busy with a troublesome estimate, when a woman came in with a screaming baby and began to walk rapidly up and down the room, so that it was impossible for the calculator to remember his figures. Presently the woman thrust the child into his arms, and he was so startled by this that he awoke, but the screams still troubled his ears, for a mother in a neighboring room was walking about vainly trying to quiet a crying child.

Another incident appears to be a case of thought transference. Several years after the death of her husband, a widow, lying awake one night, recalled vividly some scenes of her husband's last illness. Presently her daughter, who was beside her, awoke and said, "Oh, mamma, I have been going over in my dreams all the scenes of papa's illness." She then told her dream, in which the scenes were almost the counterpart of those that had been recalled by her mother.

Dreamers sometimes answer questions and carry on more or less coherent conversations.

A lady had a summer cottage on an island in Muskoka. One night her sons were stormstaid on the mainland, and a young English visitor went to sleep full of apprehension that Indians might visit the house while their protectors were absent.

In the night the hostess was suddenly roused by some one clutching her arm and when she opened her eyes she saw her guest standing by the bedside.

"Oh, Mrs. Laughton, Mrs. Laughton," exclaimed the girl in a hoarse whisper, "there's a man at the window—an Indian He's gone to get something to climb in by."

The next moment Eva was fumbling about on the floor.

"What are you doing?" asked Mrs. Laughton.

"I have some liniment in my valise," was the answer. "I'm going to get it out, and when he puts his head through the window again I'll throw it in his eyes."

Mrs. Laughton, who was not nervous, began to laugh, but Eva paid no attention and presently asked, "Where's the button hook?"

"What do you want it for?"

"Why, Mrs. Laughton," said Eva aloud, and in a very indignant tone, "do you think I would allow myself to be seen anywhere with my shoes unbuttoned? No man would respect that kind of girl."

In the morning when Mrs. Laughton awoke and looked across the room to Eva's bed she saw the girl sitting up, gazing with dismay at her crookedly buttoned shoes in which she had slept. She had no recollection of the remarks she had made in the night, and it was evident that she had been asleep all the time.

One night in camp I heard a peculiar sound near the middle of the tent, and by the dim light I saw one of the campers apparently trying to climb up the tentpole.

"What are you doing?" I asked.

"There's a snake in my bed," she answered, "so I'm going to sleep up there."

"Up there!"

"Yes, why not? It will be more comfortable."

Then, with a sudden change of tone, she exclaimed, "I forgot to say my prayers." But instead of kneeling she picked her way through the tent to the foot of one of the beds and lay there till morning. She did not remember the conversation of the night, but told us that she had a habit of talking in her sleep, and that she had often conversed with her sisters while she was sleeping soundly.—M. Bourchier Sanford in Kate Field's Washington.

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE
North American Review
The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

OWNING A HOME.

The Record of the Farming Population of Minnesota a Good One.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—"Ownership and Debt in Minnesota," is the subject of a bulletin just issued by the census bureau. In this some very interesting information is given regarding the number of city homes and farms that are mortgaged and the number that are free from incumbrance. According to the summary made by the statisticians only 15.25 per cent of the families on farms rent, while 84.75 per cent own their farms; of this 84.75 per cent more than one-half own without incumbrance, or to be exact 15 out of each 100 rent, 39 own with incumbrance, while 46 own the farms they operate. The total mortgage debt on the owned farms is $87,709,574, which is 31 per cent of their value. The average rate of interest paid is 8.18 per cent. The record regarding those who own homes and those who rent them does not read or look so well. In 100 families [illegible] their homes, 17 own with incumbrance and 80 without incumbrance.

REUNION OF VETERANS.

Twenty-seventh National Encampment of the G. A. R. Opened.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 4.—Thanks to fine weather and successful carrying out of the admirable arrangements perfected by the local committees, the 27th national encampment of the G. A. R. opened most auspiciously. So far as the number of visitors from outside points is concerned the success of the encampment is assured. Not all of these, however, were veterans. In fact, the boys in blue are almost lost in the throngs. The hardy, hoop pole yeomanry with their wives and children and other relatives, near and remote, form a large proportion of the arrivals. As to the veterans, the arrivals outside of the state posts are not by any means up to expectations. A good many states send less than half the total that had been scheduled a month ago as certain to be here, while a few are likely to make even a poorer showing. In the encampment proper, fully 100 delegates, if not more, will fail to answer to the roll call. Hard times and the continued stringency in the money market, especially in the far Western states, is

The Ascribable Cause.

But the crowds are here and even if there are a quartette of civilians to every veteran, Indianapolis is just as well contented and happy. Almost on the very spot in Military park where 31 years ago the citizens presented to Colonel Harrison and his newly organized Seventieth regiment of volunteers the standards of Indiana and the United States to carry before them to the war, the ex-president dedicated "Camp Wilder," the name bestowed upon some 800 tents in which the reunion of veterans and soldiers' societies will be in full blast for the remainder of the week. About 3,000 people participated in the exercises which included addresses by W. A. Ketcham, General John T. Wilder, for whom the camp is named, and General Harrison.

Candidates for Commander.

Now that a goodly proportion of the men who make and unmake the rulers of the organization are on the ground, the woods are full of available candidates for the office of commander-in-chief. The list already comprises General S. H. Hurst of Ohio, J. G. B. Ames of Massachusetts, General E. Burd Grubb of New Jersey, Edgar Allen of Virginia, Charles P. Lincoln of Washington, James A. Sexton of Chicago, Editor I. O. Mack of Sandusky, O., and Charles M. Travis of Indianapolis. Adams and Lincoln are prime favorites while the support of the others is confined to their own states.

It is possible that the encampment will endorse the action of Commander Weissert in suspending Farnham post of New York for its action in adopting and circulating resolutions approving the pension policy of the present national administration.

Brilliant Reception.

The reception tendered by the citizens' committee at Tomlinson hall in the evening to the officers and delegates of the national encampment was a brilliant social function. General Harrison delivered the address of welcome, Commander-in-Chief Weissert made the response and musical selections were rendered by Mrs. Zelda Sequin Wallace and a grand chorus. As a finale there was a dancing programme of 12 numbers. Later in the evening General Harrison attended a reunion of comrades of the Army of the Cumberland.

LOCHREN'S LATEST.

An Order Benefiting Many Pension Claimants.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—Commissioner Lochren, of the pension bureau, has issued an order withdrawing that of June 12, 1893, rating cases under the act of June 27, 1890. The order reads:

"Hereafter in affixing rates under this act the medical referee or the medical officer in the board of revision shall weigh each debility and determine the degree that each debility of the combined disabilities disables the claimant from earning a support by manual labor, and a rate corresponding to this degree shall be allowed. In cases in which the pensioner has reached the age of 75, his rate shall not be disturbed if he is receiving the maximum, and if he is not a pensioner he shall receive the maximum for senility alone, if there are no special pensionable disabilities shown."

This order shall benefit and claimants who have been denied ratings under the former practice. Under the new order the contributory causes of disability constituting a mental or physical incapacity to earn support by manual labor, are taken into account.

There were about 15 seriously injured and five or six may die.

HOW TO BE BALDHEADED.

If You Long For This Sign of Culture, You Can Get It.

A medical authority claims that baldness is a product and sign of culture. If baldness is a sign of culture, something devoutedly to be wished, we shall perform a public service in showing how this condition can be quickly reached.

"We lose in the course of time," said Voltaire, "our teeth, our hair and our ideas." That may be true as far as the teeth and ideas are concerned, but we cannot always depend upon losing our hair.

Persons who long for the proofs of culture must resort at once to the methods of art. The first good rule is to keep the head warm. In summer, if you wish to become bald, do not wear a straw hat. On the contrary, let your headgear be a felt or cloth hat, a derby or a stovepipe. In winter always wear a fur cap. While in the house, at all times of the year, do not fail to wear a fez or an oil cap.

Women whose light hats do not wear off the hair rapidly enough may accomplish that end by using heavy switches of false hair, which will work even more rapidly than a fur cap, as the hair will fall out by the hundreds when the roll is heavy enough. The beloved nightcap, so dear to our grandmothers, is to be highly recommended also. The helmet of the officer and policeman is also a splendid invention. What is the effect of these head coverings? They make the head perspire.

Moisture is the deadly enemy to hair. On the temples and the back of the head near the neck, usually untouched by hats and caps, it is seldom that one sees baldness. A bald ring often marks the position of the hat or cap. Our young dandies who curry their heads every morning with two brushes and in the course of a day comb their hair whenever they see a mirror are on the right path to baldness. That is also true of women who allow their hair to be combed by unpracticed servants.

How to Relieve Deafness.

Stew two ordinary handfuls of garden sweet clover thoroughly in half a pint of hen's oil. After straining carefully put four drops in the ear every morning immediately after performing your ablutions. This treatment will give great relief if persisted in, and if the deafness be recent it will usually cure it. By bottling this preparation it may be kept indefinitely.

How to Prolong Life.

A scientific writer says that anatomical experiment and investigation show that the chief characteristics of old age are deposits of earthy matter of a gelatinous and fibrinous character in the human system. Carbonate and phosphate of lime mixed with other salts of a calcareous nature have been found to furnish the greater part of these earthy deposits. As observation shows man begins in a gelatinous condition. He ends in an osseous or bony one, soft in infancy, hard in old age. By gradual change in the long space of years the ossification comes on, but after passing middle life a more marked development of the ossific character takes place. Of course these earthy deposits, which affect all the physical organs naturally interfere with their functions. Partial ossification of the heart produces the imperfect circulation of the blood which affects the aged. When the arteries are clogged with calcareous matter, there is interference with the circulation, upon which nutrition depends. Without nutrition there is no repair of the body. Hence in his work, "The Physiology of Common Life," G. H. Lewes states that "if the repair were always identical with the waste life would only then be terminated by accident, never by old age." Both Bichat and Baillie considered that the greater number of people past 60 suffer more or less from arterial ossification, which brings about obstructions in the proper and healthy circulation of the blood.

How to Make Yeast Waffles.

Add enough warm water to a quart of flour to make a batter. Add a tablespoonful of yeast. When light, beat 2 eggs light without separating, add to them half a cup of milk and half a teaspoonful of salt. Mix this with the batter and bake in waffle irons.

A Babe In the Woods.

A little daughter of blacksmith Grossenbacher, who lives on North Fourth street, Plattsmouth, Neb., strayed away from its home during the recent storm. The neighbors turned out, and for several hours were engaged in a fruitless search for the missing girl. Officers Fitzpatrick and Black didn't give up as easily as the others, and finally succeeded in finding the little one asleep under some brush in a thickly wooded ravine, less than two blocks from the home. This was after midnight, and the child was soaked from head to foot with the rain. The strange part of the proceedings was that the parents gave up the search and retired for the night long before the officers found the child.

How to Cure Earache.

Put a live coal from the fire in a cup and pour a teaspoonful of granulated sugar over it. Be careful not to let it blaze and at once insert a small funnel over it, holding the tip of the funnel in the ear. The smoke gives instant relief.

HOME RULE PASSES

VOTE IN COMMONS SHOWS A GOOD MAJORITY.

For the Measure For Which Mr. Gladstone Has Worked So Assiduously—A Great Demonstration In Favor of the Grand Old Man.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Mr. Gladstone's long home rule bill fight in the house of commons is ended. The bill was passed at 10 p. m. by a vote of 301 to 267. It was hurried to the house of lords, which gave it the first reading and adjourned.

There was unusual animation along the route from Mr. Gladstone's residence to the house of commons during the afternoon. The streets were crowded with people who wished to catch a glimpse of the great champion of Irish home rule, and although there was no organized demonstration the prime minister was cheered throughout the route. Mr. Gladstone was accompanied by his wife. He was evidently much pleased with the which he received from the populace. The cheering was continuous; every man lifted his hat as the carriage passed, while the women waved handkerchiefs. The prime minister was loudly cheered by his followers as he entered the house and walked to his seat. The galleries also gave him a warm greeting. Before the debate on the home rule bill could be resumed a long list of questions had to be answered. In reply to a question by John Redmond, Mr. Gladstone said that he would issue a commission upon the financial relations between England and Ireland at the beginning of the year.

After the various questions had been answered Justin McCarthy, the Irish leader, resumed the debate on home rule. He was followed by Messrs. Chamberlain, Wallace, T. P. O'Connor, Balfour, Morley and others.

The Bill Passes.

J. P. Nolan, a Parnellite home ruler, then attempted to speak against the financial clauses of the bill, but hardly started when his voice was overcome by cries of "Divide." Thereupon a division was had upon Mr. Courtney's amendment to reject the bill, and the amendment was defeated. The bill was then put on its third reading and was passed by a vote of 301 to 267.

The full import of the occasion was felt by the spectators and by the government, and the culmination of the work in the house was accompanied by rounds of frantic cheers from the galleries and upon the floor. A moment later Mr. Gladstone entered the house from the division lobby. He was greeted at the moment of his victory by renewed and tumultuous applause. Mr. Morley, who followed him, was also cheered. Mr. Gladstone received a fresh ovation as he left the house. The scenes in front of the house after midnight were exciting. When the announcement that the house had passed the home rule bill by a vote of 301 to 267 was received

The Crowd Went Wild.

They cheered, shouted, sung, smashed hats and did other absurd things to show their appreciation of the house's action. The police were alarmed at the antics of the people, and a cordon of bluecoats was forthwith drawn up before the members' exit. The first member left the palace yard shortly after 1 o'clock. He was not recognized. The crowds surged around the cabs and carriages which were awaiting the members, and as each member of any distinction was recognized, he was given a cheer. Mr. Gladstone's carriage, containing the prime minister and his wife, emerged from the gates at ten minutes after 1. A number of mounted police instantly surrounded the carriage, but the crowd, when they learned who was in the carriage, became beyond control of the police, and, breaking through the cordon, stopped the carriage and held it while they cheered the of home rule to the echo. The coachman was enabled to proceed after a few minutes, but by this time the entire crowd left their positions and started after the carriage, which was at the corner of Downing street and delayed while the crowd cheered and sang. Mr. Gladstone bowed right and left to his enthusiastic admirers, and was greatly touched by the applause. The police again cleared the way, and the carriage was allowed to proceed to the premier's residence without further stoppage.

Triumphant Champion

The Coeur d'Alene Mines Start Up.

SPOKANE, Wash., Sept. 4.—There is great rejoicing here over the prospect of reopening of the Coeur d'Alene mines. The owners of the Granite mine, near Gem, concluded arrangements with their employes whereby the latter commence work at $3.40 a day, only 10 cents less than the wages formerly paid. The Poorman, Tiger, Bunker Hill and Sullivan mines, all located in Coeur d'Alene county, expect to open up again within a very few weeks.

Done by Directum.

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—Directum, the "Black Whirlwind" from California, broke the world's stallion record, beat all 4-year-old figures and went ahead of all marks given to trotters of 5 years, and one-half of his mile was the fastest ever trotted by any horse on any track. The half was made in 1:00 1-4, three-quarters in 1:33 1-4 and the mile in 2:07.

Big Crop of Corn.

TOPEKA, Sept. 4.—The reports coming to the agricultural department for bulletins to be issued in a few days show that the total yield of corn this year will exceed 200,000,000 bushels, the largest in the history of the state except in 18[illegible]

HOW TO WORK THE BRAIN.

But This Scheme of Life Is For the Independent Only.

A healthy person does not need an afternoon nap. If a man finds himself napping at that time, either he has eaten too much at his midday meal or his cerebral circulation is feeble.

It is the universal habit of the pig that is being fattened to sleep in his sty after his midday meal. The working horse, on the other hand, which gets nothing at midday but a feed of corn—a small but highly nutritious meal—does not sleep at all after it, but is fresh and ready for work in half an hour.

One would like to persuade all literary workers to work in the day and to sleep in the night. They should never go for more than eight hours a day. Early rising would be good for most of them. A cup of coffee and a piece of toast at 6:30 might be followed by an hour's work from 7 to 8. The whole hour between 8 and 9 should be devoted to a thoroughly good breakfast and a short walk. Work from 9 to 12.

Half an hour should then be spent in gentle sauntering in the fresh air, and a light lunch should follow—say a chop and bread, with a modicum of light pudding, accompanied by a small glass of lager beer. From 1 to 2 a pipe and a saunter, and at 2 a cup of black coffee. From 2 to 4 work, at 4 a cup of afternoon tea and a rest until 5. From 5 to 6 or 6:30 work, and at 6:30 the real labors of the day should be over and completed.

At 7 a good, well cooked, appetizing, slowly eaten dinner, followed by one cup of black coffee, but no tea. At 10:45 a small cup of cocoa and one or two pieces of toast. At 11 bed, and sleep to 6 or 6:30. The brain worker should not work more than five days a week in this fashion. He should have two days of leisure in the week.

The first of these should be devoted to brisk and thoroughly fatiguing exercise in the open air and the second to lolling, lounging, a little light reading and the like. This is the kind of life which physiology would suggest for the brain worker, and in this "scheme of life" there is neither place nor necessity for the afternoon nap.

How to Make Excellent Tooth Powder.

Mix one part of best pulverized chalk with two parts of finely pulverized charcoal. Add sufficient castile soapsuds and spirits of camphor to make a thick paste. Apply with a piece of flannel or the finger, rubbing vigorously. It will whiten the teeth beautifully and is said not to injure the enamel.

How to Sleep.

Place the right hand on the forehead and the left at the back of the neck while counting 49. The rationale of this process is thus explained by Dr. Salisbury: The palm of the right hand and the fore part of the body are both plus (or positive) magnetic poles. The left palm and the back part of the body are both minus (or negative) poles. Like poles repel, and by thus placing the palms of the hands over the various centers of plexuses a vital current is directed back into the body, its normal circuit is re-established, and its energies are guided and evenly distributed among the organs situate along its course. The physical and mental systems will become passive, contented and comfortable, all parts working together for the common good. The result will be composure and recuperation. All distracting, harassing, melancholy imaginings and gloomy forebodings will have passed away. The stomach and bowels and all their glandular appendages will renew their healthy functions, while digestion and assimilation, previously at a standstill, will go on normally. Overwork and improper food are at the bottom of our sleeplessness. Dr. Salisbury warns us that "the cerebrum should not be permitted to work and consume vitality for more than 10 hours in the 24 on an average. The 14 should be spent in recreation, eating and refreshing sleep. We should live less in the garret of our house and more in the kitchen."

How to Utilize Wornout Towels.

Take the less worn parts, cut them into squares or oblongs for dishcloths, putting two together and padding with the wornout pieces. Tack the edges together and stitch crisscross on the machine to make all firm. They make soft yet very strong and excellent dishcloths.

How to Perfume the Hair.

Girls with perfumed hair are now the "correct thing." It is difficult to do. Of course the hair must be combed carefully every day. That gives the glossy effect which is so much in vogue, but this is only the start in the perfuming of it. A young lady who has tried it successfully says: "There are ways and ways of perfuming hair, but I found the best way was to have a mob cap of soft thin silk made and lined with cotton that had been thickly sprinkled with sachet powder. Now, after weekly shampoos, I wear the cap for an hour, and a delicate, indistinct fragrance is imparted to the locks that is the epitome of daintiness."

How to Prevent Feathers From Working Through Ticks.

If not possible to get new, stouter ticking, empty out the feathers, turn the tick wrong side out and lay it on a table, rubbing it with slightly warmed beeswax until it is well coated.

How to Get Rid of Rats.

Dissolve by heat an ounce of phosphorus in 2 ounces of butter. Mix this thoroughly with a thick paste made of 3 pounds of flour and a little water. Make this into balls, which should then be rolled in granulated sugar until heavily coated. Leave these balls about the house and put a few pans of water where the rats can get to them. The only objection to this plan is that the rodents fre[illegible]

THE Thief River Falls Press has entered its fifth volume, and its proprietors feel justly proud of its career. It ranks among the leading country weeklies of the state.

LABOR Day—Monday, September 4th—was generally observed by organized labor in the larger cities of the country. But as a holiday for labor it was not a success, as labor has been having too many holidays this summer.

BEGINNING with Sunday, September 17th, The St. Paul Sunday Globe will commence the supply of an Art Supplement which will be supplied for ten weeks, and as the price for the Globe and the supplement is only 50 cents, this feature ought to prove a drawing card for the Globe.

THE Nicaragua canal company has gone into the hands of a receiver. Like the Panama canal, it was too big an undertaking for a private corporation to handle. Nothing short of a nation, or a number of nations, will ever be able to complete either of these canals.

THIS week Indianapolis is filled to overflowing with the boys in blue who are attending the National G. A. R. Encampment. Though not as big a crowd as was at Washington last year, it is the largest gathering of veterans the Indiana capital has seen since the days of '65.

THE latest advices from Washington are that there is a safe majority in the senate in favor of unconditional repeal, and that the opposition cannot longer delay the vote than the last of next week. Cleveland is said to be pounding his lieutenants on the back and urging them to force the question to a vote as soon as possible.

LONDON correspondents say that the Irish home rule bill will be killed in the house of lords by a vote of 10 to 1. Lord Salisbury is trying to get every peer back to his post of duty when the bill comes up so as to defeat the measure by such overwhelming majority that it will not be made an issue in the next campaign. The masses of the people of the United Kingdom are in favor of this measure, but the house of lords will stand between the masses and their wishes just as long as possible.

IN a letter to the Journal Ezra G. Valentine says in regard to the work to be done by the drainage commission in the Red River Valley this fall: We expect to put the Sand Hill river in first-class condition before the snow flies. We shall also commence on the Tamarac river at the same time, and probably do a little work also in Kittson county this fall. We intend to make things lively all along the line, and trust that before we are through with it the Red River Valley in Minnesota will be the finest piece of agricultural country in the world.

ESTIMATES of the loss of life by the recent fearful hurricane on the south Atlantic coast place the number at 3000—mostly negroes. The actual number will probably never be known, as the work of burying the dead was prosecuted mostly by negroes, who kept no record of their burials, the main object being to get the bodies into the ground as quickly as possible. The sea swept inland for fifteen miles, carrying death and destruction with it. The people were drowned in thier homes or carried away by the waves. Of all the fatalities of this disastrous year, this storm has been the most destructive of human life.

THE passage of Gladstone's Irish home rule bill through the English house of commons, is a fitting close to the career of a man who has spent the best years of his life in the interests of the common people of the British Isles. Mr. Gladstone has worked incessantly for the passage of this measure, and now that his efforts have been crowned with success—and he is nearing the close of life—he will probably never champion another measure of any importance. Even should the bill never pass the house of lords and become a law, the people of Ireland—and their sympathizers will always revere the name of Gladstone.

MAYOR Eustis of Minneapolis is the right sort of a public officer, in every instance where the interest of the people of the Flour City were at stake, he has come to the rescue, and by good practical work has overcome every difficulty encountered. His latest move is the taking care of the army of the unemployed in the city. Instead of starting public work, involving the city in heavy expenses which she is unable to bear at present, the mayor has been finding employment for the idle, in the harvest field and on the railroad, and purchasing them transportation to their destination. In this way he has cleared the city of idle men and now has more orders for men than he can fill.

THE W. C. T. U. people of this country will long have reason to remember the Rev. Walter Thomas Mills, "the little prohibition giant," who got the temperance people all over the country to subscribe stock to build an immense hotel in the "beautiful village of Harvey," which could be reached from the World's Fair grounds for five cents. This hotel was to be conducted specially for W. C. T. U. folks, and was to be furnished in a luxurious manner, with the most modern conveniences. Just how much money was contributed will never be known, but at the cloes of 1892 the Rev. Mills announced that he had collected $100,000. At any rate when the stockholders began to arrive at the fair, and look for their hotel, they found it required 20 cents car fair to reach the village of Harvey, and then they had to pay 30 cents back fare to go a mile and a half to a swamp where they found their hotel, a cheap shack of a building, with small rooms, containing only a bed and wash stand, board partitions between the rooms, papered with newspapers. It is needless to say that the stockholders are mad—fighting mad—and if the hadn't been a good natured lot of people, would have handled the Rev. Mills without gloves.

Besides almost countless timely and attractive features, literary and pictorial, the Review of Reviews for September contains a brilliant and extended character sketch of Lady Henry Somerset from the sympathetic pen of that incomparable descriptive writer Mr. W. T. Stead. The article is fully illustrated, and will be read with lively interest by Lady Henry's thousands of admirers in the United States.

Economy in Fashionable Dressing.

The most popular of these Fashion Magazines are "La Mode de Paris," "Paris Album of Fashion," "The French Dressmaker," and La Mode." The former two cost only $3.50 each per annum, or 35 cents a copy. "The French Dressmaker" is $3.00 a year while "La Mode" costs only $1.50 a year, or 15 cents a copy, and is the best as well as the cheapest fashion journal for the home. If you are unable to procure any of these magazines at your newsdealer, do not accept any substitute, but apply to Mess. A. McDowell and Co., 4 West 14th Street, New York.

The new Peterson for September is in many respects the very best number yet of that excellent Magazine. Among the illustrated articles of special mention, both from a literary and artistic point of view, are "New England Nooks," by Mary G. Umsted, "Memories of Augsburg," by Miss Stroup, and an exceedingly interesting account of "Old English Ironwork." A very novel story in plot and treatment, "What Did not Happen," by Rebecca Harding Davis, written in that favorite author's most charming manner. As usual, the poems are exceptionally good and among them "Finis," by Ella Higginson, carries off the palm. Terms, two dollars a year. A Good Thing to Keep at Hand.

From the Troy (Kansas) Chief.

Some years ago we were very much subject to severe spells of cholera morbus; and now when we feel any of the symptoms that usually precede that ailment, such as sickness at the stomach, diarrhœa etc., we become scary. We have found Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy the very thing to straighten one out in such cases, and always keep it about. We are not writing this for a pay testimonial, but to let our readers know what is a good thing to keep handy in the house. For sale by S. A. WALLACE, Crookston, Minn.

"Waiting For The Verdict"

Is the title of a popular novel, and may be interesting to read of, but is very unpleasant in practice. The judge and court officers get weary waiting for the jury to come in, but the strain comes hardest on the prisoner at the bar on trial. It may be for his life, whether he shall suffer a long term in prison, or take a leap into the great unknown, depends on the [illegible] as cannot be described. The Burlington route has long since passed the point of waiting for the verdict—that has been rendered by the public, and is to the effect that it has the smoothest track, the finest equipment, makes the best time and of right is the favorite route north, south, east and west. For maps, time tables and any information call on local agents or address W. J. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent St. Paul, Minn.

Among the excellent articles in the North American Review for September are the following: The political situation by Ex-Speaker Reed, England and France in Siam, by the Hon. George N. Curzon, M. Minneapolis has the very best permanent Exposition Building in the country. It is to be filled next September with the most elaborate products of field, factory and atelier ever seen in the Northwest.

In addition to the general display there will be a splendid exhibition of dairy, horticultural and agricultural products, for which premiums aggregating in value $7,000 are offered.

Many novel and attractive manufacturing exhibits will be seen.

The Exposition is held during the four weeks commencing September 6.

Reduced rates on all railroad lines have been secured for the Minneapolis Exposition, which is to be held this year from September 6 to October 7.

Under the excellent management of W. M. Brackett, last year's Exposition was a great success. Mr. Brackett is again at the helm, and has the entire business community of Minneapolis behind him.

We are informed that the exhibits at this year's Exposition will surpass those at any of the proceeding seven displays at the "Flour City."

I have one or two choice young Jersey cows for sale. Who wants them? Also will sell one or two Jersey heifers should anybody desire to purchase. They are all fine animals extra care having been taken in their breeding and are worth very much more money than they will bring at this time. Will sell only for cash or delivery. Drunken Mothers.

"Whatever you do," said Granny Sara to young Mrs. Martin as she sat with her first baby on her knee, "don't take to drinking ale or porter or any strong drink on the notion that it is going to do you good. If there is one thing more than another which makes a mother cruel, wicked, unnatural, it is drunkenness, and many are the mothers who become drunken from these small beginnings, ordered by the doctor."

"A great many women take such things," said Mrs. Martin.

"Yes, and a great many perish by it, body and soul. I have a niece who is one of the matrons in a woman's prison. She tells me that 90 in 100 of the prisoners get there because of strong drink, and of these 90 in 100 who drink 60 have begun by taking liquor as a medicine or a tonic."

"Well, I wouldn't wish to be a drunken mother," said Mrs. Martin, kissing her baby.

"Truly you might say that if you know how bitterly cruel drunken mothers are. Once I was hired to help in a soup kitchen. A big, red faced woman, mother of four starving children, came for bread and soup and regularly carried both to sell for liquor at the dramshop, leaving her poor babes crying with hunger. I found it out and daily took the soup and bread to feed the children myself. She was so enraged at that that she began to maltreat the poor wretched little ones and threatened to kill me. To save the limbs and lives of the children I had to call in police aid, and the woman was put in prison, and the children were sent to an asylum."—National Temperance Advocate.

How to Relieve Choking.

HOW TO CHOOSE A SERVANT.

Girls Looking For Places Should Also Profit by It.

When a young woman applies whose hair is untidy, who has a draggled feather in her hat, whose dress shows stains and lack of buttons, reject her. She will be careless and slovenly.

When she comes arrayed in cheap finery, holding one dirty kid glove, the mate of which she wears, her ungloved hand adorned with rings, a flimsy bit of lace serving the place of a decent hat, reject her. That young woman is lazy and impudent.

When she smiles in a superior way and assures you that she can do everything, dismiss her at once. She will do nothing well.

When she tells you she has "lived in the best of places" and has "seven years' reference" from Mrs. Easy, but that the lady lives in the country now; she doesn't know exactly where, she has been dismissed for dishonesty. Reject her.

When she wants a latchkey, asks for "any evening you are not going out," says she has "always been used to company, of course," send her away. She will have noisy company six nights in the week, will stay out all night at many a "ball," and her moral character will probably disturb your tender conscience.

When she is elderly and calls you "dear," speaks patronizingly and assures you you won't be bothered with anything, when she comes dismiss her. She will not accept a suggestion from you, while, if you venture to hint that the meat was underdone, she will give immediate notice.

When she makes a parade of being "willing to learn," have nothing to do with her. You will find she needs to learn everything. I have known such to be unable to bake potatoes.

Reject the girl who asks questions. A question or two concerning her work or wages is of course perfectly proper. But when she asks three questions for one of yours, when she seeks to know your family and private affairs, get rid of her at once. That young woman does not know her place.

But if a young woman should apply who is dressed modestly and neatly, who speaks quietly and respectfully, who waits until you invite her to be seated, who gives some accessible address when you ask for reference, who claims to be able to do her work well, but admits that she may not know everything, who leaves her "day out" and other privileges to your convenience, who answers all questions, but asks few or none, take her though she asks high wages. She will give you the peace of mind you have longed for.

How to Empty Feathers From One Tick to Another.

Open a seam at one corner in each tick, making the openings of equal length. Then sew the openings strongly together so the two beds or pillows will be joined. It is then easy to shake the feathers from the old tick into the new, after which they are ripped apart and the seams closed properly.

How to Get Rid of Flies.

"No, thank you, my dear, I do not want any fly papers or fly traps about my house. I learned a great many years ago that the more things we have to call flies the more will come. In the neighborhood where flies were simply a nuisance I lived almost unmolested by them because I never permitted a particle of stale food to accumulate about the premises. Flies, like a good many other things, will never stay where they are in danger of starvation, and I never kept anything about the place to feed them with, not even fly paper. Everything that could not be burned was carried as far from the house as possible and buried. All garbage is valuable as a fertilizer, and I utilize it as such. It is my opinion that every form of fly paper, fly poison and trap which is baited with any substance is just so much inducement for them to stay around the house. They think—if flies can think at all—that they are going to get something to eat and therefore hang around. The best fly preventive is starvation."

The Water Trick.

The trick I will explain calls for two glasses, one of which must have water in it. Put the one containing the water at your left hand and cover it with a piece of cardboard. Beside it, at your right hand, is an empty glass just like the first one in shape and size. You now invite some person on your side of the table to make the water glass appear on the right and the empty one on the left without touching or moving either glass or allowing any one else to do so. After they have given up this problem you hold your hands near the glasses to show that the water is on the left, and by simply passing around the table and facing the glasses from that side you have the water on your right. This is simple and easy, but it will cause a laugh. Big bets have been won and lost on more trivial tricks than this little one.

In the Dollroom.

I'm going out a little while,
And you must promise, Dolly,
To sit as quiet as a mouse,
And not go romping o'er the house
With pussy cat and Polly.

For pussy's claws are very sharp,
And they are sure to scratch you,
Or if you get in Polly's reach
She'll give an awful, awful screech,
And with her beak she'll catch you.

And don't go mussing up your things
Or get your dress in creases;
Don't put your hands up to your hat;
Your bangs are loose—remember that—
And they may come to pieces.

Don't pull the buttons off your shoes
Or laugh when Polly chatters;
You mustn't mind her talk a bit,
But only shut your eyes and sit
And think of other matters.

And promise, Dolly, not to pout,
It makes you look so simple,
For every time you frown, you know,
It makes the horrid wrinkles grow
And spoils your pretty dimple.

You'd better go to sleep, for then
I'll have no cause to scold you.
By by, my dear—now try and see
How good you really can be—
Remember what I told you.

The River—A Return Song.

O river! O river!
As you go to the sea
Forever and aye,
So flowing and free,

You bow to men's burdens,
You grind in their mills,
Yet, free, fresh and savage,
You flow as God wills.

O river! O river!
Going down to the sea,
Oh, fill me, oh, fill me,
That I, too, may flow free.

Though I bow to the burden,
Though I grind in the mill,
May I go to the ocean
Untamed as God still!

Princess and Little Boy.

A fellow guest at the Savoy with the Princess Eulalie tells of the satisfactory achievement of the full measure of one small boy's ambition. The little fellow greatly admired the Spanish woman, but always at a distance until one day he took his place at the end of the corridor leading from her rooms with the avowed intention of at least waving his hands as she passed. When his patience was finally rewarded by her approach, the child's speaking face at once arrested the infanta's attention.

Stopping, she said, reaching out to her delighted admirer: "What a dear little boy! I must have a kiss!" and she got it at once, with a hug thrown in, an enthusiasm which so pleased the royal woman that she asked the name and residence of the young hero. Finding he was living in the hotel, at her next leisure she sent an invitation to his parents to come with him to her apartments, where they were received with great cordiality and the small boy petted by the child loving princess to his heart's content.—New York Times.

Attention

In time to any irregularity of the Stomach, Liver, or Bowels may prevent serious consequences. Indigestion, headache, nausea, biliousness, and vertigo indicate certain functional derangements, the best remedy for which is Ayer's Pills. Purely vegetable, sugar-coated, easy to take and quick to assimilate, this is the ideal family medicine—the most popular, safe, and useful aperient in pharmacy. Mrs. M. A. BROCKWELL, Harris, Tenn., says:

"Ayer's Cathartic Pills cured me of sick headache and my husband of neuralgia. We think there is and have induced many to use it."

"Thirty-five years ago this Spring, I was run down by hard work and a succession of colds, which made me so feeble that it was an effort for me to walk. I consulted the doctors, but kept sinking lower until I had given up all hope of ever being better. Happening to be in a store, one day, where medicines were sold, the proprietor noticed my weak and sickly appearance, and after a few questions as to my health, recommended me to try Ayer's Pills. I had little faith in these or any other medicine, but concluded, at last, to take his advice and try a box. Before I had used them all, I was very much better, and two boxes cured me. I am now 80 years old; but I believe that if it had not been for Ayer's Pills, I should have been in my grave long ago. I buy 6 boxes every year, which make 210 boxes up to this time, and I would no more be without them than without bread."—H. H. Ingraham, Rockland, Me.

GREAT IS EVOLUTION

Interesting, Too, When Clothing Is Considered.

FROM GRASS TO THE FINEST SILK.

The Former Can Be Seen in Dahomey Village and the Latter in Machinery Hall—How the Need of Clothes Has Developed—Rent, Taxes and Wages Make Living High.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 8.—[Special.]—Evolution is the keyword of today's philosophy and here is the place to study it. Here we see how one invention which filled a long-felt want straightway created two more wants and set many more inventors to work. Thus the pressure of newly created wants is ever forcing man along, and yet at any point in his progress there is a tendency to slip and recede. And how easily they do slip. When I was in Arizona I often remarked that while it took forty years to civilize an Indian, a well disposed white man could go wild in six months. Since my five weeks here I beg leave to add that while, according to Darwin, it took 20,000 generations for the monkey to make a man of himself, a man can make a monkey of himself in twenty minutes on three fingers of Chicago whisky. It is so much easier to slide than climb.

In the Live Stock pavillion yesterday I heard a very animated discussion between some Illinois grangers on the question, "Do hogs pay?" In this vicinity they don't. It is the rest of us who pay the hogs and if things get much higher I shan't be able to stay. Down town they have been having what the Oregon Indians call a "hyas time" over the sufferings of the unemployed, and Henry George, Dr. McGlynn, Bishop Fallows, and many other eminent men and several talented women have told the sufferers why they suffer. Now if these landlords and other builders have paid for two years past any such wages as they swear to, then with any sort of economy no laborer ought to suffer in three or four months of idleness. I had got exasperated over various petty swindles and determined to interview one landlord and get my revenge by reporting him with unscrupulous accuracy. So I fired at him these conundrums:

"Why is the cost of living so much higher in Chicago than in New York, Cincinnati, St. Louis or Indianapolis? Why is the price of bread as high as it was in 1864 when flour is only one-third as high? Why does the farmer have to sell his stuff for one-half what he did a few years ago and then pay a third more for what he eats of it when he comes to the city, and why does this keep on getting more so? And finally, why is it that with all these gains you fellows are all hard run and about every third one of you in the sheriff's hands?" pointing as I spoke to a pile of furniture on the sidewalk a square away, the last seizure of the ever-active bailiffs.

"It's as simple as fallin' off a log," replied mine host, who is an Indiana man. "It costs as much to get out a loaf of bread as it did in 1864 and it costs a good deal more to run a hotel. It all goes in rent, taxes and wages. I pay as much rent for this ramshackle concern of wood and plaster as they used to pay on Hunt's hotel in Cincinnati. And then the insurance—O, Jerusalem! They never can get it high enough to suit 'em. But you see yourself that if fire ever starts about here the whole block goes. The other day—you saw it in the papers—a little girl started a fire in the backyard and burnt up twenty-five acres of buildings in South Chicago. Five dollars a week is the very least you can get the poorest kind of a girl for and what they pay for good ones I don't know, for I can't get any. The bakers make next to nothing on bread for the same reasons. All last year and this spring common labor was 40 cents an hour—paid it right on this street for shovelin' dirt. Carpenters got twice that and so on. Now the buildings are finished and right away there is sufferin'. Well, we'd be the next ones to suffer if we didn't charge you fellows to correspond."

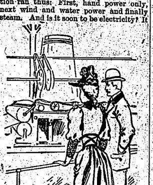
Now here's a state of affairs. Talented women at the lake front meetings tell how the poor girls are driven to evil by want, and 50,000 families complain that they cannot get domestic help at any price. Wages are so high that landlords can't make any money and laborers are in such straits that we have already had two riots. The farmers complain of falling prices for their stuff and in the city it is so high that in lieu of satisfying our appetites we have to tighten our belts as we did in the army. Surely somebody is lying. Or I am a bad economist? At any rate the problem is too much for me. I feel it—and right where I live—but the philosophy of it eludes me.

After these preliminary remarks, the application of which I trust the reader to find, let us go to the Machinery building and instead of wearisome walks and talks let us trace the evolution of just one article through all the ages of man. Let us take clothing because it is so beautifully illustrated and the machinery is comparatively simple. The looms run like lightning and turn out fabrics at a surprising speed; still a common man can see how they run, even if he has no wheels in his head. But to trace a suit of clothes from the very start we must go over and begin in the Anthropological department. There it is clearly shown that the first clothes were made of leaves, grass, bark and roots or rushes. Of course primeval man lived in quadrumanous innocence as the animals do, but with the growth of domestic order came a dawning sense of shame as to the sources of life and so a grass or other vegetable suit about the size of your two hands was invented for modesty's sake.

As refinement increased the suit gradually extended towards the head and the feet, even in hot countries and in summer, while in cold countries the skins of animals were used as soon as man learned how to get them. All this is beautifully illustrated in carvings, pictures and otherwise in the Anthropological exhibit and down in the plaisance one can still see the Dahomey dude in his cool and airy summer suit of grass. That clothing began in [illegible] very coarse strands and knotted them together as fancy or necessity dictated. Of course these strands were twisted finer and finer as man progressed and were put together by the system of over-and-under replication, and so spinning and weaving came into existence. And here are shown some of those extremely primitive looms, such as are still used by the hill people of India, the Navajo women and others—nothing in such a loom apparently but a beam fastened in the branches of a low tree, another beam staked fast to the ground and to each a loose beam attached at the ends with cords, the strands of wool running over these last. How very rude and primitive they look. Yet on such a loom I have seen a Navajo woman weave with wonderful skill, producing red and yellow flowers with colored yarns, making a blanket of such firm texture that water could be carried in it.

Much more rapid was the advance in making linen, for nations of finer taste took it up and the advance in silk was probably more rapid still as taste stimulated invention. Hence the "Babylonish garment" and all the wonderful stuffs of Tyre and India. But silk was not produced in Europe till some 500 years after Christ, when two missionaries smuggled the silkworm eggs out of China in the hollow of a bamboo cane. And now let us go into the Machinery building and see what marvels the Aryan has wrought with the stolen art of Serica and his own flax, wool and cotton. First in array are the exhibits of the Lowell Machine shops, the Knowles Loom works and the Cromptons. The feathery cotton and the snowy wool take the form and color of textile fabrics before our eyes and in the deft manipulation by the women in charge we see proof of the statement that with these automatic looms one woman can produce plain clothing enough for 600 people.

It is but little that the woman has to do, for the loom itself seems gifted with intelligence to give notice if anything goes wrong, even of so small a matter as the breaking of a thread. The line of evolution ran thus: First, hand power only, next wind and water power and finally steam. And is it soon to be electricity? It is to be hoped, for there are still grave disadvantages in using steam and when electricity can be transmitted to great distances from the waterfalls which generate it there will no longer be any economy in concentrating the textile manufacturer in a few cities. Each village can then have the weaving done for its own population at minimum cost. The power for this building is supplied from an annex running along the whole south side of the building. In it are forty-three engines with an aggregate of 20,000 horse power, which also operates 127 dynamos and thus produce the electric light and power for all the other buildings.



PAPER-MAKING MACHINE.

It is on the silk looms, however, that the finest work is done; but I shall refrain from explaining them for reasons into which I trust the reader will not too curiously inquire. Of Americans the Phœnix Manufacturing company, of Philadelphia, has looms in full operation, and J. J. Mannion, of Pittsburg, and John Best & Co., of Patterson, N. J., run sets of Jacquard looms. On these are woven silk handkerchiefs of almost gossamer delicacy, with figures showing pictures of the World's fair buildings and portraits of prominent men. These are sold on the spot by a so-called "concession," but all manufacturers who have not secured that must remove their products every night. Under the general subject of clothing would come the long array of sewing machines, cloth cutting and knitting machines and machines for making thread, buttons, hooks and eyes, etc., but it is not necessary to describe such common things. It is a far cry from the Navajo woman toiling at her rude loom and the Navajo girl twisting wool on the rude hand-spindle as she watches her sheep, to the automatic loom and spinning jenny, but it is all illustrated here and far more effectively than could be done by a volume of such writing as this.

Moving eastward from the looms one soon enters an area where he is almost deafened by the din—the tremendous car moving on the beams overhead, the great Hoe press, only turning out 24,000 printed copies per hour of The Columbian during two hours of each day though capable of doing much more, the great paper-making machine which I study long but cannot comprehend, and the long, long lines of ponderous machines for cutting, boring, notching, trimming or otherwise fashioning iron, steel, wood and stone. In it all we see a prophecy that by and by only the rude and uncultured nations will do hard work. Our sort of folks will just stand around and watch the machines do it and see that they do not rebel.

Blessed slaves! With no bodies to kick and no souls to be damned, they yield us the equivalent of 80,000,000 of man-power. Taking his stand upon the shore of infinite possibility the inventor has in fifty years evoked from the boundless ocean of natural dynamics, and presented to us, the labor of 80,000,000 slaves. If the Americans of 1840 had been told that by this time the supernal powers would have sent to the United States 80,000,000 of the most intelligent and stalwart beings from the most highly developed planet (for it amounts to that) and that all their labor should be ours without need of lash or fear of insurrection, with what gladness would they have cried: "Vanish want! Away forever with discontent and talk no more of slavery in the south or misery in the cities! For how can there be want or discontent when an intelligent and industrious people have such slaves in number four times their own working force?" [illegible]

Why Grow Old.

I find that if old people are put on a good meat diet in the way of strong soup, beef tea and animal food, and only just sufficient farinaceous food and fats and sugar to maintain the heat of the body, they increase wonderfully in energy and, as they often express it, feel 20 years younger. This is only natural; it is a food of energy—the food that builds up muscle, nerve and constitutional stamina.

The requirements of the system in old age as a rule are not great, and more harm is done by taking too much food than by taking too little. I have known people considerably over 70 to derive the greatest benefit from a thorough change in diet. It seems to rejuvenate them. Of course in old age care should be taken that the body is not subjected to rapid changes of temperature. When the nervous power is decreasing as the result of age and the system is losing its power of combating cold and strain upon its energy, a stimulating diet invigorates and is conducive to maintaining constitutional stamina better than any other.

Any natural death but from old age and general decay is an accidental death—that is, it is due to causes which might, and even perhaps could, have been entirely avoided and remedied in earlier years.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Most Young Men Are Afraid of Babies.

"The average young man," said a traveler, "has no great fondness for young children. I don't know how many times I have heard a mother who was carrying a little child, and who had halted in the aisle of a railroad car say, referring to the vacant seat and addressing the young man by the window, 'Is this seat taken?' And I don't know how many times I have seen the young man's face lengthen as he answered politely, 'No.' The mother takes the seat and the young man begins to grow restless. He reads the paper still, but he keeps his eye on the baby, and you may be sure the baby has its eye on him—a beaming, good natured eye it is, too—and the young man finds it not the easiest thing in the world to appear wholly unconstrained with attention thus drawn to him, but he makes a bluff at it and does pretty well until the infant moistens one chubby fist in its mouth and reaches out to make a print of it on the lapel of the young man's coat. Then the young man rises. 'Madam,' he says, 'let me give you this seat,' and he steps out into the aisle. And he doesn't look for another seat in that car. He makes a bee line for the smoker."—New York Sun.

The Food We Eat.

Hardly a day passes that we do not receive some shock, that we are not asked to give up some favorite dish around which clusters a host of tender early memories, and after eating of which we have for 20 years on end felt ourselves grow fat and childlike and undyspeptic. But the modern hygiene says it must go, and if we retain it on our list we do it in an anxious and guilty mood sure of itself to beget internal trouble.

Seemingly simple things like dry toast, oatmeal and apples we have heard forbidden of late as hard to take care of, and bananas, or, for example, the delicious, but as we supposed deadly, fried bacon cried up as food for babes and sucklings. This is puzzling—it goes against personal experience, it upsets all our dietary plans and pleasures, and it awakens the shrewd suspicion that mere fashion is at the bottom of the change.—Hartford Courant.

Cold Air In Place of Ice.

I predict that 10 years from now the familiar ice wagon will be a novelty upon the streets of a city, so general will have been the adoption of artificial refrigeration. For a long time brewers, pork packers and storage men have been independent of the ice crop, and the introduction of the cold air pipe lines down town has supplanted the use of ice in hotels, restaurants and barrooms except wherein it is desired to make a display of the crystal commodity. In time the distribution of cold air will be as general in cities as is gas or water, and the system will be perfected whereby the refrigerating gas necessary for attachment to a family refrigerator will be delivered in a tank just like carbonated water is to the soda fountains, once a month or as required.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Dueling In France.

Until within a few years dueling in France was so common that 5,000 such encounters were fought every year. The vast majority of these occurred in the army, but in 1890 M. de Freycinet, the minister of war, discouraged the practice and rendered it optional under circumstances in which it had been considered imperative. Among civilians, however, the game goes merrily on, being chiefly sustained by angry politicians or excited journalists. It was calculated in 1886 that since 1870 847 duels had been fought in France outside the army. In only nine instances were any of the combatants disabled, while 98 per cent of those engaged left the field unscathed.—London Tit-Bits.

A Sharp Passage.

The English marriage service was the subject of conversation. Lowe said in his dashing way that it was full of nonsense. "Why," he exclaimed, turning to his wife, "it made me say 'with all my worldly goods I thee endow,' when I had no worldly goods wherewith to endow you."

"Ah, Robert," she replied, "but there were your brains!"

"Well," he said, "all the world knows that I did not endow you with them."—"Life and Letters of Viscount Sherbrooke."

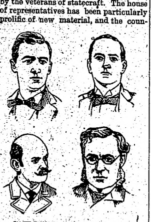
THE ART OF ORATORY

EVIDENCE THAT IT IS NOT DECLINING IN CONGRESS.

The Silver Debate Furnished a Theme For Some Notable Maiden Speeches In the House of Representatives—New Members Who Distinguished Themselves.

We are sometimes disposed to denounce the degeneracy of the times and to lament among other things the decline of forensic eloquence in American public life. This falling off has been so persistently proclaimed by pessimists and philosophers generally that many of us have come to accept the proposition without question. Fortunately for those hopeful citizens who are inclined to take issue with the croakers, recent events at Washington have furnished evidence that oratory is not a lost art.

Whatever else the silver debate may have accomplished, it has opened our eyes to the fact that the country still has a plenty of bright, powerful and eloquent public speakers, and that when occasion offers new men can be found who are perfectly qualified to fill with honor to themselves and their country the high places which have been so long occupied by the veterans of statecraft. The house of representatives has been particularly prolific of new material, and the country has been repeatedly surprised by "maiden" speeches that bore all the marks of mature and experienced statesmanship adorned with the arts of eloquence and rhetoric.



LAFE PENCE. J. C. SIBLEY.
J. C. HENDRIX. DR. EVERETT.

One of the first of the new men to step in an hour from local to national fame was Lafe Pence, the young representative from the First district of Colorado. He opened the silver debate for the Populists and made a speech that attracted and held the close attention of the house. Mr. Pence is in his thirty-sixth year and is a native of Columbus, Ind. He was graduated from the Hanover (Ind.) college in 1877, and the next year was admitted to the bar. He went to Kansas in 1879 and removed from there to Colorado in 1881. He was elected to the legislature in 1884, and in 1887 was appointed county attorney for Arapahoe county.

From Colorado congress expects free coinage logic, but when millionaire Congressman Sibley of Pennsylvania came out for silver in his maiden speech it created something of a sensation. Mr. Sibley was born in Friendship, Allegany county, N. Y., Feb. 18, 1850, and received a common school and seminary education. He now resides at Franklin, Venango county, Pa., and is extensively engaged in farming and stock raising. He is also a manufacturer of lubricating oils and is interested in various other manufacturing and business enterprises. Mr. Sibley has quite a reputation as a horseman and keeps a fine stable in Washington. He has advocated paying congressmen a salary of $10,000 a year, and at the same time donated his two years' salary to the Grangers and Knights of Labor in his district.

One of the most effective speeches in favor of the repeal of the Sherman law was made by Joseph C. Hendrix of Brooklyn and it was his first effort in the house. Mr. Hendrix has an earnest delivery, and his views were listened to with marked respect. He was born at Fayette, Mo., 40 years ago and is a graduate of Cornell university. He went to New York in 1878 and for 10 years served on the reportorial staff of The Sun. In 1882 he was appointed a member of the Brooklyn board of education and the following year was the Democratic candidate for mayor of that city, but was defeated by Seth Low. President Cleveland appointed him postmaster of Brooklyn in 1886, and since retiring from that office he has been president of a trust company.

Probably the most polished of all the maiden speeches in the Fifty-third congress was that delivered by Dr. William Everett, who, although a new member, is an experienced and accomplished orator, as the son of Edward Everett should be. He comes to Washington from the Seventh Massachusetts district, so long represented by Henry Cabot Lodge, and brings a distinguished reputation for scholarship and eloquence. Nothing showed that he was making his maiden speech. His voice was clear; his attitude was graceful; his diction was perfect; his argument was keen and analytical.

Dr. Everett is a bachelor, and naturally enough is reported to be rather erratic in his personal predilections and habits. He was born in Watertown, Mass., Oct. 10, 1839, and was educated at Harvard university and Cambridge, England. He was admitted to the bar in 1866 and was licensed to preach in [illegible]

What Have You Done Today?

I saw a farmer when the day was done;
The setting sun had sought its crimson bed,
And the mild stars came forward one by one;
I saw the sturdy farmer, and I said:
"What have you done today?
O farmer, say?"
"Oh, I've sown the wheat in yonder field
And pruned my orchard to increase the yield
And turned the furrow for a patch of corn—
This have I done since early morn."

I saw a blacksmith in his smithy door,
When the day had vanished and the west grew red,
And all the weary noise and strife were o'er;
I saw the kindly blacksmith, and I said:
"What have you done today?
O blacksmith, say?"
"Oh, I have made two plowshares all complete
And nailed the shoes on many a horse's feet,
And, oh, my friend, I cannot tell you half."
The man of muscle responded, with a laugh.

I saw a miller when the day was gone,
And all the sunlight from the hills had fled,
And tender shadows had crept across the lawn;
I saw the dusty miller, and I said:
"What have you done today?
O miller gray?"
"Oh, I have watched my mill from morn till night;
Did you ever see flour so snowy and white?
And many are the mouths today I've fed."
The merry miller laughed as this he said.

I saw another when the night drew nigh,
And turned each daily toiler from his task;
When gold and crimson cloudlets decked the sky;
A drink seller—and of him I asked:
"What have you done today?
Drink seller, say?"
But the drink seller turned with drooping head,
And not a single word in answer said.
What had he done? His work, he knew full well,
Was plunging souls in deepest hell!

Temperance Education For Children.

The following are some of the points agreed upon by scholars as the standard for the temperance textbooks to be introduced in the public schools of New York under the laws passed through the efforts of Mrs. Mary L. Hunt. If this new education is to give to the world a coming generation of intelligent total abstainers, as we expect, its manuals of instruction must conform to the following specifications:

They must teach with no uncertain sound the proven findings of science, viz:

That alcohol is a dangerous and seductive poison.

That beer, wine and cider contain this same alcohol, thus making them dangerous drinks, to be avoided, and that they are the product of a fermentation that changes a food to a poison.

That it is the nature of a little of any liquor containing alcohol to create an appetite for more, which is so apt to become uncontrollable that the strongest warning should be urged against taking that little and thus forming the appetite.

They must teach also the effect of these upon "the human system"—that is, upon the whole being—mental, moral and physical. The appalling effects of drinking habits upon the citizenship of the nation, the degradation and crime resulting, demand that instruction here should give clear and emphatic utterance to the solemn warnings of science on this subject.

No Money For Strawberries.

Two men stopped at a fruit dealer's the other day. Said one, "What is the price of strawberries?"

"Twenty cents a basket."

"Twenty cents a basket! You'll have to sell them to rich folks. I can't afford them. The old woman will have to do without strawberries this time. Come along, Jerry, let's go and take a drink!"

They started off for the barroom, and if they spent any less than the price of two boxes of berries before they went home it was a wonder. A drinker and a "good fellow" can afford to spend money in treating men who don't care a rap about him when he "can't afford" to spend half the same amount in charity or church dues or in buying something for the wife and children who have the first claim upon him and all that he owns.—Sacred Heart Review.

Teach Children Self Control.

The liquor problem can be effectively and permanently solved by only one means—that of education. The child must early learn self control and self restraint, that his appetites be held under check and properly guided. If he be properly taught, his manhood will be self controlled and self restrained. He may not be a total abstainer, but he will be temperate in all things.—Jewish Messenger.

Rather Sour For a Little Girl.

Midget was such a very busy little person that she could never see anything lying on the table in her reach without handling and sometimes tasting it. One day her mother had left an open package of lump alum on the table, and no sooner did she turn her back when Midget put a large lump in her mouth. When her mother turned around, the little girl said, with a very wry face, "That is awful sour ice, mamma!"

THE STORY OF A DOG

WHY A SOLITARY WAYSIDE GRAVE IS MARKED "PHANTOM."

A Lost Baby In the Wilds of Western New Mexico Was Traced by the Faithful Canine—He Killed the Abductor and Led the Father to a Coyote's Den.

The tourist who visits the region of Lower Plaza, N. M., will see, among other things, as he drives along the trail from the railroad a grave with a thick headboard on which is painted the one word, "Phantom."

"It's only a dog's grave," the guide will explain, "but I reckon he'd more sense than some men."

Phantom was the property of Bernard Wisner, a cowboy living near the Datil mountains some years ago, but he was buried near the home of Daniel Chapman, whose wife was the sister of Wisner. Mrs. Chapman, when her brother first got the dog, had a hearty dislike for it. It was a big mongrel, with hound blood predominating, and, like all mongrel hounds, it had an enormous appetite that was never so well satisfied as with food stolen from somebody's kitchen.

For many offenses of this kind Mrs. Chapman had good reason to complain, and she would have taken the winchester and shot the hateful brute on more than one occasion but for two reasons. It was a very good hunting dog, and it would now and then play with the baby when she wanted to do housework—come over from her brother's house a mile away as if for the express purpose of having a romp with the little tot of 3.

However, the dog's manner kept growing worse, and one day when she saw it come sneaking around the corral she started for the gun, but stopped half way because she was reminded by the sight of the dog that the little one had not been about the house for an hour or two, perhaps more, so far as she could remember. So she ran out of the house quickly without the gun and called aloud:

"Baby! Baby!"

Then she listened and grew faint, for she heard no reply, and fainter still when she remembered that her husband had told her of seeing a panther's tracks down in the hollow near by. To think of this was to send her flying toward the hollow, but no baby or trace of it was to be found, although she looked behind every one of the scattered pines and cedars growing there. Then she came running back to the house, ringing her hands and calling "Baby" distractedly. She found the dog standing right beside the door, but she would not have noticed him, she was so near wild about the baby, only for the fact that he stood looking intently at her instead of taking to his heels with his tail between his legs, as he always done when she came toward him.

Even as it was she paid little attention to the dog, but ran hither and yon about the house and corral and horse shed, crying and calling the child, until at last she saw the dog come square before her, and after a grave look into her face start running around the house with his nose to the ground. She remembered afterward that he circled around the house two or three times and then disappeared, but by that time her fears had so overcome her that she fell headlong on the floor in a faint, and there she lay nobody knows how long.

When she came to her senses, the dog was licking her face, and at once began to caper about and bark in extraordinary fashion when she opened her eyes and sat up. Then he ran out the door and stopped and looked back, and directly came back and grabbed the skirt of her dress, which he pulled so hard that he tore it. Then she picked up a club and drove the dog out the house, and when her burst of anger was over fainted again at the thought of the lost baby. When she revived this time, she was too weak to get up, but she saw that the dog was still acting in the same unusual fashion she had noticed before. A little later the sound of horse's hoofs gladdened her ears, and with a last effort she got up, staggered out the door, saw her husband as he jumped from his horse, and, gasping out the words that "Baby is lost," fainted for the third time.

Chapman carried the woman to the bed, took one look around the room in order to assure himself that he had rightly understood what she had said, and then grabbing the winchester said to the dog:

"Hi, Phantom! where's Baby?"

"Wow!" replied the dog, and started away on a lope that kept Dan humping himself to equal. The trail zigzagged about for nearly half a mile, then crossed a broken lava bed and ran off down a draw to the creek valley. Had any other dog than Phantom been on the trail Dan would have not believed the child could have gone that way, but he banked on Phantom and kept trotting along until at last a thicket was reached just two miles and a half from home. Into the thicket the dog plunged by what was really a sort of tunnel through the brush, and Chapman had to get down on his hands and knees to follow. Two rods in he came to an opening, and there on the dry sod lay the baby fast asleep. It was apparently in the den of some wild animal.

As Dan picked up the child the growl of the dog made him look around. Phantom was standing over the dead body of a recently killed coyote.

Phantom died of old age last spring, and was buried, with many tears near the public highway, where all who pass can see it. It was only a dog that was buried there, but, then, as the cowboys say, "I reckon he'd more sense than some men."—Cor. New York Sun.

Very Hard Mental Exercise.

It has fortunately been ordained that good lying is about the severest mental exercise known to an indolent world, and when conscience fails to keep mankind truthful, laziness and prudence combine to take up the work.—Kate Field's Washington.

They Only Knew Agassiz.

In 1858 a party consisting of Lowell, Emerson, Agassiz, Judge Hoar, W. J. Stillman and several others spent a few weeks of the summer in the Adirondacks.

The journey of the company gave rise to an incident which has often been incorrectly told, and which, as a curious comment upon human fame, deserves to be told again. The coming of the party was of course made known along the track it would follow, and at Keeseville, where the common roads then ended, the town was agog to see the "philosophers," as they were at once collectively called. But neither Emerson nor Lowell was known, Agassiz being the only celebrity to that world, owing to his having recently refused the offer by the emperor of France of the keepership of the Jardin des Plantes at Paris and a senatorship with a large salary, he preferring to devote himself to science and America.

The selectmen of the town waited on the visitors early in the morning after their arrival to pay their respects, they said, but really to see a man who had no regard for money and distinction. They were received formally, the spokesman bringing a copy of a periodical which contained a portrait of Agassiz, which he produced and carefully compared with the lineaments of the professor until he had satisfied himself of the authenticity of the individual, when he addressed his followers with, "Yes, it's him!" And they then proceeded to shake hands with him, the rest of the party being ignored.—W. J. Stillman in Century.

How Did the Dollar Mark Originate?

Below I give five theories of the origin of the dollar mark ($), they being selected from about 20 seemingly plausible solutions:

That it is a combination of the "U. S.," the initials of United States.

That it is a modification of the figure 8, the dollar being formerly called a "piece of eight."

That it is derived from a representation of the Pillars of Hercules, consisting of two needlelike towers or pillars connected with a scroll. The old Spanish coins marked with the pillar device were frequently referred to as "pillar dollars."

That it is a combination of "H. S.," the ancient Roman mark of money unit.

That it is a combination of P. and S. from peso duro, signifying "hard dollar." In Spanish accounts peso is contracted by writing the S. over the P. and placing it over the sum.

According to one writer the symbol of the dollar is a monogram of the letters "V," "S" and "J," the dollar being originally a "thaler" coined in the valley of Sant Joachim, Bohemia, and known as "Joachim thaler," and the monogram the initials of the words, "Valley Sant Joachim."—St. Louis Republic.

Art Instruction.

An artist had sold a picture for an exorbitant price and the purchaser sued to recover. The attorney for the purchaser was making the artist uncomfortable by his questions.

"Now, sir," he said in that pleasant, ingratiating manner of lawyers with a witness, "do you think anybody could see beauty in that picture?"

"Some persons certainly could," replied the artist.

"You think the initiated in technical matters might have no difficulty in understanding your work?"

"I am sure they would not."

"Do you think you could make me see any beauty in that picture?" this most superciliously.

"Probably not now, sir"—and the artist was most humble—"but once I could have done so easily."

"Now, sir, how is that? I don't understand you. Explain, if you please."

"That's quite easy, sir. I could have done it simply by employing you as my counsel in this case."—Detroit Free Press.

Courtesy Among the Swedes.

The Swedes are a quiet, taciturn people. There is no jostling even among the lowest classes. When a train leaves a platform or a steamboat a pier, the lookers on lift their hats to the departing passengers and bow to them, a compliment which is returned by the passengers. You are expected to lift your hat to the shabbiest person you meet in the street, and to enter a shop, office or bank with the hat on is considered a bad breach of good manners. In retiring from a restaurant you are expected to bow to the occupants. Bowing and hat lifting is so common that the people seem to move around more slowly than elsewhere, in order to observe the courtesy.—F. H. Stauffer in Kate Field's Washington.

Appreciative.

A housekeeper who has been employing a colored washerwoman for several months was surprised to see her appear last week in a hat trimmed heavily with crape.

"Why, Julia," she asked, "is any of your family dead?"

"No, no," was the reply, "but one of my best customers gave me this hat, and I didn't want her to think I don't preciate nothin."—New York Times.

DISCIPLINE AND CHARACTER.

A Tribute to the Austere Training Which Produced a Man Like Tryon.

To our minds the charm of Admiral Tryon's bearing in the hour of his fate is the perfection of the system which for centuries has bred men capable of his conduct and his death. They have not had his opportunity of being visible, not his strangely scenic surroundings, not perhaps the temperament which could have inspired them to that farewell in the moment of disappearance, but there have been hundreds of men in the navy, and even in the merchant service, who would have died as bravely as he did.

It is the tradition of both services—not, we think, the order—that the highest in rank on a ship in peril must be the last to quit the vessel; that, as occurred a few years ago, even a stowaway, who is almost a criminal in sailors' eyes, must take precedence of the captain in securing safety. The origin of the rule is, we fancy, policy—that the state or the owner be protected by the captain's authority to the last—but it has become an etiquette and a pride, and in the records of hundreds of wrecks you will find few in which it was ever broken. "The captain was the last to leave the ship" is the end of almost every telegram of marine disaster.

In other words, discipline has continued for centuries under the pressure of the same necessities, and the same ideas, has extinguished in a class by no means devoid either of faults or vices, a most natural and tempting form of selfishness has induced a whole series of men, many of them hardly educated, to face a slow and painful form of death rather than fail in the performance of a professional duty. That is a wonderful result of training, and it is one which makes those who see it clearly doubt whether the modern world is altogether in the right path.

The old ideal for the formation of character was discipline, hardship, pressure, alike from the law and from teachers and from opinion, and it certainly produced many of the virtues, especially that one of obedience, which the world everywhere but on shipboard—where there are few unrealities and men carry their lives in their hands—has taken to despising. The modern idea is that discipline even for children is an oppressive thing; that it turns men into machines, and it quenches individuality—that it is, in short, unpleasant, whereas pleasantness is the end of life.

We see the result of the change in the disappearance of many forms of oppression, and a lighter atmosphere for men to move in, and we see it also in the slow disappearance of many noble elements in character. The old system, working with good material, produces as its perfect result Admiral Tryon. The new, working also on the right material, produces the British agitator.

Admiral Tryon was no doubt a brave man and gentleman without help from the service or its traditions, but the service had annealed his character into what it was, something for a nation to be proud of, which would hardly have been exhibited or have existed amid the indiscipline and softness of civil life. When one hears of such a man so meeting such an end, it is difficult not to doubt whether liberty as now interpreted is such a perfectly good thing; whether instant obedience to command is not better training; whether pressure from all sides, from service rules, opinion and hardship together, does not weld men into something worthier of the aspirations which, while men have consciences, they never quite get rid of.—London Spectator.

Caste In a Bootblack.

The idea of caste and class extends even to the bootblacking fraternity. This is illustrated by a recent occurrence in Broad street.

An Irish shoe polisher has a stand in front of Delmonico's old restaurant. Not long since he entered a broker's office to render professional services. In his absence a dandy young negro seated himself in the chair and awaited his return.

When the bootblack again appeared on the scene, he was horrified. As he approached his stand the negro said, "Shine 'em up, please, and be quick about it."

"Not if I know myself," replied the bootblack, with an oath. "Get out of that chair," he continued. "It's bad enough for me to be shining boots all me life, but I've got this to say—I never shined shoes but for one of my own color."—New York Herald.

Points About Needles.

The great sail needle, which has to be pushed with a steel palm, would puzzle most people; so, too, the broommaker's needle, which must also be pushed with a steel palm. The curious knitting machine needle, with its latchet, the arrasene and crewel needles, and the needle for shirring machines, the weaver's pin for picking up broken threads, with an open eye in the hook. The needle, as we see it today, is the evolved product of centuries of invention. In its primitive form it was made of bone, ivory or wood. The making of Spanish needles was introduced into England during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Point by point the manufacture has improved.—L. G. Vance in Ladies' Home Journal.

The Christian Name.

The term "Christian name" is used in England and America only. "Baptismal name" is used in other countries. The terms seems to have been used first after the reformation, when Biblical names were used as a reaction against the use of the saints' names in the calendar. It is evident that all Biblical names are not Christian, but the reaction went so far as to consider everything in the Bible as Christian and everything not in the Bible as pagan or certainly nonchristian.—New York Evening Sun.

OLD CAMP MEETINGS.

PICTURESQUE FORMS OF WORSHIP IN "GOD'S FIRST TEMPLES."

The Gatherings of Early Days Compared With Those of the Present—From Pine Knots to Electric Lights—Some Notable Camp Meetings Described.

WHEN I was a boy, I used to spend a part of every summer at my grandfather's farm. He lived not far from a village in central New York that shall be named here only what the villagers and the hardy folk who dwelt on the hills round about called it colloquially, "The Hook." It was a quiet village during 51 weeks of the year, but for one week it was full of life. Its three or four streets were then crowded with people. Then every family kept open house. Then the whole countryside turned out. Then the half dozen stores of The Hook did a rushing business. Then the 10 acre grove that nestled between the village and West hill was filled with snowy tents. Then the shadows under the trees were driven away by blazing fires at night, and ringing words of exhortation and shouts of glory and melody of hymns went up to the blue vault through the branches every hour of the 24.

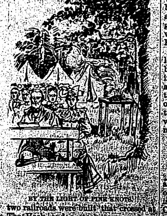
That week was camp meeting week, and if I couldn't be a member of my grandfather's family during that week the whole year seemed wasted. The meetings were held by the Methodists, and the Presbyterians and Baptists turned in and helped them enjoy the week. Camp meeting there and then was the event of the entire twelvemonth socially, spiritually and in business. Camp meeting week always came between haying and harvest time, when there was a lull in the hard work of the summer.

The meetings used to begin on Tuesday. Monday was devoted to the pitching of tents, and the repairing of the plank seats, and the getting together of pine knots for the fires that should illuminate the evening services, and the furbishing of the preachers' stand. The tenters would not all get moved in before Tuesday night, and so the first day of the meeting was usually not very well attended. From that time on the crowd would grow till Sunday, when the attendance would number 3,000 or 4,000. Families would drive 20 or 30 miles to the Sunday services, and to do this they would have to start from their homes by 2, 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning.

The sermons were models of fiery zeal. Their fervor was beyond description, and they swayed the assemblage as a field of grain is swayed in a fierce gale. The singing was "congregational," but it assisted the preacher in controlling the audience. By Thursday night "the power" would be present. By Saturday night there would be dozens of cases. All day Sunday men and women would jump into the air shouting "Glory!" and then fall unconscious to the ground. Many who came to scoff would yield to the influence of the spirit and go about the grounds singing with a strange joy, weeping tears of pleading with friends who were as yet unconvicted of sin. By Sunday night the number of those still unaffected would be greatly diminished. Every year there were conversions of some who had held out so long that their friends and relatives had lost all hope of their souls.

The reclaiming of "backsliders" was as important a part of the work done at the camp meetings at The Hook as the conviction and conversion of sinners, and every year's meeting was marked by some especially notable event of one kind or the other, so that it became a sort of landmark in the memory of the entire community. Of course some of the young folks who attended these camp meetings used to "cut up." There was more or less "sparkin" going on on the back seats among the shadows. But on the whole good order was maintained, and oftentimes some of the "wildest" young men and women were convicted and converted, to become powerful allies of the preachers among those who were still in their sins.

In those days the owner of the grounds charged no rent for their use for camp meeting purposes. A few years later two railroads were built that crossed at The Hook and a stock company was formed which purchased the ground and advertised that they might be leased by any organization that would pay for them for out of door meetings at The [illegible] season was lengthened until it now lasts two months, and the camp meetings of the temperance people, the Christian Scientists, the Salvation Army and I don't know how many other organizations besides the Methodists, are held in rotation. In place of the canvas tents of earlier times there are now painted wooden cottages. Instead of the [illegible] pine knot fires on raised platforms electric lights glow among the [illegible] at night.



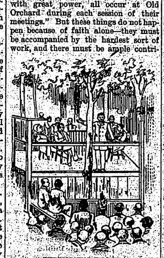
BY THE LIGHT OF PINE KNOTS.

The preachers' rough board stand has given way to a pagoda with its gay ornamentations. There are big summer boarding houses, and a camp meeting bakery and a butcher shop, and the grove is cut up into lots by narrow streets, and the lots have proved to be an excellent land speculation. There is a high board fence about the grounds, too, and a "box office," and some of the organizations admit you only after you have paid money.

Ocean Grove and Chautauqua and many of the summer schools of today are merely highly developed camp meetings. Ocean Grove has developed along one line and Chautauqua and the summer schools along another. Camp meetings of the fervid sort have not by any means died out as the more staid variety has come in, even in the vicinity of the big cities. I know of a Free Methodist camp meeting that was held this summer in quite as primitive fashion as the old time meetings at The Hook, even to the lights, which were furnished by burning pine knots in old iron kettles hung from wooden arms nailed to trees.

The Methodist camp meeting at Sing Sing held its sixty-second annual sessions this year and was very largely attended. The New York newspapers gave it much attention and reported seasons that vied in fervor with the liveliest of the past. The camp ground at Old Orchard, Me., is as well appointed as any in the country, and the meetings held there this season have been interesting and diversified. The meetings of the Christian Alliance attracted more attention from the newspapers than any other held on these grounds. They were in charge of Rev. Dr. Simpson, and an important feature was the healing of the sick.

You may perhaps doubt the genuineness of the reported cures, but the daily attendants upon the meetings did not and do not. They say that they know whereof they speak and claim that "the healing of the sick, the casting out of devils, the coming of the Holy Spirit with great power, all occur at Old Orchard during each session of their meetings." But these things do not happen because of faith alone—they must be accompanied by the hardest sort of work, and there must be ample contributions of money. The fact that $30,000 was pledged in one afternoon of this year of financial depression shows that the Alliance folk are neither poor nor close-fisted.



THE MORNING SERVICE.

I have before me as I write an account of the first camp meeting held in Delaware in 1805, and of a number of other camp meetings held in the vicinity of New York the same year. The Delaware camp meeting was opened every morning at 5 by the blowing of trumpets, trumpets sounded again at 8 for preaching, at 3 p. m. for preaching and at 8 again. "From time to time," writes a chronicler of that day, "scores were struck to the ground, a part of whom appeared lifeless; others in agonies crying with the most lamentable anguish to God for mercy, others finding peace and shouting praises and glory to God, while happy believers in ecstacies of joy and gladness were mingling their tears and voices in praises and hallelujahs to God and the Lamb." The crowds, the writer says, were very orderly, but "there were seven justices of the peace and seven constables and two sheriffs, together with a large guard of men, constantly on the ground, so that any person or persons who might have been disposed to disturb or breed disorder were kept in awe or terror."

Perhaps the camp meetings of these times that differ most from the original sort are those held by the Salvation Army. The uniforms of the men and women, the beating of drums and cymbals and the sound of wind instruments are features that would have been regarded with horror by the Methodists who used to hold camp meetings at The Hook when I was a boy.

In the south, camp meetings are largely left to the negroes. With the colored brethren and sisters the woody gatherings are truly seasons of refreshing and awakening. It is at camp meeting time that the emotional and musical qualities of the colored race have widest opportunity for exercise. Here is a sample verse from one of the most popular camp meeting hymns:

Oh! how I'll shout when I git home!
Doan' yo' feel like crossin ober?
He can create, an he destroy—
Doan' yo' feel like crossin ober?
Roll, Jordan, roll! Roll, Jordan, roll!

All things considered, camp meetings are among the most picturesque features of American life. May each sort flourish as long as the republic stands, from Chautauqua and Ocean Grove to those held by the Salvationists at The Hook and the negro meetings at Gravely Hill.

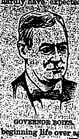
TOOK HORACE GREELEY'S ADVICE.

How Governor Horace Boies Made a Fortune In Iowa.

When he went to Iowa in 1867, Horace Boies was 40 years of age and could hardly have expected ever to be elected twice to the governorship of the state and renominated for a third term. He had been a practicing lawyer in Erie county, N. Y., for the 15 previous years and had managed to save a little money, but it was a good deal like beginning life over again to settle down in such a town as Waterloo then was, a place of a few hundred inhabitants in the midst of an almost unbroken prairie whose soil had hardly been scratched by a plow.



GOVERNOR BOIES.

The prospect was sufficiently uninviting to make it almost certain that Mr. Boies would never have gone there if it had not been for the sake of his wife, whose parents lived there and whose health he thought the change would benefit. But his wife did not live long after they settled in Waterloo, and he was left a widower with one daughter. After a time he married again, and his second wife also died, leaving him three children, two sons and a daughter. Since then he has remained a widower.

While waiting for clients Mr. Boies invested his savings in farming lands. His boyhood had been spent on a farm in Erie county, and he thought he knew how to make agriculture pay. He did know how, and the fact that he now owns upward of 4,000 acres, from which his income averages $10,000 a year, is an evidence of it.

Governor Boies was a Republican up to 1883, when he left that party because of its attitude on the question of prohibition. He did not use liquor himself, but did not believe in restricting its use by legal enactments. His attitude attracted the attention of the Democracy, who soon came to consider him an available candidate for governor, and in 1889 he was nominated and elected. In 1891 he was re-elected by a plurality of 8,216 votes.

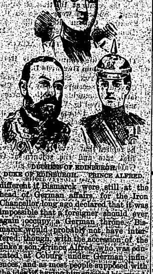
Governor Boies was born at Aurora, Erie county, N. Y., in 1827, and after a youth of considerable hardship and dearth of opportunities was admitted to the bar when 25 years of age. In 1858 he was a member of the state legislature, and in 1866 came very near being the opposition candidate to Grover Cleveland for district attorney of Erie, losing the Republican nomination by only two votes.

A TRANSPLANTED DUKE.

Edinburgh's New Titles and Estates In Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.

It is not improbable that the Duchess of Edinburgh had considerable influence in bringing about the decision of her husband to resign his admiralship in the British navy and accept the dukedom of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. The duchess does not like England over much, and the English do not like her. Immediately after her arrival in England the question of precedence at court ceremonials came up, the duchess insisting on her right as the daughter of one czar and the sister of another to take rank ahead of the daughters of the queen. She won her point, but the victory made her unpopular. Besides this, she never got on well with the Princess of Wales, and her relations with the queen were rather diplomatic than cordial.

The duke himself was never particularly popular in England, and this fact may also have had its influence on his decision, which might have been very different if Bismarck were still at the head of German affairs, for the Iron Chancellor long ago declared that it was impossible that a foreigner should ever again occupy a German throne. Bismarck would probably not have interfered, though, with the accession of the duke's son, Prince Alfred, who was educated at Coburg under German influences, and as most people supposed with the idea of having him succeed his granduncle instead of his father.



DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH.
DUKE OF EDINBURGH. PRINCE ALFRED.

The rumor that the duke intends to abdicate in favor of his son when the young man attains his majority will probably remain unverified, for the prince was declared legally of age a year ago with the especial design, as it was then thought, of shutting his father out from the regency. With his throne the duke inherits vast estates in Thuringia, Austria and the Tyrol and numberless castles, chateaux and hunting lodges, besides a long string of titles to be added to his shopworn label of duke of Edinburgh and earl of Ulster and Kent. Hereafter he will be his highness the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, [illegible]

"Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both."

To assure both the above ends, good, wholesome, palatable food is demanded. It is next to impossible to present a sufficient variety of appetizing bills of fare for our meals without a liberal allowance of pastry and other food in which shortening is required. How to make crisp, healthful, digestible pastry has puzzled the cooks. A difficulty in all good cooking in the past has been lard. Always fickle, never uniform, most unwholesome—lard has always been the bane of the cook and the obstacle to "good digestion."

COTTOLENE

comes now into popular favor as the new shortening—better than even the best of lard with none of lard's objectionable qualities. And comes attended by both "APPETITE AND HEALTH."

COTTOLENE

Orvek's sample room, will have to appear before the United States grand jury at Duluth next month, to answer to the charge of selling fire-water to an Indian while living at Fosston. The complaint is made by said Indian, presumably on the ground that he wants to take a trip, and make a few dollars.

Lewis Ellington was out to Euclid, St. Hilaire and Thief River Falls last week. Around the latter places the grain was all stacked. He brought home a sample of wheat from Euclid that was taken right from the threshing machine and weighed 62 pounds to the bushel. Said he: "The grain is turning out better than people expected, and if the farmers could only get about 65 cents a bushel for it, the people of this county need ask no odds of anybody."

The new time card on the Great Northern went into effect last Sunday. The morning train for the west leaves here at 7:35 a. m., and the evening train for the east has been changed from 8 p. m. to 1:15 a. m. The only change in the time on the branch roads is that of the departure of the St. Vincent train, which now leaves at 8 a. m. The cause of the change is simply due to the lengthening of the time card, so as to bring the trains from the coast through on time. It was probably found that the running time of the old schedule was too fast and that if any time was lost it was impossible to make it up.

Very little wheat is coming in yet.

Rev. P. T. Hillman is building a dwelling house in Jerome's addition.

The Board of county commissioners meets next Wednesday, the 13th inst.

As will be noticed by the Northern Pacific time card, its winter schedule has been resumed.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brown returned from Chicago yesterday, and will go to housekeeping in the Fournet block.

Postmaster Dawley left last week for the World's Fair, and expects to visit his old home at Plymouth, Wis., which he hasn't seen since '66.

Mrs. C. A. Sawyer, Mrs J. U. Jennings and Miss Lottie Anglim leave to-night for the World's Fair. While gone, Mrs. Jennings will buy her fall stock of millinery.

J. B. Bottineau, of Minneapolis, was in the city Saturday to secure a stay of proceedings in a case in which he is interested in this district, and which has been appealed to the supreme court.

O. E. Tveitmoe, formerly connected with the Tribune of this city, but now with the Normanden of Grand Forks, was in the city yesterday, to make arrangments for moving his family to Grand Forks.

Judge C. O. Christianson is in St. Paul attending a meeting of the state board of equalization—of which he is a member.

L. D. Marshall came up from Minneapolis Tuesday, and will stay till Mr. Munch returns from the World's Fair. The Van Dusen company will operate the Red River valley elevators this year, and the one at this point will be opened Monday next, and will take wheat for storage or buy it for cash.

Mr. W. H. Whitney, of Grand Forks who has taken Frank Brown's place at the Valley Roller mills while Frank was taking his wedding trip, returns to his home this morning. Mr. Whitney was at one time connected with the United States signal service, and was located at Bismarck, N. D.

Deputy Coroner Wyatt received a telegram yesterday from the chief of police of East Grand Forks, asking him to come over as soon as possible. Later he received another telegram which said: "Undoubtedly a case of suicide."

Messrs. Crawford and Hitchcock returned Sunday from Winnipeg. They made good time on their wheels, had a pleasant trip, and report good times in the Manitoba metropolis.

E. M. Lancaster: Montana stock is going east pretty fast now. We have taken care of several train loads lately, and expect them to come right along now.

At the First M. E. Church, next Sunday morning the pastor will preach on "The Superior Life;" and in the evening on "Our Youth's Greatest Need"—a sermon to students. In the afternoon Mr. Squier is to preach at Hammond school house, nine miles southwest.

The Ministers' Union of Crookston will resume its weekly meetings next Monday. All protestant ministers in the city are cordially invited to be present at half-past ten in the study of the first M. E. church, corner of Broadway and Fletcher.

The opera Dorothy was rendered Saturday evening by the Andrews Opera company in a very creditable manner. It is a combination of grand and comic opera—a mixture which takes very well with theatre going people. There are some good voices in the company—notably that of Geo. Andrews. The comic end was well sustained by Ed. Andrews who proved himself quite a comedian.

Supt. Peterson of the waterworks returned from the fair Tuesday. He spent twelve days on the grounds, and thinks it time well spent. The electrical exhibit was especially interesting to him.

Ed. Smith of Spokane, formerly of Crookston, came in Saturday accompanied by his family. They spent three days in the city and then proceeded on their way to the World's Fair. Mr. Smith has a dairy and stock farm about 8 miles from Spokane, and has been successful in business. He says it is dreadful dull out there, as all the mines tributary to Spokane are shut down. Mr. Smith owns some land in the town of Russia, and thinks that when the state makes some ditches in that neighborhood, his property will be enhanced in value.

Percy Baker, a freight conductor on the Great Northern, while standing [illegible] of a moving engine near Grand Forks Tuesday morning, [illegible] the engine passing over his left leg just above the ankle. Baker was well known here.

POLL OF THE SENATE

HOW THE UPPER HOUSE WILL VOTE ON REPEAL.

The List as Submitted to the President For Personal Information. Voorhees Thinks He Can Get a Vote Inside of Ten Days.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—The opening of the week finds increased interest in the financial situation in congress, and senators are being sharply called upon by the public to indicate where they stand. The following poll of the senate upon the repeal bill has been given out as the one submitted to President Cleveland for personal information:

For Repeal—Messrs. Aldrich, Allison, Brice, Cafferty, Camden, Carey, Chandler, Cullom, Davis, Dixon, Dolph, Faulkner, Frye, Gallinger, Gibson, Gordon, Gorman, Gray, Hale, Hawley, Higgins, Hill, Hoar, Houston, Lindsay, Lodge, McMillan, McPherson, Manderson, Mills, Mitchell (Wis.), Morgan, Morrill, Murphy, Palmer, Platt, Proctor, Sherman, Smith, Squire, Stockbridge, Turple, Vilas, Voorhees, Washburn, White (La.), Wilson. Total, 47.

Against Repeal—Messrs. Allen, Bate, Berry, Cockrell, Coke, Colquit, Daniels, Dubois, George, Harris, Irby, Jones (Ark.), Jones (Nev.), Kyle, Martin, Mitchell (Or.), Peffer, Perkins, Pettigrew, Power, Pugh, Roach, Shoup, Stewart, Teller, Vance, Vest, Walthall, White (Cal.), Wolcott. Total, 30.

Doubtful, With Disposition to Vote for Repeal—Messers. Blackburn, Butler, Ransom.

Doubtful, With Disposition to Vote Against Repeal—Messrs. Call, Cameron, Hansbrough, Pasco, Quay.

Several senators are paired on the question, but should every senator vote the above is believed to be a fairly accurate statement of the standing of senators. As will be seen, the list of senators set down as "for repeal" contains several who as a last resort only will vote for an unconditional repeal. Some of them would much prefer to have the bill amended, but should they fail in this they are said to be prepared to vote for the unconditional repeal.

AN EARLY VOTE.

Voorhees Thinks the Silver Bill Will Be Disposed of In Ten Days.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—Senator Voorhees is authority for the statement that the senate will vote on the repeal bill inside of 10 days. He says there is one more speech to be heard on the ultra free silver side. That is Jones of Nevada, who at the outside can talk only two days. That will allow plenty of time for the Southern senators who want to square themselves with their constituents to make remarks of reasonable length. Senator Roach also said he had learned from some of the silver senators they did not expect to filibuster. Some predict a vote inside of a week.

ANOTHER MESSAGE.

The President Said to Be Preparing One at Present.

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—A special from Washington to The Daily News says: The president has decided to send another special message to congress. He has called his cabinet together to discuss the proposed message.

LONG AND DREARY SESSION.

Debate on the Repeal Bill Continues in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—The senate had a long and dreary session, with little of interest to enliven the proceedings. The house bill for the repeal of portions of the Sherman act was kept steadily to the front after it was taken up, about 1 o'clock, and it was still before the senate at the time of adjournment. Speeches were made on it by Senators Cullom (Rep., Ills.), Coke (Dem., Tex.) and Peffer (Pop., Kan.)

IN WASHINGTON AGAIN.

The President and Family Return From Buzzards Bay.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 2.—President Cleveland, accompanied by Mrs. Cleveland, their daughter Ruth, nurse and maid, arrived in Washington at 4:10 a. m. over the Pennsylvania road, in a special car attached to train No. 23. Mr. Thurber was afterward asked as to the general health of the party and he replied that everybody was feeling first rate and the sojourn at Gray Gables had been beneficial to all.

Two Liberty Bells.

WORLD'S FAIR GROUNDS, Sept. 3.—There are now two liberty bells in the White City. The new Columbian liberty bell, which was cast in the Henely Bell company's foundry at Troy, N. Y., June 23 last, was brought into the exposition grounds at daylight. It will be erected in front of the Administration building.

Cholera in England.

LONDON, Sept. 1.—The epidemic in the Lincolnshire seaport of Grimsby has been declared officially to be Asiatic cholera, having been called a "choleraic disease" for many days. The last victim of the disease was a woman, who died Tuesday. Several other cases have ended fatally.

General Grant Will Remain.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—The statement is now semi-officialy made that General L. A. Grant, assistant secretary of war will be allowed to remain. Secretary Lamont does not want a new man in the office because he will be absent so much of the time himself, and the assistant will be the acting secretary of war.

Legs Ground Off.

SLAYTON, Minn., Sept. 5.—O. Christianson, an old man of over 70, slipped into a threshing machine feet first, and had both legs ground up half way to his knees.

Burial of Those Drowned by Recent Storms Without Identification.

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—A special to The World from Savannah, Ga., says: S. Freidling of the wholesale grocery firm of S. Buckenheimer & Son returned from Beaufort on a special tug, having left there Friday morning. Mr. Friedling says that at least 300 persons were drowned in that vicinity, and that when all reports are in upward of 1,500 will be found to have perished. Up to Friday the coroner had held inquests on 300, of which 37 were buried in one pit and 50 in another. It is Impossible to Procure Coffins.

All that is desired is to get the bodies out of the way as quickly as possible, to prevent epidemics resulting from their rapid decomposure. No accurate record is kept of the number of dead, and the statistics of the disaster will never be fully known. On each island and on the mainland the survivors are burying all the remains of the victims that can be found. Coroners certificates are out of the question. Searching parties make their way around the plantations and homes, and as soon as a body is found it is put under the ground. Whenever whites are with these parties some sort of record is kept, but the greater number of burials are made by negroes.

The black belt on the coast has lost not less than 1,000 of its population, with a probability that it is twice the number. It will be a week before all the dead are found, as there is still much water on the islands, beneath which there are undoubtedly many bodies.

COLD IN DEATH.

Dr. Graves Found In His Cell by His Attendant.

DENVER, Sept. 4.—Dr. T. Thatcher Graves was found cold in death at 9 a. m. by the "trusty" who has been caring for him. On his person was found the following letter to the coroner:

"Please do not hold an autopsy on my remains. The cause of death may be rendered as follows: Died from persecution; worn out; exhausted."

Letter Made Public.

Dr. Graves left several other letters, one of which, directed to thes public, is quite lengthy. It is mainly a denunciation of the prosecution made against him by District Attorney Stevens and others. He charges all sorts of bribery and corruption and says his only escape is in self destruction, having already spent a fortune in defending himself for a crime he never committed.

BRAKES FAIL TO WORK.

Frightful Accident Happens to a Crowded Cincinnati Electric Car.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 4.—What will prove, perhaps, the most disastrous street car accident ever recorded took place in this city at 7 p. m. An electric car dashed down a hill at a frightful speed, left the track, broke a telegraph pole and shot into a saloon, wrecking both itself and the structure it struck. As a result of the collision two people are dead, six are injured beyond recovery and nearly 40 more are hurt, many of them dangerously.

A MODERN THRESHING RIG.

Larsen, Carpenter & Co., Put a Self-feeder and Band-cutter Into the Field.

A JOURNAL man was driven out to the farm of Henry Steege last week by Geo. Carpenter, to see the working of a threshing machine which the firm of Larsen, Carpenter Co., had sold to Jim Muir. The rig consists of a 64-inch Advance separator, with a 40-inch cylinder, a self-feeder and band-cutter attachment, an automatic grain measure and an automatic swinging stacker, the whole business driven by an 18 horse power, straw-burner Advance engine. The rig is manufactured by the Advnace Thresher Co., of Battle Creek, Mich., and the inventor of the self-feed attachment, who is an employe of the firm, came here to start this rig. Larsen, Carpenter & Co., claim that these threshers are world-beaters, and they think that with this latest improvement, they have the edge on all competitors in the machine business. It is certainly a complete outfit and saves two high-priced employes for the thresher, and two band-cutters for the farmer. Besides the saving in labor, the machine will put through more grain than by the old way. The scribe caught the time while the pitchers were working at an ordinary gait, and they were putting through almost five bushels per minute. The self-feeder is very simple, and consists of a short carrier which is set out in front of the cylinder. The bundles are thrown upon this carrier, which takes them under a shaft turning at the rate of about 400 revolutions a minute. Upon this shaft are fastened a number of knives, which revolve toward the cylinder, cut the bands and loosen up the bundles, which are then thrown into the cylinder. Mr. Steege had nine teams hauling bundles, and four men pitching them off the loads into the machine. Mr. Muir expressed himself thoroughly satisfied with the machine, and thought the feeder was a great success.

Through the agency of the Missions to Seamen society over 5,000 sailors have been enrolled as total abstainers in Cork harbor alone.

The statement that suddenly enforced abstinence kills is not borne out by facts. The death rate in prison is only 8 in every 1,000, a much lower rate than in towns.

THE WORLD'S GREAT FAIR.

A Few Remarks by the Editor Upon His Visit Last Week.

As nearly every newspaper man in Crookston has been at the great World's Fair at Chicago and taken a whirl at writing it up the JOURNAL does not feel it incumbent upon itself to make much of a spread in a write up after having had a representative upon the grounds for a day and a half. The first thing the writer did upon arrival upon the fair grounds was to hunt up Maj. Handy and then for the first time learned why the Maj. was named Handy—because he was so fearfully unhandy to find—in fact the writer did not find him at all, but did see a clerk or two who asked him to call next day at three o'clock when a ticket of admission would be issued. When he called the next day he was politely informed that the aforesaid ticket had not put in an appearance yet, but "if we would call to-morrow at three o'clock we should be served to the best in the land on a silver salver" etc., adlibitum; and we were told by many of the bystanders that they had been given the same song and dance for about a week now. Our judgment of that office is that it was established to see how much advertising they could get without paying for it and it had better be abolished and save expenses. The next thing we did was to go upon the intra-mural railroad and ride around the White city until we had fixed the location of all the important places that we desired to see in our mind and then, having become somewhat familiar with them we proceeded to interview them seriatim. Of course we went first of all to the Minnesota building to register as all good Minnesotans do. This building is nicely located and the commissioners seem to have wisely and judiciously expended the people's money in its building and management. Here one can write and receive letters from home, can be made comfortable and can meet his old neighbors and friends and—if he has been—wise and provided a lunch, can find a good place to eat it in comfort. We were proud of Minnesota not only for the fine building she has erected but for the grand display of grain, minerals, live stock and other things she has on exhibition. Next to her the wonderful display of fruits and vegetables made by California took our eye and elicited our warmest encomiums; next comes Illinois with a magnificent display, Iowa, Ohio, Washington, North Dakota, Montana, in fact every state in the Union are worthy of mention. Time and space forbids a separate mention of all the various buildings and their contents even if we were capable of giving a pen picture of the great panorama—the whole world in miniature there spread out before you—one must see all he can of it to get any adequate idea of it. As to the expenses of the trip it depends wholly upon the individual him or herself. After the railroad fare is paid one can find rooms at from 50 cents to $1.00 or more per night and can live as cheaply or as expensively as they like. You can get a good meal for 25 cents or you can pay many times that sum for one if you choose. Outside of the grounds living rates are quite reasonable but once inside if you get a big meal you are liable to put up big money for it; as a result of this many bring a lunch for noon, which lunches are quite inexpensive outside of the grounds. If our readers want to know our opinion as to the advisability of a trip, there we should say by all means go if you can, as it will be the event of a life-time and it may ne made quite as inexpensive as any trip of equal distance at any time.

Suicide at East Grand Forks.

On Wednesday of last week Coroner Shepard was notified of a case of suicide in East Grand Forks and at once dispatched Deputy Coroner J. E. V. Wyatt to the scene to investigate. The victim, Sylvester N. Onstine, was a young man of 33 years of age, a man of excellent habits, highly respected by all who knew him. Some years ago he entered the employ of J. J. [illegible] & Co. at Brainerd and has been in their employ ever since, coming with them to East Grand Forks when they removed to that place and where he has served in the capacity of book keeper. From one who knew him personally the JOURNAL learns that while Onstine would occasionally take a drink of liquor he was by no means a drinking man but on Saturday evening September 2d, he got in with a party who were drinking and finished his spree on Sunday by hiring a buggy and going for a ride ending up by a runaway and wreck, in front of the post-office. It is thought that this event so preyed upon his mind that it led to this desperate act which he committed on the following Wednesday morning at his home in East Grand Forks. His mother heard him leave his room about 6 o'clock a. m., that morning and as he did not return in sometime she grew uneasy and went out to see if anything serious had occurred. In the wood-shed she found his body suspended from a joist—dead. It seems that he had attempted his life with a razor before leaving his room but only succeeded in slashing his throat badly, so he rose and taking a sheet from the bed went to the wood-shed arranged a sort of a scaffold on some saw-horses, a nail keg and a board and mounting the keg he fastened one end of the sheet to the joist the other to his neck and kicked the keg from beneath his feet. He leaves a mother and two brothers to mourn his untimely end.

State Teachers' Institute.

An institute for the County of Polk will be held at Crookston, during the week beginning October 16th, 1893. It will be under the supervision of the County Superintendent, who will make all necessary arrangements for the convenience of teachers and the success of the institute. Instructors, thoroughly prepared for the work, will be provided. They will be furnished with such professional books, apparatus and literature as will be of special service to teachers. The 27th Annual Encampment G. A. R.

The 27th annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic has passed into history and once more the old boys have returned to the daily avocations of life. The march on Tuesday was a long and tedious one of about 6 miles over the rough cobble-stones and a vexatious delay of about three hours occurred that added to the fatigue of the boys. It is estimated in Indianapolis that about 20,000 men were in line but the writer does not think the number would exceed 15,000. The prevailing hard times no doubt kept many from attending who otherwise would have gone. Indiana turned out her full strength and Illinois followed with a good showing. Other states did not do as well. The good people of Indianapolis did all they could to ensure a good time for the boys and various receptions were given. The city was nicely decorated and the illuminations were fine. At the business meeting Wednesday, Capt. J. G. Adams of Massachusetts was elected commander by acclamation; E. N. Walker, of Indiana was elected senior vice-commander and J. C. Biggar, of Texas, junior vice-commander, all without opposition. Pittsburg, Pa., was chosen as the next place of meeting and thus the Pennsylvania railroad secures a monopoly of the carrying business. Immediately after the parade on Tuesday the boys began to depart for Chicago and Grand Army Day, Saturday, at the White City was a roarer.

Why Is It?

Why is it that a woman can struggle until she is red in the face and worn out both in temper and body by a window in a railroad train in her vain endeavors to close or open it when all that a man has to do is to walk up and go over exactly the same line of action that she has already exhausted, and down comes the refractory window in a jiffy? It is a most humiliating fact, but a very true one nevertheless, that not five women out of a dozen ever succeed in arranging a window to their satisfaction. They pull and tug until they are embarrassed, and finally, in a pleading manner, look around at some slip of a man, who, without any nonsense, brings about the desired effect, while the woman looks on in silent wonder at his marvelous skill and dexterity.—Philadelphia Times.

A Valuable Privilege.

The attention of college graduates is called to the fact that their degree entitles them only to enter the battle of life. It grants no quarter. Jump in, boys, and hustle. In that way alone will you ever open the oyster that has been growing all these years for you and you alone.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

The committee on poor presented a report which is as follows:

To the Honorable President and Members of the City Council of Crookston, Minn:

GENTLEMEN:—After careful and mature consideration of the problem of the care of the poor that hitherto has and hereafter must devolve on this city, it has now become imperative (in the opinion of your committee on the poor), to devise and recommend some alleviation from the large bill of expenditure that now, each month, confronts us for the care and maintenance of our city poor.

When it is considered that the sum of one hundred dollars will not meet the expenditure charged to the city since January 1st, 1893, for each and every month, in the county hospital alone, and when it is still further considered that an approximate amount is expended in the limits of this city for support of the poor of the city who maintain themselves, or rather live beyond the pale of the hospital, yet draw monthly on the city treasury for some assistance toward their support, the question as to the best and most economical means to our city and our city's liabilities as to our poor, assumes proportions that cannot be laid aside, Therefore, with an understanding, based on the preceding facts, your poor commissioner in full conjunction with the "committee on poor" would respectfully and conscientiously recommend what now follows:

First: It is our unanimous opinion that Crookston city should own and operate her own home for her own poor, and should endeavor in every particular to make the same self-supporting, so far as possible.

In support of this status we would impress the fact on the minds of the members of this honorable council, that, beyond any possible question of doubt our city will be saved a very considerable draft on our city treasury and funds, by being in posesssion of her own poor house, for one reason alone, id est, that, several who now, and several who probably intend to, will entirely relegate their claims to the charity of our own cityto the oblivion they merit, because they will refuse to locate in the city poor house, as we intend they must do.

Second. It behooves us to consider the cost pro and con of the present modus operandi and the proposed exchange therefor.

Today, our city is paying board for parties who require board alone at the county hospital, aggregating $70 per month or more or less, for three parties only, also we are paying board in this city for one more partly approximating $15 per mouth, and further, we are paying each and every month, the following sums, and expect to continue same payments while parties live.

Mr. and Mrs. Durkee, per month, $12.00; Mrs. Boyer, $10.00 per month; Mrs. Supernault (of Carman), $10 per month.

And then add to these figures incidental and accidental drafts on our city treasury and the result is somewhat unexpected. It shows on a rough calculation an expenditure each month of over $150 on account of the poor of this city, and it is therefore only a natural sequence that your committee should endeavor to devise, acting jointly with the poor commissioner, a means of relief, not only for the financial aspect of the question as it pertains to this city, but also as to the limits of perambulation hitherto necessitated on the officers whose duty requires time and travel on behalf of our poor in looking up and proving their claims on our funds.

After submitting the foregoing to your consideration, we would respectfully suggest and recommend a proposition, that, in our opinion,

ADAMS ELECTED.

The Massachusetts Man Succeeds Weissert.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 6.—Already the jam at the Union station of people leaving for home has begun. Seven train loads were taken out within a half hour during the afternoon without making a hole in the crowd. The encampment proper shows a disposition to rush through with its business rapidly. The election of officers was brought up late in the afternoon and the three following were elected, practically without opposition: John J. B. Adams, Massachussetts, commander-in-chief; Colonel I. N. Walker, Indiana, senior vice commander; J. C. Biggar, Texas, junior vice commander.

The report of General Weissert was devoted almost entirely to the subject of pensions.

From the Adjutant's Office.

The report which was submitted by Adjutant General Gray is probably the most interesting from the Grand Army point of view. He shows that the present encampment is composed of 1,187 members. The returns for June 30, 1893, give a membership in good standing of 397,223. The number of posts is 7,626; departments, 45. In addition to the membership in good standing there are returned delinquent, 4,070, and remaining suspended, 41,661. The delinquents are such as are in good standing, have paid dues, and but for the neglect of post officers would be so returned. There has been a net loss of membership in the past year of 2,165. During the year there were 7,002 deaths in the order.

Larger Than Any Previous Year.

From June 30, 1892, to June 30, 1893, under the column "expended in charity," there was reported $178,845.52. Since these records have been kept there has been reported under this head $2,500,000. The report of the quartermaster, General John Taylor, shows receipts of $21,840 and expenses $9,652, balance in the treasury $12,187. There remains in the Grant monument fund $8,758. The report of Surgeon General William C. Wile, M. D., shows the ranks of the Grand Army to be composed, as a rule, of as hardy and sturdy a set of men as can be found anywhere, age and condition taken into consideration. Consumption, however, and grave lung troubles seem to have a good footing in the ranks, which is due, probably, to the exposure of camp duty. He recommends that a home or hospital for the treatment of these cases be erected by the government in the long-life pine region of the South.

G. A. R. ADJOURNS.

Present Administration Arraigned for Suspending Pensions.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 8.—The Grand Army encampment adjourned after adopting lengthy resolutions arraigning the present administration for its pernicious activity in the line of cutting off the pensions of the old soldiers and compelling them to produce evidence that their pitiful allowance was not procured by fraud, instead of placing the burden of proof on the numerous government officials who are lavishly paid for their service in this direction.

The following officers of the Woman's Relief Corps were elected and installed: President, Mrs. Amantha J. Waters, Minnesota; senior vice president, Mrs. Taylor, Ohio; junior vice president, Mrs. N. P. Anderson, California; treasurer, Mrs. Gordon, Kansas; councilor, Mrs. C. V. Sheriff, Pennsylvania.

TO RESTORE PENSIONERS.

Secretary Smith Sees Error in the Late Suspension Order.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—The injustice of the wholesale suspension of pensioners under the act of June 27, 1890, by Secretary Hoke Smith has, it is said, been remedied. There will be carried to the homes of 10,000 pensioners under that act the glad tidings that the secretary of the interior has been obliged to recede even further from his position than already under the modification of his general ruling. Colonel Charles P. Lincoln, an ex-deputy commissioner of pensions and a lawyer of Washington, who has announced his intention of bringing a suit in the supreme court of the District of Columbia to test the legality of the wholesale suspension of pensions, has urged upon Secretary Smith and Commissioner Lochren the justice of restoring to the pension rolls the 10,000 veterans whose pensions had been suspended under the ruling which he only last week modified.

Recognized the Justice of It.

Secretary Smith recognizes the justice of this demand, and after a consultation with Assistant Secretary Reynolds and Commissioner Lochren decided to have all these suspended cases specially adjudicated by an extra force of clerks, and that the results should be reached within two weeks. This means that the greater part of these 10,000 pensioners will be restored at once, and they will be able to draw their money within that time.

NICE YOUNG MAN, BUT A FOOL.

He is Utterly Too Good, and His Wife is Sick of Her Bargain.

One of the best girls any fellow ever knew and the pride of a village not a thousand miles from Pittsburg made a fatal mistake when she married. Being such a happy girl, so sensible and so much sought after by the best young men in the neighborhood, every one confidently expected her to make a great catch. But she didn't, and now her neighbors are wondering how it all happened. She married a fool. That explains it all. No need to go into details. The fact that he dressed well and that he moved in good society and was known as a "very nice young man" will not make the case any plainer. He is a fool, and that is all there is about it.

His foolishness consisted largely in believing that the world was not made right, that the people are wrong hearted as well as wrong headed, and that it is the duty of every one to array himself against everything as it exists and keep up a constant grumbling, growling and complaining. This young man was very religious in a sense. He honestly and faithfully endeavored to keep himself unspotted from the world by avoiding contact with it. He went not into bad company, nor did he patronize picnics and evening parties, but staid at home reading good books and thinking how he could spin for himself a cocoon that would keep the outside world away from him. He did not realize the fact that he who has himself for companion and friend is in very poor company.

It was this sort of chap that our model girl married. She ought to have known better, but she mistook his knowledge of books for an evidence of brains and of learning, while the fellow really hadn't two ideas of his own about anything. The inside history of this case shows that she did not love him any better than she had other men, but he was such a nice young fellow that she thought there would be no risk taking him. In fact, she took him in the hope of escaping the very misery she is now suffering. He doesn't beat her with a club, nor does he get drunk and smash the furniture, but he tires her life out by lecturing her, finding fault continually and never commending, and trying to make her understand that her place is at home and that her duty is to him. Their home is dreary and chilly, and their lives about the same.

They are both satisfied that marriage is a failure, and they cannot be made to believe otherwise. It isn't the man who has the least book knowledge that is the biggest fool, nor are those who are short on general information to be classed with numskulls. Some of the most delightful people one may meet are those who are blessed with an abundance of common sense. They know absolutely nothing of Darwin nor of Briggs and not a great deal about electrical science, and they may even eat with their knives, pour their coffee into saucers and blow the soup to cool it, yet with all these shortcomings and defects they are the most delightful people to know. Their hearts are all right, and they understand enough of the science of life to know how to live comfortably themselves and to make others happy.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

Water Started These Two Fires.

No principle of natural philosophy is more familiar than the power of water to extinguish fire. And yet, strange to say, water has been known to cause destructive fires, not by an accident, but by direct chemical action. One case of the kind was in a large factory. A flood caused the water to rise to a pile of iron filings, which oxidized so rapidly that they developed great heat and set fire to the nearby woodwork. The building was entirely destroyed.

Another case is still more remarkable. Several engines were throwing water upon a burning building, and the water found its way to another building, which contained quicklime. The slaking of the lime, caused of course by the contact of the water, generated intense heat, and the heat set fire to the building. That was a sarcasm of circumstances, wasn't it?—Philadelphia Times.

Value of Good Cooking.

We masculines have yet to learn that the kitchen is the most important end of the household. If that goes wrong, the whole establishment is wrong. It decides the health of the household, and health settles almost everything. Heavy bread, too great frequency of plum pudding, mingling of lemonade and custards, unmasticable beef, have decided the fate of sermons, legislative bills and destiny of empires. The kitchen knife has often cut off the brightest prospects. The kitchen gridiron has often consumed a commercial enterprise. The kitchen kettle has kept many a good man in hot water. It will never be fully known how much the history of the world was affected by good or bad cookery.—Nashville Advocate.

Why He Chose the War.

When Charles Dudley Warner was the editor of the Hartford Press, back in the sixties, arousing the patriotism of the state by his vigorous appeals, one of the typesetters came in from the composing room, and placing himself before the editor said, "Well, Mr. Warner, I've decided to enlist in the army." With mingled sensations of pride and responsibility Mr. Warner replied encouragingly that he was glad to see that the man felt the call of duty. "Oh, it isn't that," said the truthful compositor, "but I'd rather be shot than try to set any more of your copy."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Purchasing Safety.

Mr. Oldtimer—I think the pay of legislators nowadays is outrageously high.

Mr. Nowadays—Nonsense, man! You don't know when you are well off. I wish they were paid more.

"More?"

"Certainly. Pay 'em enough to sport steam yachts and race horses. Then they won't be so eternally anxious to sit at their desks and spoil our laws."—New York Weekly.

A Boy on Breathing.

The following was handed in as a composition on breathing by a Kentucky boy, says the Washington Star, from which it is here reproduced:

Breath is made of air. We breathe with our lungs, our lights, our liver and kidneys. If it wasn't for our breath, we should die when we slept. Our breath keeps the life a-going through the nose when we are asleep. Boys that stay in a room all day should not breathe. They should wait till they get out of doors. Boys in a room make bad, unwholesome air. They make carbonicide. Carbonicide is poisoner than mad dogs. A heap of soldiers was in a black hole in India, and a carbonicide got in that there hole and killed nearly every one afore morning. Girls kill the breath with corsits that squeezes the diagram. Girls can't holler or run like boys, because their diagram is squeezed too much. If I was a girl, I'd rather be a boy, so I can holler and run and have a great big diagram.

Fast Torpedo Boats.

The famous torpedo boat builder at Elbing, Schichau, has attained an unprecedented speed even for this class of vessel, torpedo boats built by him for the Russian and Italian governments having reached 27½ knots in an hour's run at sea. The new British boats are to be 200 tons displacement, while the Russian boats are 130 tons, so that the former may do better by reason of greater power and greater size. The length of Schichau's boat is 152 feet 0 inches, the beam 17 feet 5 inches.

She may carry 40 tons of coal in her bunkers. On trial, however, she had only 20 tons on board. The small guns carried weighed 2½ tons; the torpedo armament, 6 tons; the crew, provisions stores and firearms, 4½ tons; drinking water, 2½ tons; engine and boatswain's stores and reserve parts, 4½ tons, so that all the movable parts came to 20 tons, making, with coal 40 tons.—Steamship.

Spots on Growing Plants.

The pale, round spots, about as large in circumference as a tackhead, that one sees on cigars now and then are said to be caused by dewdrops and raindrops that act as burning glasses when the sun shines through them on the green tobacco leaf. Be that as it may, the florists declare that palms are often burned by knobs and corrugations in the glass roofs of their greenhouses, as those irregularities tend to focus the sun's rays. The effect of this strong heat on the palm leaf—which is as sensitive to heat as it is to cold—is to cause a rusty brown spot to appear on the green. Sometimes the apparent motion of the sun in passing westward will trace a line of scorch across the leaf. Other plants are less susceptible to sun rays.—New York Sun.

Strange Act of a Chicago Tramp.

There is a tramp in Chicago who should be given a pension. He broke into a house in order to reach a bathroom and give himself a first class scrubbing. With no other alternative save the Chicago river it looks as though the tramp were justified.—Detroit Free Press.

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Montana, Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

"In no way can Americans so effectively inform themselves on the subjects that claim public attention from one month to another as by reading the North American Review."

IN THE
North American Review
YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND
The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallelieu, Foss, etc., etc.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people had ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

CITY COUNCIL.

will not only meet all the requirements of the poor sustained by this city, further, will really curtail the actual amount of money drawn each month from city treasury, and still further enable a more comprehensive guardianship of those properly charged to our city by the proper officers appointed therefor and our recommendation is that this city shall own and operate her own home for her own poor.

Realizing the fact that primary suggestions are generally ignored, if not sustained by advantageous offers, your committee beg to earnestly recommend the purchase by this city of property known as the Jerome residence, situated in Jerome's addition to this city; this consists of sufficient room to meet any obligation heretofore brought before this city and is already furnished in every particular necessary for immediate use and occupation. This property, consisting of a house and furniture, can be purchased for two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, ($2,250.00) terms: one thousand dollars cash down, balance in five or six years. This property your committeee has ascertained is at present owned by Mrs. P. A. Dufour and the above figures includes the furniture, the latter being of goodvalue and remarkably cheap at figures quoted.

Further remarks or suggestions will be very cheerfully submitted by any of the undersigned.

Folly of Hoarding.

It is really remarkable that so many people in this country, who have funds from which they might earn a good rate of interest, persist in locking up notes in safe deposit vaults or pack them away in old stockings. Money will earn today large returns, with the best of real estate security as first class collateral to protect the lender, and yet a great many individuals, waiting for they know not what, decline to take advantage of what is an unusual opportunity for making money. The currency of a country is intended to circulate as evidence of credit. If it does not, it becomes absolutely useless to everybody. In a famine a community would be no better off if it locked up millions of barrels of flour than if it had none at all. The same is precisely true of money.—Washington News.

Browning to Coleridge.

Browning loaned Lord Coleridge one of his works to read, and afterward meeting the poet, the lord chief justice said to him: "What I could understand I heartily admired, and parts ought to be immortal. But as to much of it I really could not tell whether I admired it or not, because for the life of me I could not understand it." Browning replied, "If a reader of your caliber understands 10 per cent of what I write, I think I ought to be content."—San Francisco Argonaut.

A Hard Conundrum.

Of the 1,300,000,000 or 1,400,000,000 of people populating the earth, how many may be said to dominate it? Is the direction of all affairs sublunary in the hands of more or less than 10,000 men and women? I do not mean as elected or hereditary rulers of nations merely, but persons in the capacity of rulers, financiers, priests, soldiers, writers, statesmen, etc.—Cor. New York Sun.

ARE OF ALL FAITHS.

WORLD'S CONGRESS OF RELIGIONS OPENS AT CHICAGO.

Representatives of Almost Every Creed of Earth Meet In Peace and Fellowship—The Most Significant Gathering Ever Assembled on Earth.

CHICAGO, Sept. 11.—A processional in which the religions of the world were represented marked the opening of the world's parliament of religions at the Art Institute during the day. It was a processional that had a world of meaning in it; one that would have been impossible not many years ago. Jew marched with Gentile, and Catholic marched with Protestant. The religious cliques of India, China and Japan were represented as well as those of the English speaking nations. All, attired in their priestly robes and wearing the insignia of their office, marched in peace and fellowship to the platform, while the audience rose and cheered at the sight.

Gibbons Had the Lead.

First came Cardinal Gibbons, escorted by President Bonney. Then came Mrs. Potter Palmer and Mrs. Charles Henrotin, representing the board of lady managers of the world's fair, and then the following with their suites: Archbishop Redwood, New Zealand; Archbishop Dionysios Latas, Zante, Greece; Rev. John Henry Barrows, Chicago; Archbishop Feehan, Count Abernstorff, Berlin; Dr. Carl von Bergen; Sweden; Prof. C. N. Chahara, H. D. Harmapala and P. C. Moosomadar, India; Rev. Augusta J. Chapin, Chicago; Pung Quang Yu, China; Dr. E. C. Hirsch, Chicago; Miss Jeanne Serabji and Khersedji Laugrana, Bombay; Bishop Barnett and Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant.

An Inspiring Scene.

Even more inspiring was the scene when the vast audience arose and joined in singing "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow," and later when Cardinal Gibbons led those of all nations and all religions in reciting the Lord's prayer. Before the formal opening of the congress President Bonney of the World's Congress auxiliary held an informal reception in Hall 2, where he shook hands with and introduced to each other many of the lights of about all the religions of the world. There were men from India, China, Bombay, Greece, Japan, Russia, New Zealand and Turkey, in addition to many from countries that are nearer to us. Some were in their native costumes, which gave the gathering a more brilliant and cosmopolitan appearance.

Proceedings Begin.

There was not a vacant seat in the hall, and the walls were fringed with people standing up when Clarence Eddy took his seat at the organ and played a few selections previous to the processional, by which the proceedings were opened. President Bonney made the address of welcome. Rev. John Henry Burrows, chairman of the committee on organization, then addressed the congress, and Archbishop Feehan followed, welcoming the delegates on behalf of the Catholic church.

Cardinal Gibbons had to leave early, so his response to the addresses of welcome was called for out of its order. He said that though all did not agree on matters of faith, there was one platform on which all were united, that was charity, humanity and benevolence. Rev. Augusta J. Chapin welcomed the congress on behalf of women. The parliament of religions, he said, was the grandest and that had ever been assembled on this earth. President Higinbotham of the Columbian exposition next welcomed the delegates on behalf of the world's fair. Responses were made by the archbishop of Zante, Pung Quang Yu, secretary of the Chinese legation at Washington; Prince Walhouski of Russia, Right Rev. Reuchi Shibati of Japan, Count Bernstoff of Berlin, Rev. G. Bonet Maury of France, Archbishop Redwood of New Zealand and H. Dharmapala of India. This closed the exercises for the opening day.

Afternoon Session.

Carl von Bergen of Sweden was the first speaker of the afternoon. In opening, he said the entire world was looking toward the goal of progress and singing the strain that was struck on the immortal lyre of the grand bard Tennyson, "Ring Out the Darkness and Ring in the Christ That is to Be."

Other speakers were Vichand A. Gandhi, a lawyer of Bombay; Professor Minas Scherez, editor of an American newspaper published in London; Professor C. S. Chakravazti, a theosophist from India; Principal Grant of Canada; Rev. A. Momery, D.D. of London; Swami Vivekanada of Bombay; Miss Jeanne Sarabji of Bombay; B. B. Nargarakar of Bombay, and Bishop Arnett of the African Methodist Episcopal church.

Five Celestials In Jail at San Francisco Awaiting Deportation.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 11.—The first Chinamen to have their sentences of deportation under the Geary registration act executed arrived in San Francisco from Los Angeles Saturday and are now confined in the county jail, where they will be detained until Tuesday, when they will be sent back to the Celestial kingdom on the steamer China.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—Attorney General Olney has instructed United States marshals to take no further steps in the enforcement of the Geary law pending specific instructions [illegible] the contrary from Washington.

They Only Knew Agassiz.

In 1858 a party consisting of Lowell, Emerson, Agassiz, Judge Hoar, W. J. Stillman and several others spent a few weeks of the summer in the Adirondacks.

The journey of the company gave rise to an incident which has often been incorrectly told, and which, as a curious comment upon human fame, deserves to be told again. The coming of the party was of course made known along the track it would follow, and at Keeseville, where the common roads then ended, the town was agog to see the "philosophers," as they were at once collectively called. But neither Emerson nor Lowell was known, Agassiz being the only celebrity to that world, owing to his having recently refused the offer by the emperor of France of the keepership of the Jardin des Plantes at Paris and a senatorship with a large salary, he preferring to devote himself to science and America.

The selectmen of the town waited on the visitors early in the morning after their arrival to pay their respects, they said, but really to see a man who had no regard for money and distinction. They were received formally, the spokesman bringing a copy of a periodical which contained a portrait of Agassiz, which he produced and carefully compared with the lineaments of the professor until he had satisfied himself of the authenticity of the individual, when he addressed his followers with, "Yes, it's him!" And they then proceeded to shake hands with him, the rest of the party being ignored.—W. J. Stillman in Century.

How Did the Dollar Mark Originate?

Below I give five theories of the origin of the dollar mark ($), they being selected from about 20 seemingly plausible solutions:

That it is a combination of the "U. S.," the initials of United States.

That it is a modification of the figure 8, the dollar being formerly called a "piece of eight."

That it is derived from a representation of the Pillars of Hercules, consisting of two needlelike towers or pillars connected with a scroll. The old Spanish coins marked with the pillar device were frequently referred to as "pillar dollars."

That it is a combination of "H. S.," the ancient Roman mark of money unit.

That it is a combination of P. and S. from peso duro, signifying "hard dollar." In Spanish accounts peso is contracted by writing the S. over the P., and placing it over the sum.

According to one writer the symbol of the dollar is a monogram of the letters "V" "S" and "J," the dollar being originally a "thaler" coined in the valley of Sant Joachim, Bohemia, and known as "Joachim thaler," and the monogram the initials of the words, "Valley Sant Joachim."—St. Louis Republic.

Art Instruction.

An artist had sold a picture for an exorbitant price and the purchaser sued to recover. The attorney for the purchaser was making the artist uncomfortable by his questions.

"Now, sir," he said in that pleasant, ingratiating manner of lawyers with a witness, "do you think anybody could see beauty in that picture?"

"Some persons certainly could," replied the artist.

"You think the initiated in technical matters might have no difficulty in understanding your work?"

"I am sure they would not."

"Do you think you could make me see any beauty in that picture?" this most superciliously.

"Probably not now, sir"—and the artist was most humble—"but once I could have done so easily."

"Now, sir, how is that? I don't understand you. Explain, if you please."

"That's quite easy, sir. I could have done it simply by employing you as my counsel in this case."—Detroit Free Press.

Courtesy Among the Swedes.

The Swedes are a quiet, taciturn people. There is no jostling even among the lowest classes. When a train leaves a platform or a steamboat a pier, the lookers on lift their hats to the departing passengers and bow to them, a compliment which is returned by the passengers. You are expected to lift your hat to the shabbiest person you meet in the street, and to enter a shop, office or bank with the hat on is considered a bad breach of good manners. In retiring from a restaurant you are expected to bow to the occupants. Bowing and hat lifting is so common that the people seem to move around more slowly than elsewhere, in order to observe the courtesy.—F. H. Stauffer in Kate Field's Washington.

Appreciative.

A housekeeper who has been employing a colored washerwoman for several months was surprised to see her appear last week in a hat trimmed heavily with crape.

"Why, Julia," she asked, "is any of your family dead?"

"No, no," was the reply, "but one of my best customers gave me this hat, and I didn't want her to think I don't 'preciate nothin'."—New York Times.

Caution Needed.

A tourist had visited a small historic town. He was shown the massive wall that surrounded it and the immense town gates.

"You need to be very careful," he said gravely to the official who was his escort.

"Why so?"

"Sometime when these gates are open the village may get lost!"—Youth's Companion.

Puzzled Over His Last Act.

M. de Semonville was a political utilitarian who neglected nothing and knew how to make capital out of everything. When he died, Talleyrand fell into deep thought and then said: "I cannot divine [illegible]

THE REPEAL BILL.

IT CONTINUES THE ABSORBING TOPIC IN CONGRESS.

The Final Vote Not Anticipated In the Senate Before Oct. 1—No House Programme—Cleveland Says Repeal or Nothing.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—The repeal bill will continue to be the absorbing topic of interest before congress this week. Notice of speeches to come have already been given sufficient to fill in the greater part of the week and others are known to be in course of preparation so that in the absence of an agreement of some kind there is no reason to believe that a vote on the bill can be reached this week. Senator Mitchell of Oregon is down for a speech Tuesday and may be expected to deliver a strong argument from a free coinage standpoint. Senator Shoup of Idaho will address the senate Wednesday in the same line, and Mr. Hansbrough of North Dakota and Mr. White of California will follow on the same day, if time permits, also with free silver speeches. Thursday Senator Daniel of Virginia will have the floor for the beginning of his speech, presumbly for conditional repeal, and this is as far as the programme in the senate has been fixed.

A Long Debate Probable.

Speculation is rife as to the length of the debate now progressing. Mr. George of Mississippi has stated that he expects to speak about two days, Mr. Jones of Nevada and Mr. Daniel of Virginia will each consume two days and Messrs. Morgan of Alabama and Stewart of Nevada will each speak one day. Even if a compromise shall ultimately be agreed upon, the final vote will not be taken earlier than about the first week in October. Some senators are of the opinion that the debate will continue until the middle of October.

In the present unsettled condition of affairs it is impossible to foretell what will be the programme of the house of representatives for a week ahead. The fact is, no course of action has been laid out by the leaders, and they are satisfied to let each session of the body take care of itself.

REPEAL OR NOTHING.

Cleveland Will Not Consent to Any Compromise Measure.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—President Cleveland absolutely refuses to consent to grant any concessions in the silver fight, says The Post. More than this, he will not promise to agree to any recognition of silver, even should the repeal bill be passed. This is the sum and substance of his position as reported by senators who had conference with him. It renewed the confidence of the friends of unconditional repeal, who asserted their unwavering faith in the final passage of the measure.

HOUSE ADOPTS RULES.

They Vary But Little From Those of the Fifty-second Congress.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—The house has adopted the code of rules which will govern it during the Fifty-third congress, subject to the decision of the committee on rules, which under the decision has an almost absolute power to direct the business of the body. The rules vary but little from those that controlled the Fifty-second congress.

After agreeing to the rules, the house at 3:50 p. m. adjourned until Saturday.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—The entire day in the senate was taken up by Mr. Stewart (Rep., Nev.) in making a free silver speech. The majority of the senators loafed in the cloak rooms during the time occupied in its delivery.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—Speeches from Democratic senators in the senate on the repeal bill were made by Mr. Faulkner of West Virginia, Mr. Turpie of Indiana and Mr. Jones of Arkansas. All of them were in favor of the repeal of the Sherman act, but coupled with the condition that silver should be restored to the position which it occupied prior to the demonetization act of 1873.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—The house only held a half hour session. The senate continued its silver discussion.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—Pugh of Alabama and Teller of Colorado occupied the time of the senate with speeches on the silver question. The house was in session only 40 minutes and transacted no business of any consequence.

AMBASSADOR TO GERMANY.

Theodore Runyon of New Jersey Gets a Plum—Other Nominations.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—The president has sent to the senate the following nominations:

Theodore Runyon of New Jersey, ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Germany.

Henry M. Smythe of Virginia, to be minister resident and consul general of the United States to Hayti.

Ablert S. Willis of Kentucky, to be minister to the Hawaiian Islands.

RUTH HAS A SISTER.

Mrs. Cleveland Gives Birth to a Girl Baby.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—For the first time in the history of the republic a president's wife has given birth to a child in the White House. Just as President Cleveland was the first chief executive to be married in the White House, so, too, is the baby upon whom the whole nation smiles lovingly, the first child of a president to be born under its roof. The event occurred at high noon Saturday, but it was some time later before the news was made public. Dr. Bryant, the family physician, attended Mrs. Cleveland. Mother and child are doing well.

DISCIPLINE AND CHARACTER.

A Tribute to the Austere Training Which Produced a Man Like Tryon.

To our minds the charm of Admiral Tryon's bearing in the hour of his fate is the perfection of the system which for centuries has bred men capable of his conduct and his death. They have not had his opportunity of being visible, not his strangely scenic surroundings, not perhaps the temperament which could have inspired them to that farewell in the moment of disappearance, but there have been hundreds of men in the navy, and even in the merchant service, who would have died as bravely as he did.

It is the tradition of both services—not, we think, the order—that the highest in rank on a ship in peril must be the last to quit the vessel; that, as occurred a few years ago, even a stowaway, who is almost a criminal in sailors' eyes, must take precedence of the captain in securing safety. The origin of the rule is, we fancy, policy—that the state or the owner be protected by the captain's authority to the last—but it has become an etiquette and a pride, and in the records of hundreds of wrecks you will find few in which it was ever broken. "The captain was the last to leave the ship" is the end of almost every telegram of marine disaster.

In other words, discipline has continued for centuries under the pressure of the same necessities, and the same ideas, has extinguished in a class by no means devoid either of faults or vices, a most natural and tempting form of selfishness has induced a whole series of men, many of them hardly educated, to face a slow and painful form of death rather than fail in the performance of a professional duty. That is a wonderful result of training, and it is one which makes those who see it clearly doubt whether the modern world is altogether in the right path.

The old ideal for the formation of character was discipline, hardship, pressure, alike from the law and from teachers and from opinion, and it certainly produced many of the virtues, especially that one of obedience, which the world everywhere but on shipboard—where there are few unrealities and men carry their lives in their hands—has taken to despising. The modern idea is that discipline even for children is an oppressive thing; that it turns men into machines, and it quenches individuality—that it is, in short, unpleasant, whereas pleasantness is the end of life.

We see the result of the change in the disappearance of many forms of oppression, and a lighter atmosphere for men to move in, and we see it also in the slow disappearance of many noble elements in character. The old system, working with good material, produces as its perfect result Admiral Tryon. The new, working also on the right material, produces the British agitator.

Admiral Tryon was no doubt a brave man and gentleman without help from the service or its traditions, but the service had annealed his character into what it was, something for a nation to be proud of, which would hardly have been exhibited or have existed amid the indiscipline and softness of civil life. When one hears of such a man so meeting such an end, it is difficult not to doubt whether liberty as now interpreted is such a perfectly good thing; whether instant obedience to command is not better training; whether pressure from all sides, from service rules, opinion and hardship together, does not weld men into something worthier of the aspirations which, while men have consciences, they never quite get rid of.—London Spectator.

Caste In a Bootblack.

The idea of caste and class extends even to the bootblacking fraternity. This is illustrated by a recent occurrence in Broad street.

An Irish shoe polisher has a stand in front of Delmonico's old restaurant. Not long since he entered a broker's office to render professional services. In his absence a dandy young negro seated himself in the chair and awaited his return.

When the bootblack again appeared on the scene, he was horrified. As he approached his stand the negro said, "Shine 'em up, please, and be quick about it."

"Not if I know myself," replied the bootblack, with an oath. "Get out of that chair," he continued. "It's bad enough for me to be shining boots all me life, but I've got this to say—I never shined shoes but for one of my own color."—New York Herald.

Points About Needles.

The great sail needle, which has to be pushed with a steel palm, would puzzle most people; so, too, the broommaker's needle, which must also be pushed with a steel palm. The curious knitting machine needle, with us latchet; the arrasene and crewel needles, and the needle for shirring machines; the weaver's pin for picking up broken threads, with an open eye in the hook. The needle, as we see it today, is the evolved product of centuries of invention. In its primitive form it was made of bone, ivory or wood. The making of Spanish needles was introduced into England during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Point by point the manufacture has improved.—L. G. Vance in Ladies' Home Journal.

The Christian Name.

The term "Christian name" is used in England and America only. "Baptismal name" is used in other countries. The terms seems to have been used first after the reformation, when Biblical names were used as a reaction against the use of the saints' names in the calendar. It is evident that all Biblical names are not Christian, but the reaction went so far as to consider everything in the Bible as Christian and everything not in the Bible as pagan or certainly nonchristian.—New York Evening Sun.

The Passing Rage For Gilding.

A bottle of gilding in the hand of vogue is more dangerous than the proverbial pot of paint in the hand of a woman. The latter daubs every available useful article within reach in the name of freshness.

But fashion smears as copiously, and this in the name of high art. We have watched with a shudder prim New England splint bottomed chairs brought from the attic to be dressed in a coat of imitation gold. We have seen all sorts of incongruous articles, including rolling pins and potato mashers, filling their plebeian pores with this outward and visible sign of the Keeley cure. And now the depths are literally sounded—fishers' nets are dragged from the sea and gilded.

Not that all cheap effects are mean any more than all mean effects are cheap. The gilding only adds to the expense of fish netting, which is really popular with artistic folks "in its natural state" because of its soft gray coloring and inclination to hang gracefully. It charming acquisition to the list of pensive draperies.—New York Times

Hard Stories to Find.

A district visitor of wide experience among the ill and the ignorant finds it no easy task to read to her "poor things." They want something bright and moderately cheerful. It must be short and direct, and the langage simplicity itself. One doesn't realize till one is placed in such a position how few of these books there are. Miss Wilkins' stories were found to fit all requirements. The most illiterate could grasp them. The most fastidious invalid could be brought to listen without fatigue. They and they only were precisely what was needed.—Exchange.

Most Young Men Are Afraid of Babies.

"The average young man," said a traveler, "has no great fondness for young children. I don't know how many times I have heard a mother who was carrying a little child, and who had halted in the aisle of a railroad car say, referring to the vacant seat and addressing the young man by the window, 'Is this seat taken?' And I don't know how many times I have seen the young man's face lengthen as he answered politely, 'No.' The mother takes the seat and the young man begins to grow restless. He reads the paper still, but he keeps his eye on the baby, and you may be sure the baby has its eye on him—a beaming, good natured eye it is, too—and the young man finds it not the easiest thing in the world to appear wholly unconstrained with attention thus drawn to him, but he makes a bluff at it and does pretty well until the infant moistens one chubby fist in its mouth and reaches out to make a print of it on the lapel of the young man's coat. Then the young man rises. 'Madam,' he says, 'let me give you this seat,' and he steps out into the aisle. And he doesn't look for another seat in that car. He makes a bee line for the smoker."—New York Sun.

The Food We Eat.

Hardly a day passes that we do not receive some shock, that we are not asked to give up some favorite dish around which clusters a host of tender early memories, and after eating of which we have for 20 years on end felt ourselves grow fat and childlike and undyspeptic. But the modern hygiene says it must go, and if we retain it on our list we do it in an anxious and guilty mood sure of itself to beget internal trouble.

Seemingly simple things like dry toast, oatmeal and apples we have heard forbidden of late as hard to take care of, and bananas, or, for example, the delicious, but as we supposed deadly, fried bacon cried up as food for babes and sucklings. This is puzzling—it goes against personal experience, it upsets all our dietary plans and pleasures, and it awakens the shrewd suspicion that mere fashion is at the bottom of the change.—Hartford Courant.

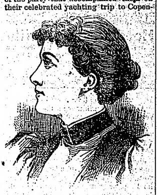
Cold Air In Place of Ice.

I predict that 10 years from now the familiar ice wagon will be a novelty upon the streets of a city, so general will have been the adoption of artificial refrigeration. For a long time brewers, pork packers and storage men have been independent of the ice crop, and the introduction of the cold air pipe lines down town has supplanted the use of ice in hotels, restaurants and barrooms except wherein it is desired to make a display of the crystal commodity. In time the distribution of cold air will be as general in cities as is gas or water, and the system will be perfected whereby the refrigerating gas necessary for attachment to a family refrigerator will be delivered in a tank just like carbonated water is to the soda fountains, once a month or as required.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

MAY BE BALFOUR'S BRIDE.

Miss Margot Tennant Is a Favorite With English Statesmen.

If Arthur Balfour, the Tory leader and nephew of Lord Salisbury, should marry Miss Margot Tennant, as rumor says he intends to do, he will secure for a wife one of the cleverest and most conspicuous woman in London society, a woman, moreover, whose ability to manage men and affairs will be of immense advantage to him in his political career. It is no rare thing at an entertainment to see her surrounded by a circle of grave and reverend statesmen of both parties, who apparently forget their age and dignities under the charm of her big dark brown eyes and witty, quizzical tongue.



MISS MARGOT TENNANT.

She was a great favorite with the late Lord Tennyson, as she is yet with Mr. Gladstone, and she was the life and soul of the party that accompanied them on their celebrated yachting trip to Copenhagen, where Gladstone had his interview with the czar. Nothing more amusing can be imagined than Miss Margot's account of the rivalry that existed between the grand old man of politics and the grand old man of poetry, the one anxious to talk all the time and the other equally desirous to read incessantly his favorite poems aloud until weariness induced every one of the listeners to glide softly away, leaving the laureate reading aloud all by himself at one end of the boat and Gladstone talking all alone at the other end.

During the Emperor William's last visit to London Miss Tennant made a wager that she would force him to speak to her, and by a clever maneuver she succeeded in doing so while riding in Rotten row. So pleased was he with the acquaintance thus formed that he subsequently waltzed several times with her at the state ball in Buckingham palace.

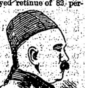
Her father, Sir Charles Tennant, who owes his baronetcy to Mr. Gladstone, is the head of the great chemical firm which boasts of the loftiest chimney in Scotland. His country house, "The Glen," is exquisitely situated on the banks of the Quarl, near Peebles.

Miss Tennant recently gave a ball at her father's house in Grosvenor square. The gathering was remarkable for the number of distinguished men, among others Lord Rosebery and Mr. Gladstone. Mr. Balfour's marked attentions to his charming hostess were the means of reviving the rumors of their engagement which were current about a year ago.

A MAN OF DIGNITY.

The New Chinese Minister Has Supreme Power Over His Legation.

Yang Yu, the new Chinese minister to the United States, Peru and Spain, brings a gorgeously arrayed retinue of 82 persons. With him came also Mrs. Yang Yu and their three children, two girls and a boy, but the mother is very exclusive, and few people have a chance to cultivate her society. The children will no doubt soon take the place held in the curiosity of the people of Washington by little Miss Mi, the daughter of the late minister, though they will not possess the same distinction of having been born in our national capital.



YANG YU.

Yang Yu differs most from the ordinary Chinese in wearing a mustache, which is black, slightly tinged with gray. He is 53 years of age, thickset and portly, and carries himself with the air of a man accustomed to lord it over others. He is extraordinarily clothed both in apparel and authority, and from a Chinese standpoint is a man to be reverently kotowed to. His raiment is of the most gorgeous brocaded silks, and his power is practically supreme over the legations of the three countries to which he is accredited. He appoints consuls at San Francisco, New York, Havana, Matanzas and Callao and charges d'affaires at Madrid and Lima and is responsible only to the emperor for the manner in which the offices are conducted.

Minister Yang has the implicit confidence of the Chinese government. Two years ago he was appointed to investigate the riots against foreigners at Ching Kiang, and the international complications arising from the outrages were all settled on the basis recommended by him. He is a man of advanced ideas, with a friendly regard for the United States, and will do his utmost to maintain cordial relations with our government. He speaks no other language than Chinese, but will have the assistance of good interpreters. One of them is Man Yew Chung, a graduate of Yale, who was coxswain of one of the famous university crews in his collegiate days.

Grand Opera Under Difficulties.

The hushing down of applause during the progress of a Wagnerian opera appeared rather to disconcert Mr. Lassalle, who, on making his first appearance this season in "The Flying Dutchman" at Covent Garden last week, was received absolutely without a hand. Between the acts, however, he was accorded as much applause as he could have desired. The performance of "The Flying Dutchman" must have been considered a strange one by any members of the Wagner party who may have been present. Some of the artists, in accordance with Italian precedent, sang to the footlights instead of to each other, the band, conducted by the Italian Mr. Mancinelli, went at it with vigor, the drummer particularly making a night of it, while the hitches in the stage arrangement were often very laughable.

To see several men walking in the trough of the sea pulling along the gigantic phantom ship of the Dutchman, calling to each other "Get on!" and "Whoa!" as the vessel from time to time struck on a rock, was amusing enough. Mild wagers were laid that the Flying Dutchman would never get to land at all, and indeed Mr. Mancinelli laid down his baton and stopped his band while the ship was being maneuvered. It was not the fault of Mr. Lassalle, for he clearly could not be expected to walk the waves. In the last act, too, the ship absolutely refused to smash up, and it was left still swimming the ocean when the curtain finally fell.—London Figaro

A Fresh Word on Iced Drinks.

"At this season it will be in place," writes a physician in a paper on household chemistry, "to say something as to the wholesomeness of the extremely cold water, tea, lemonade, etc., which are so extensively used in this country. It must be acknowledged that medical men are not in possession of facts sufficient to form a positive conclusion, and many adopt the opinions which agree with their desires. It cannot be denied that one may become a toper in nonintoxicants as well as in intoxicants and that it is easy to create by habit a strong desire for frequent drafts of very cold water.

"With some persons the perspirative function is so active the effect is less serious, but in the majority of cases these abundant cold drafts disturb the stomach, and it would certainly be better if one could learn to be satisfied with water at a temperature of 50 degrees F. rather than 40 degrees and to limit somewhat the amount taken. There is some indication that the medical profession is losing its confidence in the merits of effervescing (carbonated) beverages such as soda water."

An English View of America.

The announcement that an influential syndicate has been formed in Brixton to send an expeditionary force of pickpockets to the World's fair is a little belated. Gratifying to national pride it will be no doubt as showing that English spirit of enterprise still springs fresh and vigorous in the Brixtonian breast. But from the point of view of commercial speculation it is to be feared that the syndicate has been as completely whipped by American firms as have all previous exhibitions by the White City. Considering that the ashes of Christopher Columbus were all but stolen on the very opening day, and that the czar of Russia's jewels and the queen of Italy's lace have disappeared outright, we gravely doubt whether English competition will have much chance. Obviously native talent has every advantage of local knowledge, and though we could see the adventurers cross the Atlantic without a sigh we should advise them in their own interest to confine their operations to the narrower sphere of Brixton.—Pall Mall Gazette.

To Sue the Rainmakers.

James Butler, a Lyon county farmer, has had papers prepared for a very peculiar suit. Some weeks since a great cloudburst in his neighborhood caused the destruction of Butler's wheat crop. A few days later A. B. Montgomery, a rainmaker, being at Goodland, claimed to have caused the cloudburst, which came without warning from the barometer.

Now Butler proposes to make Montgomery's rain company pay the damage. The same storm caused a washout on the Santa Fe line, and a terrible wreck followed, in which an engineer was killed. The wife of the dead engineer will also bring suit against Montgomery for $10,000 damages.—Kansas Cor. Philadelphia Press.

An Old Fashioned Sleigh.

The sleigh which the Canadians presented to the Duchess of York as a wedding present is a large, old fashioned three seated affair, which was more fashionable 20 years ago than now. But it is the pattern that she expressed a wish for. It is made of second growth ash, overlaid with curved panels of mahogany. It has high single steel runners painted scarlet, and has a dark blue body striped with red. It is trimmed with dark blue cloth and has solid silver mounts.

Fined For Laughing In Church.

A curious case was tried at Cranbrook the other day, when four young men were fined 12 shillings each for laughing in church. It seems that a man fell asleep and snored so loudly that the church official had to wake him up. The sleeper on being aroused was so startled that the young men could not control their amusement. The parish clerk admitted that he had smiled, but in spite of this the offenders were fined.—London Tit-Bits.

Waste That Is Now Valuable.

A generation ago there was hardly a mill of any kind that was not troubled with a heap of rubbish or waste material that it did not know what to do with. Silk manufacturers saw the rise of this heap with annoyance, and they took it as a favor if any one would cart it away and use it as a fertilizer. An English inventor guessed at the possibilities in this pile of refuse and set about inventing machinery to utilize it. Today, as a result of his foresight and genius, 5,000 persons are employed in making the finest silk plushes, ribbons and velvets from the refuse piles of silk mills, and the inventor has grown rich.

The cottonseed oil industry is a better known illustration of economizing waste, but the dimensions to which the industry has grown are not so generally known. The annual product in oil, cake, lint and hulls from cotton seed, which a generation ago was allowed to rot, is $27,000,000, and it could be made greater if there was a market for the product.—Philadelphia Press.

The Arab's Donkey.

One sees Arabs coming into Constantinople with a donkey load of wood, which they sell for 8 francs. They have come 25 miles with it, sell it, and next day ride the donkey back. As a meal costs them but 2 cents, the wood nothing, and the donkey does all the work, what seems a small profit is really a good one. And who is it that earns it?

All saddle beasts in the east go what our Anglomaniacs call "artificial" gaits; in fact, three-fourths of all the animals in the world do so. Mules which are ridden always "sidle" or amble, all donkeys running-walk, rack or amble. But nowhere except in our southern states have these gaits been studied as an art, improved on and bred from.—Colonel T. A. Dodge in Harper's.

Marrying For Pity.

A fair maiden who had weathered the blasts of some 35 summers was informed by a booby that unless she married him he would blow the top of his head off. It's a pity she didn't let him do it. Heads of that kind ought to be blown off every time. That is what they are for. But Desdemona pitied Othello, and this fair maiden pitied her lover and went to the parson's with him. That was only a month ago, and now if he wants to kill himself she will present him with the best silver mounted pistol in the market.

Marriage is a solemn contract, and it is better to think twice before signing it.—New York Telegram.

All Right.

Two men became engaged in a fight in the street. Instantly their hats went off and rolled in the dust. One of the men was entirely bald, and the other had a thick head of hair. The bald man seized the other by the hair and began to drag him about.

"Stop him!" cried a bystander.

"Why should you stop him?" asked another. "He's only practicing the golden rule."

"The golden rule? What do you mean?"

"Why, he's doing to the other man what he wishes to goodness the other man might be able to do to him!"—Youth's Companion.

Good Enough For a Beast.

A droll little story is told of Mr. W. S. Gilbert. He put up his horse one day at a small country inn, on the signboard of which was painted conspicuously the notice, "Entertainment for man and beast." When his lunch was brought, he looked dissatisfied, and surprised the waiter by saying, "This is all very well so far, but where is the entertainment for the man?"—London Tit-Bits.

His Way of Settling Debts.

While I was reading the London papers in a comfortable chair at the Colonial club not long since two studious looking visitors went by. ODD FELLOWS AT THE FAIR.

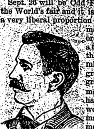
They Will Assemble From All Sections on Sept. 26.



E. S. CONWAY.

Sept. 26 will be Odd Fellows' day at the World's fair and it is expected that a very liberal proportion of the 800,000 members of the order will be in attendance on that day. Committees of the grand lodge and grand encampment of Illinois have been at work for months making arrangements for the reception and entertainment of visiting Odd Fellows. E. S. Conway, grand master of Illinois, has taken a strong personal interest in the celebration, and as chairman of the joint committee of arrangements has done much to make it successful.

Though Sept. 26 has been especially designated as Odd Fellows' day at the exposition, the programme has been arranged for a grand four days' celebration, commencing on Sept. 25, when a grand parade of all branches of the order, including the sovereign grand lodge and the grand lodge and grand encampment of Illinois, will march along Michigan avenue, countermarch and be reviewed by the civic authorities and grand officials of the order opposite the Columbus statue.

On the 26th Odd Fellows and their guests will be conveyed by boats from Van Buren street pier to Jackson park, the whaleback Christopher Columbus being reserved for members of the sovereign grand lodge and their friends. The Odd Fellows' fleet, escorted by the United States warships Michigan, Blake and Johnson, will make a naval parade down the lake as far as Lincoln park and thence back along the beautiful water front to the pier at Jackson park.

At the reception to be given in the afternoon in Festival hall there will be music by the Columbian orchestra and speeches by Grand Master Conway, Mayor Harrison, Director General Davis and others. During the day the Patriarchs Militant will have competitive drills for prizes in the arena, and the Daughters of Rebekah will have exercises in Music hall. In the evening the sovereign grand lodge will have a banquet in the New York state building, after which there will be a display of fireworks on the lake and a costumed parade of all nations in the plaisance by electric light. The grounds will be kept open till 8 o'clock in the morning of the 27th.

The Patriarchs will finish their drills and receive their prizes in the government plaza in the afternoon of the 27th. On the 28th the sovereign grand lodge will hold its adjournment meeting in the Woman's building, and in the evening there will be a reception, ball and banquet in the New York state building.

"FARAWAY MOSES."

One of the Most Conspicuous Characters In the Midway Plaisance.

In the Turkish village at the World's fair a fine looking old man, dressed in a rich Ottoman costume, greets visitors so cordially that he is apt to set them wondering where they ever met him before. If they ever have met him before, they do not wonder, for it must have been on the shores of the Bosphorus, and if they have ever met him there they never could forget him. It is possible that some of his cordiality may be due to a notion on his part that he may have met the visitors before and does not wish to seem to have forgotten them.

He has met a good many of them, and his memory is surprisingly good, but it would be quite impossible for him to remember all the Americans he has met and done good offices for during the past 50 years, for the list includes all our distinguished citizens who have visited the east, and a great many who were not particularly distinguished, besides all the naval officers who have been in our Mediterranean squadron, from Farragut and Porter down to the present time. He is the famous "Faraway Moses," immortalized by Mark Twain and "Sunset" Cox, and considers himself the particular friend of all Americans, and all Americans particular friends of his.

FARAWAY MOSES.

His friendly greeting indicates this, and his record proves it. For more than 50 years he has been the guide and counselor of Americans visiting Constantinople, and many an unlucky wight ignorant of the peculiar customs of that land of misrule is indebted to Faraway Moses for getting out of [illegible] unfortunate scrape. This has not [illegible] unprofitable to Moses in a pecuniary [illegible] well as a sentimental way, for of the round million at which his fortune is reckoned, he doubtless owes a great deal to his friends from the United States.

It is remarkable that no one seems to know any other name for him than Faraway Moses, the name Mark Twain [illegible] he was so proud of, though he is said to be [illegible] still well preserved physically [illegible]

From Appearances All the Races of Man Are Just Now in a State of Doubt or of Revived Enthusiasm—Claims of the Buddhists—Some Coming Celebrations at the World's Fair.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 15.—[Special.]—No event for years, possibly no event in history, has proved so sudden and surprising a success as this Congress of Religion, and its projectors were almost carried off their feet by it. It is not generally known, but the scheme resulted from a sort of accident, and its inception and evolution were on this wise: First, as soon as congress voted that Chicago should be the place for the fair the ministers of this city by a common impulse resolved that they would waive all claims to a summer vacation and not only do their best, but call in extra help. They have kept the promise nobly and I am sorry to add that the people have appreciated it a little too well to suit my convenience. I have not been able to get within ten yards of a hearing at Mr. Moody's, and at Dr. Barrows' church I found at least 400 people leaving for want of room.

It was decided also that tent meetings should be held near the fair's gates and that so far as possible the missionaries of the various societies should have their home vacation and that there should be preaching by them in Turkish, Greek, Italian, Chinese and possibly some of the India languages. Only part of this programme has been carried out, for the plaisance people are confessedly the most irreligious of their several races and Sunday is the day when they do their wildest, as, though the gates are open, no other part of the fair is really on exhibition. Out of this plan, however, grew that of a religious congress and to Dr. Barrows more than any other one man must the credit be given. The world was ripe for it. It appears that all the races of man are just at this time in a state of doubt or a state of revived enthusiasm and are either ready to re-examine the grounds of their faith or eager to set them forth to others.

The Japanese are in effect a nation of agnostics. Their higher classes express disbelief in any supernatural agency whatever or a cool indifference to all faiths. There is a general skepticism in China. The missionary spirit seems to be reviving again among the Mohammedans, but among their most active men religion has taken on a semi-scientific cast. Babu Protab Chunder Mozoomdar, the first Hindoo to give his views here, says that the progressive Hindoos hold almost exactly the same views as the Unitarians of this country. He is the founder of the Brahmo Somaj, or worshippers of the one supreme God, and is at present the guest of some religious families here. The Buddhists in like manner admit that new movements are going on among them and smilingly claim that there are more Buddhists in the United States than there are Christians in China and Japan. In short the whole world is in a state of religious unrest and the parliament was an assured success almost as soon as it was proposed.

The missionaries in heathen lands were unanimous in its favor, the great leaders of Christendom nearly so. The names of those willing to serve on the advisory board soon reached 1,500. Prominent among its promoters in distant lands are such men as Professor Isaac T. Headland of the Imperial university at Pekin, Rev. J. S. Chandler of Madura, South India; Rev. George D. Marsh, American missionary in Bulgaria, Rev. George T. Candlin of Tientsin, China; Rev. Yoshijas Hiraiwa of the Methodist seminary in Tokyo and leader among the native Christians, and others. The leading native members of the bar in India took a great interest in it and one of them, still a devout Brahmin, wrote, "The time is at hand when the best religion must come to the front." Of course he added that he did not fear comparison. Of the old and retired missionaries it is claimed by the managers that every one has been an enthusiastic advocate of the congress.

Mozoomdar, as the Babu above named is usually called, arrived a week before the congress convened. With him came H. Dharmapala, who is the guest of prominent Christian families, and Veerachand Gandhi, who is the honored guest of Dr. Barrows. He is a priest of Jainism and was elected a representative here by his fellow priests. He has not yet said enough for us to comprehend the difference between Jainism and Buddhism or Brahminism. Another of that party is B. B. Nagarkar, Brahmin priest, who is the guest of Marvin Hughitt, well known in railroad circles. All these gentlemen speak English with clearness and fluency and are not at all backward in giving their views to newspaper men. As they traveled together from India by way of London, did the World's fair together and are sociable and pleasant guests in the same Christian families, it would seem that there is not such a painful separation of sects as we had supposed "on India's coral strand."

Ottoman Empire day at the fair was the seventeenth anniversary of the accession of Sultan Abdul Hamed I. to the Turkish throne and every Turk, Egyptian and loyal Armenian got himself up regardless. Somewhat to my surprise a few Greeks also took an interest in it, as there are still nearly as many Greeks in Turkey as in Greece. The Dutch celebrated on the birthday of little Queen Wilhelmina and their orators told us some very good things about the Dutch settlement of New York and how they established religious liberty in the new world. Today the railroad representatives are making a grand racket over the formal opening of the Manchester railroad sixty-three years ago. New Mexico has her little demonstration tomorrow, but it is stated that fewer people are here from that territory than from any other or any state in the Union. The native Mexicans are not attracted [illegible] and the Americans [illegible] miners feel tolerant [illegible] come, the old man eloquent, Colonel Richard W. Thompson, will also be with us and give us his personal recollections of the day in 1816, when Indiana was formally admitted to the Union. Of course Governor Matthews, his brows bound with the laurels of the late militia victory at Roby (where the prize fighters retreated without firing a shot) will lead the procession. The granger states are now swelling the ad[miss]ions well up towards the 200,000 ma[rk]. The stock pavilion is jammed [illegible] great cow contest and steam churn attract even larger crowds than the Art palace.

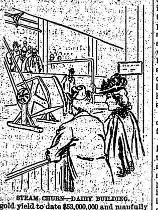
By fits and starts, as it were, I have been searching out Canada's exhibits in all the buildings for a month and trying to get them classified. This for two reasons—I just naturally like the Canadians and they have so far outdone expectations that a special feature should be made of their show. In the fisheries it is of course to be taken for granted that they excel all others, as that is their specialty; but it is really a surprise to find them so near the head in horticulture. The finest apples come from the Annapolis valley in Nova Scotia, and Ontario displays thirty-eight varieties of that fruit with 1,400 bottles of preserved fruits, including such things as strawberries, peaches, pears, raspberries and others we are accustomed to think of as southern fruits. Still more surprising is the fact that cold Quebec displays seventy kinds of fruits, including many fine apples, and that the native wines of Canada are ranked high by the judges.

In like manner display of agricultural products was only what was to be expected, as that is her great industy. Her 10,000 square feet in the mines department is thickly set with displays of nearly all known minerals, gold, coal and nickel leading in importance. The survey in the remote northwest is far from complete, but it is known that in that prairie region there is coal enough to supply all the deficiencies of timber and run the manufactures and transportation for many thousand years. British Columbia reports her gold yield to date $53,000,000 and manfully insists that the world must look to her for its future coin material, for she has just opened her quartz veins and learned how to work them profitably and by the formation knows that she has enough for the world's needs for ages. South Africa comes back at her with a statement that she has recently discovered and proved a gold reef twenty-three miles long, which contains more of the yellow stuff than was mined in California and Australia, both, and that before many years gold will again be "depreciated" as compared with silver. In fact she, South Africa, will take the contract to make it so. But as Kipling says, that's another story.



STEAM CHURN—DAIRY BUILDING.

It is matter for unceasing wonder that in the latitude of Winnipeg, where the ice is five feet thick, the valleys of British Columbia have the winter climate of Tennessee, with roots and fruits, grains and flowers to correspond. But here are specimens of them to prove it. She also has as much good lumber "in the green" as all the United States east of the Mississippi, a fish export to the value of $2,500,000 annually, inexhaustible beds of coal and fertile valley land sufficient, so she claims, to support the population of England in comfort. In short, according to her very gentlemanly but somewhat enthusiastic agent, if that province were settled like France is it would take a respectable rank among the second-class powers of the world. "No other country in the world, sir, is the equal of it for hops; it has just that moist, mild atmosphere of the great hop country in southeastern England, only better, and yet agriculture is, as I may say, only started."

It goes without saying that in the Forestry building Canada's exhibit is peculiarly fine. Her white and red pine have found their way to all parts of the world and her harder woods, which take so fine a polish, are almost equally noted. All the world has heard enough, however, of her far western forests; but it may surprise some to learn that the great hardwood forests of Ontario and Quebec are scarcely touched as yet, and that the production of maple sugar is a great industry. In the Transportation building Canada excels in sleighs, of course, and one of the curiosities there is a beautiful model of the sleigh presented by the women of Canada as a wedding present to the Duke of York and Princess May. Other curiosities are ice boats, snow shoes, folding boats, racing canoes, toboggan outfits and a dozen other things in the sliding line.

And all this brings me back to my favorite "fad"—that the inventions of men to overcome climate give far more pleasure than the climate gives pain, and therefore to really enjoy himself a man of wealth should winter in Montreal and summer in the Bahamas. Then he would have a steady thing and know what to depend on. Having tried both I'll take my oath that there is ten times as much fun in Minneapolis in winter as in New Orleans, for the furs and the sleighs, the hot drinks and the glorious dinners (and how a man can eat and drink there!) the life and vivacity and intellectual sparkle in that zero and below air far more than recompense one for any climatic inconvenience—that is, if he has plenty of money.

SHE SPOKE AT LAST.

A Schoolteacher Who Was Pestered by a "Masher" Turned on Him.

It was one of those frosty, nippy mornings when the pavements were icy and winds piercing. A small, plump damsel (by profession a schoolteacher), with rosy cheeks, might have been seen tripping along the slippery sidewalks of Kenwood. It was very early, not yet 8 o'clock, and the little schoolmarm hurried, followed by a middle aged man who had got off the car obviously to follow her.

"It's very slippery, isn't it?" he puffed as he overtook her.

The young woman's eyes flashed, but she only gave a little tug at her scrap of dotted face veil, thrust her hands determinedly into her muff and sped on.

A calling card, one of her own, was sticking out of her little jacket pocket, with only the first two words, "Miss Elizabeth," just visible and the last name obscured.

The stout man saw it.

"Your name's Elizabeth, isn't it?" he said cheerfully. "Do you know you remind me so much of Lena Morris? She was an old sweetheart of mine, and I was awfully fond of her."

No answer from the young woman except a quickening of her already Nancy Hanks gait.

"Don't go so fast," said her tormenter. "You might slip and fall. I really wonder that you are not afraid to venture out such a bad day."

Miss Blackeyes said nothing. She had about reached the drug store where she was to wait for her car.

As she went into the store with glowing cheeks, the dapper young clerk said, "Don't you want to come over by the stove and get warm?"

"I want to know why I am a target for every insolent man in town this morning," she snapped as she glanced through the door and saw the short, stout man patrolling the sidewalk and evidently still intent on pursuit. The drug clerk subsided, the car came, and on she got, with the man at her heels. He sat down beside her. When she arrived at her street corner, he arose and followed her out of the car. She had almost reached her school and was getting brave. Again he walked beside her and asked her if she wouldn't "say something to him."

Her voice had not a tremor, but was deliciously clear and steady as she spoke for the first time.

"Certainly," she said. "Do you know, I was just wondering if a man ever lived to be your age before—let me see, you must be 50 at least—who was capable of acting so perfectly idiotic. Now, for my part, I can tolerate a young, empty headed masher, but as for an old fool like you"— but the middle aged, short stout man had fled.—Chicago News.

Letters to Dead People.

Enterprising tradesmen in this city, in the distribution of their circulars, are not backward in utilizing the lists of distinguished persons which are printed in the newspapers from time to time. Not infrequently do they get hold of the names of men who long since passed over to that "undiscovered country," and circulars and prospectuses are mailed to the dead as well as to the living. It would seem that a name once enrolled on a tradesman's mailing list is never erased. Circular, letters, addressed to "Samuel J. Tilden" are still occasionally left at the Gramercy park mansion, and mail matter addressed to W. H. Vanderbilt reaches the Grand Central station every now and then. Many clubmen have recently received from a shirtmaker what purports to be an autograph letter saying: "I am anxious to have you for a customer, and I want to make you a sample shirt free of charge. Of course I cannot do this for every one, but for you it will afford me great pleasure to do so."—New York Times.

Old Rules For Night Policemen.

Old Boston is vividly brought to mind by the following excerpt from the "Selectmen's Minutes," dated Nov. 1, 1769, containing instructions to watchmen:

"In going the Rounds Care must be taken that the Watchmen are not noisy, but behave themselves with strict decorum, that they frequently give the Time of the Night and what the Weather is with a distinct but moderate Voice, excepting at Times when it is necessary to pass in Silence in order to detect and secure persons that are out on unlawful Actions.

"You and your Division must endeavor to suppress all Routs, Riots and other Disorders that may be committed in the Night and secure such Persons as may be guilty, that proper steps may be taken next Morning for a prosecution as the Law directs. We absolutely forbid your taking private satisfaction or any bribe that may be offer'd you to let such go or to conceal their offense from the Selectmen."—Boston Transcript.

Beware of "Cheap" Canned Stuff.

There is one great danger connected with preserved goods, and that is that the insane mania for cheapness at all risks which some women have has induced dishonest people to put inferior goods upon the market, but if a housekeeper is careful to buy none but the best and sees that they are properly prepared by her cook she need have no fear but that her tinned vegetables are as harmless as the same substances in their raw and natural state, and she will have the advantage of procuring an infinite variety for her table at a very small outlay both of time and money.—New York Tribune.

ALIENS IN PARIS.

The 60,000 Belgians are mostly day laborers, hatters and domestic servants.

The 14,000 Englishmen are in domestic service, mostly as coachmen and grooms.

The 35,000 Swiss are nearly all journeymen butchers, charcutiers, hotel waiters, painters and glaziers.

The Russians, 12,000 in number, are grouped around the Gobelin districts and in the Val de Grace quarter, and are either tanners, saddlers or students.

Nearly all the laborers employed at the Metropolitan gas works and slaughter houses, as well as by the city sewer department, are of foreign nationality.

The 40,000 Germans are to be found chiefly among the liquor dealers, hotel keepers and clerks of merchants and bankers. Their headquarters are in the Faubourg Montmartre.

The Italians, who are quite as numerous as the Germans, affect the districts around the Jardin des Plantes and the St. Victor quarter. They are, as a rule, plumbers, glaziers, street musicians and artists' models.

The American contingent of foreign residents numbers about 4,000 and is mostly settled in the neighborhood of the Arc de Triomphe. They may be described as the most aristocratic portion of the foreign colony.—Boston Globe.

THAT little baby seems to have had a mollifying effect on Grover. He is a great deal easier upon the vets since then in pensions matters.

THAT was a rich brown roast the boys gave the administration at Indianapolis last week in relation to pension matters, and it seems to have had a very salutary effect already.

THE home rule bill, Gladstone's greatest effort, is defeated in the British House of Lords—but it is not dead—the people will arise and make that body elective and the bill will triumph eventually.

Minneapolis Tribune: Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland will soon be puzzling their wits for a name for that new daughter and suggestions are in order. How would "Sylva" do?

Very pretty name all right enough but it would hardly suit Grover who is not a believer in "silver."

AND the senate continues its weary war of words on the Sherman bill, while the business interests of the country languish because, forsooth, it would be an act of "discourtesy" to choke off debate, (which by the way is utterly useless). But such is life in the Senate and the people must put up with it, we suppose.

THE Hon. Hoke has decided that his ruling in relation to the pension law of 1890 was decidedly too fresh and he has so modified his order in relation thereto that nearly 10,000 deserving pensioners who had been recklessly cut off will at once be reinstated in all their rights and privileges. Not much credit to Smith, however, as he was practically forced to do it.

THE financial and industrial condition continues to improve encouragingly and with the sure prospect of being able to get cash for wheat, it would seem as though the financial cloud which threatened the prosperity of Polk county was about to pass away. It is true that wheat marketed early will not command a very good price but wheat is excellent property to keep and all who are able to keep it awhile are liable to make a good thing.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Chicago Times aptly compares a session of the senate to a merry-go-round. At the appointed hour each senator climbs into his saddle. Adlai starts the machinery, and away goes the crowd, some with their faces to the front, some like Voorhees and Sherman, with their faces to the rear. The clerk reads a sing-song of bills, amendments and other trash, the senators fly faster and faster for two or three hours; then the machinery stops, the senators climb down and adjourn to the restaurant for lunch. This is called a session of the senate, and is repeated day after day without getting anywhere.

SOME writer in a Grand Forks paper suggests a way whereby farmers can sell their wheat and still get the benefit of the rise that is bound to come later. He argues something like this: "Supposing a farmer, whose crop at the present price would yield him $2,500 should sell his entire crop now, and use the $2,000 to pay up his debts then invest the $500 balance in options, later on he could sell out for more than enough to make a good profit on the entire crop."

Well, maybe, if everything worked all right. which don't most always sometimes occur in this world of ours, but if it did it would be gambling all the same and that is just what the farmer complains of—gambling in wheat. How could any conscientious farmer encourage the very evil he complains of by engaging in it himself?

The Warren Register shies its castor into the ring and takes a gentle whirl at Bro. Holston as follows: Some of the newspapers in this congressional district are jumping on Bro. Holston, of the Crookston Tribune with both feet, because, they say, he wants to go to Congress next term. Well, what of it? He is fully as well qualified as Boen or Halvorson. He would have something to say if he were in Congress. He has the gift of gab, and that is more than Boen or Halvorson possesses. But don't worry about it, gentlemen. The next Congressman from this district will be a sound Republican, and don't you forget it.

His bid was 8.69 cents per cubic foot on the Tamarac and 9.19 on the Sand Hill river. The commission passed a resolution requiring the successful bidder to furnish a bond of $50,000 for the faithful performance of the contract, and further required that 300,000 yards of the work shall be completed by Jan. 1, 1894, and the remainder by Aug. 1 of the same year. The other bids were as follows, the figures being in cents and fractions of cents.

The senate committee on public lands on Monday was the scene of a very spirited dicussion on the bill introduced at the beginning of the session by Senator Dolph, providing for the repayment of fees, purchase money and commissions paid on void entries of public lands. The intention of the bill is to refund half of the money to settlers who paid $2.50 per acre on alternate sections of the public lands within railroad land grants. The committee is divided upon the bill upon political lines, the republicans advocating and the democrats opposing it. Estimates of the amount involved as made by senators ranged all the way from $250,000 to $1,250,000. the committee adjourned without reaching a conclusion.

It was the pleasure of the writer, on Friday of last week to attend the annual meeting of the survivors association of the old 1st N. Y. Vet cavalry, held at Chicago. This association is composed of the surviving members of the old 27th N. Y. Infantry the 33rd N. Y. Infantry and the 1st New York Vet, cavalry which latter regiment was composed of the re-enlisted members of the two former with recruits to fill up the required number, 1200. This regiment left Geneva N. Y. in September 1863 for Washington, D. C. where after drilling awhile it followed its Col., R. F. Taylor into the Shenandoah Valley which was the base of its operations, and where many of its noble members bit the dust upon many an ensanguined battle-field, until late in the fall of '64 when it was sent into the Kanawha Valley with the 7th Va. cavalry, and this Valley was the scene of its operations until the close of the war. Here its Col. was promoted to the rank of Brigadier General and served, as he had ever done before with distinction. Col. Taylor went out with the old 33d N. Y. veteranized with his boys—what was left of them and led them again to the field as a cavalry regiment. This Chicago meeting was the first time the writer has had an opportunity to meet his former Colonel since we were mustered out at Rochester in 1865 and the emotions we experienced in taking the hand of the grizzled old veteran only an old soldier can know. About one hundred of the old boys attended the business meeting in the afternoon and in the evening sat down to a royal banquet, spread by our members who live in Chicago, and Sunday the boys were entertained by the Chicago members. The Chicago meeting will pass into the history of the oganization as one of the brightest spots in its existence and every participant will cherish a warm feeling for the generous hospitality of the Chicago boys.

Tariff and the Farmer.

The following is what the Northwestern Agriculturist, one of the soundest agricultural papers in the northwest, has to say about the tariff as it affects the interests of the farmers:

"Those who contend that the protective tariff does not help the farmer have a hard time explaining some features of the present situation. Manufacturers are threatened with a repeal of the tariff on their goods and hesitate about making more of the goods until that question is settled. If the repeal is made and the protection from foreign competition is taken off, of course the manufacture here will cease to be profitable and must stop, and in fear of such contingency the manufacturers are going slow now, and men are thrown out of employment.

Some of these, who have saved their good wages will buy farms. They cease to be buyers of farm products and become producers themselves. They are no longer customers but become competitors. They decrease the demand for the products of farmers previously in the business and add to the supply greater than the demand and down go the prices. Over nine-tenths of farm products are consumed by the home market—by people residing in the United States, making the protective tariff [illegible] or garden truck. It cannot increase the amount of exports of farm product for taking tariff off of imports is not the same as putting a bounty on exports, by a great deal, though many have been confused on that difference.

It may cause prices of farm products to go down so low that Europe can afford to buy American farm products then at European market prices, but which would the farmer prefer, to sell to Americans at American prices or sell to Europe at European prices?

He can sell to Europe now if he will take European prices, the tariff is not an export tariff. The only advantage to be gained at all is to enable the farmer to buy imported clothing at less than he can now, but the farmer is more able to pay $40 for a suit of European clothes while getting eighty cents for wheat than to pay $20 for a suit while getting forty cents for the same wheat. This is self evident, since the entire price of the wheat is not clear profit, the cost of producing being almost the same whether the price received is forty or eighty cents; it is the profit which clothes the farmer, not the gross price.

A few days ago a farmer was in a Minneapolis store and was told that he could buy a pair of shoes usually sold for four dollars now for three dollars. The farmer thought it over for awhile but finally turned away: "I'll never put six bushels of wheat on my feet, never," said he. The farmer who does not look beyond the first effects may imagine he has saved a dollar when by securing free trade he brings shoes down to three dollars instead of four, but—how many bushels of wheat are you willing to use on your feet? How much corn will you make into a coat? The present stringency is due as much to the threat of free trade times when six bushels of wheat will not buy one shoe, as it is any other cause."

Why Grow Old.

I find that if old people are put on a good meat diet in the way of strong soup, beef tea and animal food, and only just sufficient farinaceous food and fats and sugar to maintain the heat of the body, they increase wonderfully in energy and, as they often express it, feel 20 years younger. This is only natural; it is a food of energy—the food that builds up muscle, nerve and constitutional stamina.

The requirements of the system in old age as a rule are not great, and more harm is done by taking too much food than by taking too little. I have known people considerably over 70 to derive the greatest benefit from a thorough change in diet. It seems to rejuvenate them. Of course in old age care should be taken that the body is not subjected to rapid changes of temperature. When the nervous power is decreasing as the result of age and the system is losing its power of combating cold and strain upon its energy, a stimulating diet invigorates and is conducive to maintaining constitutional stamina better than any other.

Any natural death but from old age and general decay is an accidental death—that is, it is due to causes which might, and even perhaps could, have been entirely avoided and remedied in earlier years.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Gold In Maine.

That story of gold mining on Enchanted Ponds township is not by any means the first that has been heard about gold finds in the Moose river valley. As long ago as 1850 a man named Berry claimed to have found gold in a ledge in that region in such quantities that he "chopped out pieces with his ax, which he sold to Augusta jewelers." To be sure critical persons may say this statement is only that he sold the ax to the Augusta man, not pieces of gold, but why not gold in Enchanted township as well as in Byron, where there is no doubt about it? It has long been asserted that there is gold enough in the sands of Moosehead lake to pay good wages to those who will wash them for it.—Lewiston Journal.

Max Muller Decorated.

The sultan of Turkey has conferred the Order of the Medjidieh on Professor Max Muller. This is a merited tribute to the vast oriental learning and the deep interest taken by Professor Max Muller in the various eastern religions, and in Mohammedanism in particular. The present sultan, who is a somewhat mild and melancholy oriental of conservative tendencies, has little in common with that section of the official class in Constantinople who have been educated abroad and have adopted atheistic and revolutionary sentiments and ideas. He is devotedly attached to the Mussulman faith.—London Chronicle.

Raised the Gould Assessment.

The death of Jay Gould seems to have opened the eyes of the New York tax gatherers. The assessment on his personal estate has been raised from $500,000 to $10,000,000. While Mr. Gould was alive he could swear off his taxable estate after the manner of rich New Yorkers, but necessary post mortem disclosures of his wealth have made further swearing off impracticable.—Bangor Commercial.

Hamilton Fish was born in New York city Aug. 3, 1808. He graduated at Columbia college and was admitted to the bar in 1830. In 1842 he was elected to congress as a Whig. In 1846 he was defeated for lieutenant governor by the anti-renters. In 1848 he was elected governor over John A. Dix and R. H. Walworth. In 1851 he was elected United States senator. As senator he opposed the repeal of the Missouri compromise. In 1869 he was appointed secretary of state by President Grant and reappointed in 1873, serving two full terms.

MINING WAR PROBABLE.

The Minnesota Iron Company Forming a Combine.

DULUTH, Sept. 9.—That the Lake Superior consolidated mine is not to have its own way in the ore trade is evident from the action of the directors and managers of the Minnesota Iron company. Messrs. Porter, Morse, Ely and other leaders in that company will form an opposing consolidation of Mesaba mines, together with their own railway to the lake front. Already the Canton and three other mines, one of which is a large property, are in the agreement. Many individual holders of mining properties have been approached in the last few days with offers to buy, which unquestionably came from a Minnesota company source.

LOWER PRICES TO RULE.

The Big Minnesota Coal Combine Is Now a Thing of the Past.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 8.—The Minnesota coal combine has abolished its bureau of statistics and discharged its chief officer, John J. Rhodes. This organization, it was shown at the legislative investigation last winter, was formed to set a price on coal and prevent all St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth dealers from cutting rates. The abolition of the bureau kills the combine, and coal has already dropped 75 cents a ton.

LORDS OBJECT.

The Home Rule Bill Defeated by Over 400 Majority.

LONDON, Sept. 9.—The home rule bill was defeated in the house of lords last night by a vote of 419 to 41. An analysis of the vote shows that 25 bishops and both archbishops, who were present at the division, all voted with the majority. The vote was the largest ever recorded in the house of lords.

HOW TO SEE THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Suggestions as to the Most Convenient and Economical Method

When you go to the World's Fair do not take a trunk with you if you can possibly get along without it, but pack your few necessary traveling articles in a hand bag or grip and carry it along with you. You will never know what a lot of annoyance you have been spared in this way. Then get your tickets from Crookston to Chicago and the greatest Fair the world has ever seen, reading via St. Paul, and thence via "The Northwestern Line" to Chicago. The Northwestern line runs three superbly equipped trains from St. Paul to Chicago, leaving St. Paul at 8:00 a. m. daily, 6:25 p. m. daily except Sunday, 8:00 p. m. daily, making quicker time to Chicago than by any other line. When you arrive in Chicago you will find World's Fair omnibuses at the Northwestern line depot which will take you to the Van Buren street station of the Illinois Central road, where trains for the Fair leave every three minutes, and where World's Fair steamers can be taken for the Fair every ten minutes, or you can take a steam ferry from the depot of the Northwestern line direct to the same place via the Chicago river and, making connections with the famous whaleback steamer Christopher Columbus for the Fair for 25 cents. When you arrive at the Fair you will find a number of first-class hotels within a stone's throw of the main entrance and dozens of good restaurants where meals can be had to accommodate the most modest purse.

By following these simple directions your trip is bound to be a pleasant one. See that your ticket from St. Paul reads, via the Northwestern line, and remember that by this route you will obtain the best service, the greatest luxury, the most complete comfort. Be sure and buy your tickets at starting point.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA

S. P. SMITH, of Towanda, Pa., whose constitution was completely broken down, is cured by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. He writes:

"For eight years, I was, most of the time, a great sufferer from constipation, kidney trouble, and indigestion, so that my constitution seemed to be completely broken down. I was induced to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and took nearly seven bottles, with such excellent results that my stomach, bowels, and kidneys are in perfect condition, and, in all their functions, as regular as clock-work. At the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, my weight was only 129 pounds; I now can brag of 159 pounds, and was never in so good health. If you could see me before and after using, you would want me for a traveling advertisement. I believe this preparation of Sarsaparilla to be the best in the market to-day."

The Perfect Place to Dwell In.

We had always been hunting for it. We had always felt sure that somewhere, some day, we should find the perfect place which was to combine the charm of the middle ages with the comfort of the nineteenth century—the Albert Durer town which could be reached in a railway train, with medieval streets through which the dinner bell would make a pleasant sound, where there would be plenty of picturesque dirt in other people's houses, plenty of fresh water and clean rooms in our own hotel. Perhaps this is a bourgeois idea. But then that is our affair.

Eight years of wandering had brought us no closer to our undiscovered country, when, last summer, as we were traveling in the mountains of—but no! why should we tell the name? Why break the serenity of its hilly streets with the rush of personally conducted parties or of easel laden artists? Why turn it into another Barbizon or Laguerre's, another Chester or Nuremberg? Besides, we have exploited so many places in our day; we have, in our recklessness, presented the painter, the illustrator, the magazine writer with more motives than they can exhaust in a generation; we have, by our enterprise, developed the cycling trade to an incalculable extent, and by our praise made the fortune of half the hotel keepers in Provence. And the result for us? Not a cycle manufacturer would give us a machine if we asked for it, not a landlord would throw us a crust were we starving, not an art student would find a spare moment to thank us. No; the name of the most picturesque place in the world we shall keep to ourselves. It is foolish deliberately to court the fate of Columbus or Stanley.—Mr. and Mrs. Pennell in Century.

The Limits of Arbitration.

With international arbitration we confess to having comparatively little sympathy. If nations mean to fight, nothing will prevent their so doing, and agreements to arbitrate will be of very little service. The suggestion of an agreement between England and the United States to establish a permanent machinery for regulating their disputes is, however, quite different. Nations in whom the same racial characteristics are to be found, who are influenced by the same ideas, who talk the same language, read the same books and possess the same political traditions, are capable of making an agreement to settle disputes by arbitration a reality.

Again, an agreement not to fight till the question in dispute has been referred to a body exercising the functions of a court of law is a step in the direction of that alliance between the United States and England which, we trust and believe, is the destiny of the two countries. If we begin by an acknowledgment that we are not in the position of foreign powers—i. e., liable to war at any moment—we may soon rise to a definite race alliance, and lastly to that declaration of a common citizenship which would prevent any Englishman from being an alien in America or any American being an alien in England and would heal the breach in the unity of the race caused by the folly of George III and his ministers.—London Spectator.

Hideous Advertisements.

It is said that a salmon, when quite devoid of appetite, may be worried into taking a fly, if only flies be presented to him with irritating pertinacity. "Hang it!" he exclaims, "I cannot be troubled with this Jock Scott any longer"—he makes an irritable snap at it and is lost. Possibly in the same way persons are driven nearly wild by seeing this or that commodity thrust on their notice in railway stations, in trains, in the streets, in the fields, on the top of Ben Macdhui. Then they may purchase a sample in despair, may like it and go on using it. This may be the theory of frantic and hideous advertisements, but on the whole it might seem more likely to work its own destruction. "Whatever I buy I will not buy that," one can conceive the citizen remarking and looking out for a less obstrusive article. But if advertising did not pay people would not advertise.—London Saturday Review.

Very Fine Handiwork.

Dr. Heylin, in his "Life of King Charles," records that during the reign of Queen Elizabeth "there was one who wrote the Ten Commandments, the creed, the pater noster, the queen's name, and the prayer of our Lord within the compass of a penny and gave her majesty a pair of spectacles of such an artificial making that by the help thereof she did plainly and distinctly discern every letter."

A somewhat similar feat was that "rare piece of work brought to pass by Peter Bales, an Englishman, who also exhibited before her majesty the entire Bible written in a book, containing as many leaves as a full sized edition, but fitting into a walnut."—Boston Commonwealth.

Danger In Odd Nomenclature.

Anything out of the common in nomenclature runs the risk of being burlesqued by unskilled tongues. The nurse who called her charges Miss "Burial and Miss "Jones" must have made their mother wish she had never christened them Beryl and Joan. As Betsy and Jane they would have come off all right. Horses, too, with fine names get strangely miscalled in the stable. One pair known by their master as Rusteb and Sohrab degenerated first into "Rusty and Soreback," and fell ultimately into the commonplace as "the little horse and the Docthor."—London Globe.

It is hardly necessary to give a long list of reasons why the Rushford is the best. They have been made here at home in our own state for 34 years, and are increasing in popularity every year. They are made of fine material, handsomely finished, and their special pattern of skein make them run very light. It will pay you to investigate their merits.

You will soon want a Plow, and if you are wise you will buy a John Deere. We have them in 10, 12 and 14 inch gangs, steel and wood beam walking plows. We also have a nice line of heavy and light harness. We can beat everybody on the quality and price of harness. Advance Threshers and Engines still rank first. See them and be convinced.

A. J. Clark, a Becker county oldtimer, was in the city last week and favored the JOURNAL with a pleasant call. A. J. is running a newspaper in the Rosseau country—way down north somewhere near the British flag and they say he is getting out a hummer. (It wouldn't be Clark if he wasn't.) A. J. looks as fresh and rugged as he did when the writer first knew him in Detroit in 1876. He took a trip to St. Paul and return.

Polk county people who intend to go to the World's Fair should write to Ira M. DeCamp, Hotel Hayes, Cor. 64th street and Lexington Ave., and secure a room. Hotel Hayes is within a few blocks of the grounds and is ably managed by Mr. DeCamp who knows just how to take the best of care of his old Polk county friends and all you have to do is to give him about a week's notice ahead to secure all the comforts of a home. The hotel is right on the elevated road which makes it convenient to the business part of the city, and is Polk county head-quarters. Everybody goes there.

Try the Ideal once and you will use no other.

Prof. A. D. Wishard leaves next Monday for St. Hilaire to commence his duties as principal of the school at that place. The St. Hilaire people are fortunate in securing Mr. Wishard, who is a teacher of more than ordinary ability, as has been shown by his work in the different schools he has taught, viz., Red Lake Falls, Euclid, Fosston, Minn., and Coatsville, Ind. He holds a first grade certificate, but at the last examination held here he only wrote for a second grade, as that was all that was required of him.

Collins received a letter the other day from India, East Grand Forks or some other foreign nation, saying: "I saw a sample copy of your fine crop of wheat on the World's Fair ground and I would like some of that 73 bushel per acre, 68 lb. to the bushel wheat for seed. Please write me your price and also how you managed to raise such a crop. I would like to know your methods of farming so that I may become a profitable farmer like yourself." Thus it is that the fame of Polk county farmers has gone abroad throughout the earth all because Collins sent a specimen of his wheat crop to the World's Fair. Collins is now studying up all the agricultural books he can find so as to be able to write a treatise on the best methods of raising wheat so that he can answer the letter properly.

A. C. Rhinehart was down to St. Paul last week to put in a bid on the drainage work. L. W. Webb, of St. Paul had the lowest bid in and the work was awarded to him, provided he gives bonds in the sum of $50,000. Webb was a former resident of Polk County and owns a farm at Beltrami which he conducted for several [illegible] Rhinehart's bid was the third lowest and he may yet get the work as it is a question whether the other bidders can give the necessary bonds. It would be very much better for the farmers of this county to have a genuine resident get the contract for in that case they would have the first chance [illegible] work. We hope [illegible] Mr. Rhinehart [illegible] ers get the benefit of what is paid out for work.

The JOURNAL job rooms have been rushed to their utmost this week to keep up with our orders—but we got there just the same. That's what we like to see and we will try and keep up with the procession if there are printers enough to be had in the Northwest. Bring on the job work.

Very much of the stacking to be done, was done before the rain of Monday and the wheat yet in shock was intended to be threshed from shock. It is said that more wheat is in stack in Polk county than ever before. This is as it should be, there it is safe from rain and can calmly await a good price.

Walker, Jim Creighton, Fred Sargent, Dr. Van Duzen and Dr. Cooper, started for the Red Lake Indian reservation on Monday for the purpose of cruising for pine claims. B. has been appointed dept. revenue inspector to take the place of Ole Hanson, whom the vicissitudes of politics retires to private life T. B. has always been an uncompromising Democrat and has put in a great deal of work for the cause, and his appointment meets with general approval among the faithful. He will undoubtedly make a good officer for Uncle Sam, and if he does as well as his predecessor he will rank with the best of them.

A Good Thing to Keep at Hand.

From the Troy (Kansas) Chief.

Some years ago we were very much subject to severe spells of cholera morbus; and now when we feel any of the symptoms that usually precede that ailment, such as sickness at the stomach, diarrhœa etc., we become scary. We have found Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy the very thing to straighten one out in such cases, and always keep it about. We are not writing this for a pay testimonial, but to let our readers know what is a good thing to keep handy in the house. For sale by S. A WALLACE, Crookston, Minn.

Among the incidents of childhood, that stand out in bold relief, as our memory reverts to the days when we were young, none are more prominent than severe sickness The young mother vividly remembers that it was Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured her of croup, and in turn administers it to her own offspring and always with the best results. For sale by S. A. WALLACE, Crookston, Minn.

A little boy of Mrs. McDonald's, living near here, fell against a red hot stove and was fearfully burned. The pain was terrible, and it was thought the burn was so severe as to scar the child for life. I took the lady a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which after greasing the sore, she applied. It soon removed all the fire and eased the pain, and in ten days the boy was well, no trace of the scar remaining. J. D. McLaren, Keysport, Clinton county, Ill. For sale by S. A. WALLACE, Crookston, Minn.

Our Public Schools

Are the main-stay of our republic. In them are being cultivated the minds which are to be our future law-makers and leaders in every walk in life. How essential it is that these minds should be united to strong, healthy bodies. So many children suffer from impurities and poisons in the blood that it is a wonder that they ever grow up to be men and women. Many parents cannot find words strong enough to express their gratitude to Hood's Sarsaparilla for its good effect on their children. Scrofula, salt rheum and other diseases of the blood are effectually and permanently cured by this excellent medicine, and the whole being is given strength to resist attacks of disease.

Nearing the End.

Less than two months from today the World's Columbian Exposition will be closed, and all the grand sights of that flower and culmination of the material and mental develepement of the nineteenth century will be but a memory—yet a memory that will be recalled many times with pleasure. Do you wish that pleasure to be yours? Then you should make your arrangements soon to go to the World's Fair. The last few days of any great exhibition are apt to be unsatisfactory; the crowds are great, and some wheels in the machine are likely to be out of gear. Really if you have any ideas about plain bread and butter, if you are not satisfied to remain fixed all your days in one place, you cannot afford do miss a visit—short though it may be—to the World's Fair. In arranging for your trip you wish the railroad part of it to be safe, comfortable and speedy. This you can secure by asking your home ticket agent to supply you with a railroad ticket reading over the Burlington Route—Chicago, Burlington & Northern R. R., or address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Are You Nervous.

Are you all out, do you have that tired feeling or sick headache? You can be relieved of all these symptons by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla which gives nerve, mental and bodily strength and throughly purifies the blood. It also creates a good appetite cures indigestion, heartburn and dyspepsia.

VIGGO ULLMANN'S LECTURE

He Tells of the Work Being Done in Norway for the People.

The Scandinavians of this city and the adjoining country who were fortunate enough to hear the lecture in the opera house last Tuesday evening by Hon. Viggo Ullmann, the president of Norway's Storthing, (congress) enjoyed a treat, and learned many interesting things about the political situation in Norway.

Mayor Stephens occupied the chair, and after a national air by the Norwegian Glee Club, he called upon the Hon. Halvor Steenerson for an address. Mr. Steenerson explained briefly the position occupied by the speaker of the evening, and the principle which he stands for in Norway, viz. the rights of the people. He spoke of the wonderful advances made by Norway in the last 80 years, in art, science, literature, etc., and referred to the important part played by her children in the development of this country. At the conclusion of his address the chairman made a neat little speech in Norwegian, and introduced the Hon. Mr. Ullmann.

The speaker began by explaining that the struggle between Sweden and Norway was not a struggle between the two people, as it is often misrepresented to be, but between the royalists of Sweden and the liberals of Norway. In speaking of the recent struggle for a pure flag for Norway, that is, a flag without the union jack, which had met such bitter opposition from the Swedish aristocracy, he related how, little by little Norway's efforts in this direction had been crowned with success, and how at one time, while the pure flag floated from every merchant vessel in foreign and home harbors in proud majesty, the union flag still floated over forts and goverment buildings. But the victory is now won, and thanks to an act of parliament or Storthing, the pure flag now unfolds its bright colors above these places. He thought the union jack had no business on the red, white and blue surface of the pure Norwegian flag, and that the Swedish flag was good enough for the Swede and the Norwegian flag good enough for the Norskman. He spoke of the way Norway had been tossed about from Sweden to Denmark and from Denmark to Sweden in early history, but Norway had finally called "time" and was now on the road to regaining her just rights. The speaker paid eloquent tribute to Norway's famous poets and writers Messrs. Ibsen and Bjornson, and spoke of the feelings of national pride they had imbued the people with and also for promoting national freedom and liberty. He could not comprehend how a country producing such minds should submit to the unreasonable demands now forced on Norway by the king and his Swedish aristocracy.

The strife now going on between the two countries is for a separate minister of foreign affairs and also for a separate consular service. As it is at the present time, a Swedish minister has charge of these affairs, and it is needless to say that Sweden receives all the attention, while little Norway is left in the cold; which is a natural sequence as he is a Swede, and does not stand responsible to the Norwegian government for his actions. The speaker also related incidents where Swedish consuls promoted the interests of Sweden to the detriment of Norway, and this will never be tolerated by Norway who enjoys the enviable distinction of being the third merchant marine power in the world, besides these affairs can very well be attended to separately from Sweden, without injury to the union existing between the two countries. Anyway Norway bears the heaviest burden for carrying on these affairs by a good many thousand dollars per annum. He also spoke of the resignation of the Steen ministry, and the difficulty in forming a royalist ministry, opposed as it is by the Storthing and the majority of the people. He said he could not but admire the tenacity of this new ministry in its vain attempt at success for no sooner does it propose a certain measure than it suffers the most painful defeat. A Swede who is supposed to act as minister of foreign affairs for both countries is expected to be a Norwegian and a Swede at the same time, and he is a member of the Swedish and also of the Norwegian ministry, both. This man comes over from Sweden [illegible] handkerchief displayed in his breast pocket with the Swedish colors in one corner of it, suddenly he remembers that he is in Norway and is expected to be a Norwegian, he pulls out the Swedish handkerchief and replaces it with one bearing the Norwegian colors, and behold, we have the Norwegian minister of foreign affairs, [laughter]. We will suppose the Norwegian ministry resigns, being a member of it and expected to stand by it, what is this man to do; shall he stay or shall he go, or shall he stay and go both? This by way of illustration, to show how reasonable Norway's demands are. He spoke of the reduction in the king's salary, and said it was not unreasonable, as the amount deducted was an additional sum tendered Charles XV for his interest in and love for the Norwegian people. When the present king ascended the throne the people allowed this additional pay to continue, but as he so blindly ignores Norways rights, the people think themselves justified in taking back the generous donation. He spoke of royalty as only a figurehead to the nation, and that this talk of war was all bosh. The king would have to declare war, and being king of both countries, could not to good advantage declare war against himself, besides he could not get money from the respective parliaments to play war, and would hardly pay for that amusement out of his own pocket. Even should a Swedish army invade Norway, it would only be to drop their muskets and fall in to the arms of the Norwegians. He wanted the sympathy of Norwegians in this country, to encourage the struggle, and as an evidence that they had not forgotten their mother country. Expressing his pleasure at being able to address his countrymen in person, he concluded his interesting discourse by shaking hands with all present.

"Brownie" on Deck Again.

H. F. Brown having thoroughly fixed up the old stand on Second street, has taken possession, and is now ready to greet all his old customers and all the world in fine style. His stock of smoker's articles is full and complete, more than ever before. His store is a gem in its way, among the attractions he has a company of little elfs, "Brownies" he calls them, that are very attractive. His picture of the Crookston gun club, photographed from life, at a time when the club was in the field making desperate efforts to secure the first chicken under the game law, is a corker, and must be seen to be fully appreciated. The frantic efforts of Tom Morris to be first on deck are pathetic in the extreme, and the innocent confidence that T. G. Thompson has in his own prowess, that is reflected in his animated countenance is sublime, while the rest of the boys are losing no time in their efforts to catch the prize. You should see that picture. H. F. extends a cordial invitation to the smoking public to call upon him at the new stand.

Henry Berthiaume Drowned.

Henry Berthiaume, a former resident of this city, where he was for some time engaged in the jewelry business with his brother John under the firm name of Berthiaume Bros., was drowned Friday last. The following account appears in the Minneapolis Journal of the 16th, inst: "A dispatch this afternoon from Deer, River Minn., says that Henry Berthiaume, deputy sheriff of Douglas county, was drowned near the headwaters of the Mississippi river. The time is not stated. Berthiaume was one of a party of prominent citizens that left for a fishing and hunting tour last Tuesday. He was in a boat which capsized and his body did not come to the surface until he had expired. He leaves a wife and one child."

Moeckel-Netzer.

On Monday at five o'clock Mr. Ed. Moeckel was united for life to Miss Phuenie Netzer, at the residence of the bride's mother in the city. The happy couple left on the N. P. evening train for Ashland to visit the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Earnest Moeckel, accompanied by the best wishes of hosts of friends. Both have grown from childhood in our midst and have many warm friends here.

Polk County Soil.

The JOURNAL is informed of a real estate deal that transpired last Saturday when John C. Wells added another section of land to his farm at Edna, paying $10,000 in cold hard cash. Mr. Wells is one of the leading bankers of [illegible], Wis., one of those level-headed shrewd business men who know a bargain when they see it. Some years since he came into possession of the Geo. C. Reis farm at Edna. He acquired this property at a time when the impression seemed to be fully rooted in the minds of a great many that "the bottom had fallen entirely out of the farming business," when "there was no money in farming," when "the more land he had the worse off a man was." It was then that Mr. Wells made his bow to the Polk County farmers and became one of them. It is not reasonable to suppose that he, a life long business man in another pursuit would be a practical farmer, would know all about farming in a minute, and a failure in his case would not have been so very surprising—in fact not a few wise-acres there were who freely predicted such a result. Mr. Wells, however, while probably hearing more or less of this talk did not commence upon the house top to advertise his plans—he is not the man to shoot off his mouth very extensively, but he secured the services of a good practical farmer as manager of the estate and went to work upon the farm which, we believe, consisted of five sections of land, or 3200 acres in round numbers. The years that he has been farming have, it must be confessed, been the most discouraging for the farmers of any ever encountered since the settlement of the Red River Valley, and the fact that, in view of all the drawbacks he has encountered Mr. Wells now adds another section to his farm, speaks volumes in favor of the fertile soil of the Red River Valley. None but the most fertile soil would yield returns sufficient to induce a banker to withdraw funds from banking to engage in farming. Some farmers have an idea that if they were only bankers they would be all right—they would be making big money out of banking to engage in farming, and no one who knows Mr. Wells would suppose for a moment that he does that just for the fun of it and the fact that he now adds more land to his already large holdings is too significant to need comment. Mr. Wells is a keen-sighted business man who does business for the money there is in it. He can readily see the future that lies before this country and knows that the price he pays for this land at present figures is exceedingly cheap and will pay a large return. And there are many others who are quietly getting ready to buy, knowing that the time is soon coming when land can not be bought as low as it can this fall.

Land Office Decision.

The local land office has just rendered a decision in favor of the settler in the contest case of Alexander Fyffe vs Timothy Moore, involving a valuable tract (160 acres) in the town of Rosebud, in this county. It appears that the claimant settled on the land in the summer of 1883 under the pre-emption law, and later on transmitted his entry and made a homestead filing on the land. June 14th 1893, he appeared at the local office with his witnesses and offered final proof in support of his claim. The contestant was on head with his Attorney R. J. Montague and the hearing of evidence was begun. The claimant then retained Lawyer George to defend his case, several days were required to submit the voluminous testimony offered. The settler has now 80 acres already under cultivation and doubless is justly entitled to the land.

Died in a Wagon.

On Saturday of last week Coroner Shepard received a telegram requesting him to come to Farley, in the northern part of Polk county to hold an inquest on the body of a man found dead that morning. Upon his arrival he learned that the man, John Alexander had been at Warren on the day previous returning in the night to the McKenzie farm on which he worked and lay in the wagon box all night, probably dying from liquor or the exposure or both.

A Good Selection.

P. J. McGuire has accepted a position in the land department of the Great Northern and will have his headquarters here. He will have charge of the company's lands in Polk, Norman and Marshall counties, and will attend to the selling of the lands and the collection of money on contracts already made. He will be in his office here every Saturday and those wanting to pay money on contracts with the company can pay it to Mr. McGuire. He will have probably about $125,000 of collections to make this fall and winter and expects to be kept busy. This will require considerable traveling, and will be a pleasant change from the constant office work which he has been accustomed to. The company is fortunate in securing the services of Mr. McGuire, as his well known integrity and careful business methods make him a valuable man for this position. His successor in the land office has not yet been appointed.

Dime Social.

There will be an old-fashioned dime social at the Congregational parsonage Friday afternoon and evening, Sept. 22. The ladies will meet in the afternoon and sew, at 6 o'clock they will have tea ready for the gentlemen and those who could not come earlier. All are invited to spend the evening also. The topic of conversation for afternoon and evening will be "The World's Fair." Those who have had the privilege of attending entertaining those who have been less fortunate. Everybody come and have a pleasant time.

A Metropolitan Meat Market.

Geo. Vine has been fitting up the centre store in his new brick block on Broadway, and will remove his butcher shop into it next Monday. He has had city water and electric light put in, and will have the slickest meat market in the city when he gets in shape. In fact he will keep a metropolitan shop in every sense of the word. No one knows better than George how to do this, and he is going to put prices on his meats so that all can afford to buy meat—if they have the cash to pay for it.

Friends Coming.

It should be a source of congratulation to our theatre goers to know that on next Tuesday evening September 26th they are to have on opportunity to see "Friends" that great comedy-drama which made such a brilliant success in St. Paul and Minneapolis last season, and which has been duplicating it in these two cities during the past two weeks. The St. Paul Globe said of it: "Edwin Milton Royle and his excellent company were seen at the Metropolitan opera house last night in "Friends," a comedy-drama of which Mr. Royle is the author, and in which Miss Selena Fetter plays the leading part. Very little need be said by way of introducing this charming actress, as she became very popular during her stay in this city last year. The company presenting "Friends" this year is about the same as that of last year and besides Mr. Royle and Miss Fetter, the work of Harry Allen as John Paden Sr., as well as E. D. Lyons' impersonating Hans Otto (the dissipated old father of Marguerite) is particularly worthy of note. Henry Bergman, as Harod Hunting accquitted himself very creditably. Carrie Berg, who takes the part Jennie Merryweather, is a charming little specimen of bon camarade, and quiet as much of a "friend" as either of her "boys." Lucius Henderson as Adrian Karje, the pianist, displays a vast amount of ability as a musician when he appears in the musicale at Marguerite's house which occurs in the second act. The scenery is very pretty, and in the second act quite elaborately beautiful, while the costumes worn in the drawing room scenes were very gorgeous."

ONE CURE FOR INSOMNIA.

A Man From New York State Took a Little Active Exercise on Horseback.

"I once was a sufferer from insomnia," said a dentist who lives in one of the small villages of the state, as he sat talking with other men in the sitting room of an up town hotel, "but I got rid of the trouble."

"What did you take for it?"

"Buckin' pony."

"Tell us about that, please."

"Well, you see, there was nothing the matter with me only I couldn't sleep. The doctor looked me over and said I wasn't suffering from any disease that he could detect, but all the same I could get only a few catnaps every night, and I felt that I would go crazy if such a condition of affairs continued much longer. A wise friend of mine advised me to try horseback exercise. Just at that time a man had brought to the village a string of ponies from the west. As the ponies were wild they were offered for sale cheap. I bought one. He was such a sleepy looking animal that we called him Rip Van Winkle. After we knew him better we dropped part of the name and called him plain Rip. The first ride I took on him furnished excitement for the whole village. Two men helped me to saddle and mount him in the stable. When the door was opened he shot out into the street like a streak of lightning.

"He ran full against the fence opposite the stable and broke several pickets. Then he reared up on his hind legs and came near throwing me over backward. Next he tried to stand on his head, but I yanked him back on his feet and drove the spurs into him. He started to run then, and I let him go as fast as he could leg it until we got to the Methodist church at the end of the street. A temperance meeting was being held in the church and the door was open. Before I could stop the pony we were in the church and half way up the aisle. Women screamed and fainted.

"Some of the men led Rip back into the street. I didn't dare to get off his back. When the men let go of the bridle he began to buck, and for a few minutes I thought my neck would be broken. He would go at a gallop when he went at all, but he would stop now and then to indulge in some bucking. Presently he changed his tactics and went from one street to another, across lots, jumping fences, turning up flower beds, damaging gardens and keeping me busy dodging the branches of fruit trees. The next street led to a turnpike, along which I spurred him for miles until he was covered with foam and nearly tired out.

"He seemed to be docile when I got him back to the stable. Next day, however, he was nearly as bad as when I first rode him, and every day for a fortnight I was obliged to race him along the turnpike several miles. My! my! How he did buck! I was so lame at the end of two weeks that I could scarcely walk to my office, but I could sleep. A few minutes after I got into bed at night I was sleeping soundly, and I awoke every morning thoroughly refreshed."

"Do you still ride the pony?"

"No. By the time I was cured of sleeplessness I had broken Rip to ride, and I sold him for double the sum I had paid for him. My advice to anybody who is suffering from insomnia is to get a bucking pony and ride as fast as he can. If no necks are broken, both man and pony will be benefited by the treatment."—New York Tribune.

To Remove Substances From the Eye.

To remove the solid particles from under the lids, it is sufficient to pull the lid away from the eye and to wipe the body with a piece of moist paper or the corner of a handkerchief. If it is under the upper lid, grasp the lid firmly between the thumb and finger, lift it from the eyeball and draw it down over the lower lid, and then allow it to slide slowly back to its natural position. The foreign body will be scraped off on the lashes.

The operation may be repeated several times. Or lift the lid from the eyeball, allow the tears to accumulate beneath the lid and forcibly blow the nose. Or place in the eye a few grains of flaxseed, which, forming a mucilage, will promptly bring relief. Or place across the upper lid the point of a pencil or bodkin, and turn the lid back over it. In this way the foreign particle is brought into distinct view and can be readily wiped away.—Washington Star.

A Long Underground Canal.

The canal between Worsley and St. Helena in north England is probably the longest and most remarkable canal of the kind in the world. It is 16 miles long and is underground from one end to the other. Many years ago the managers of the Duke of Bridgewater's estate filled its old mines with water that they might transport the coal underground instead of on the surface. Ordinary canalboats are used, the power being furnished by the men. The tunnel arch over the canal is provided with cross pieces, and the men propel the boats along as they lie on their backs on the loads of coal.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Adam's Staff.

The Talmudic writers tell us that "the blessed God gave to the first man in paradise a staff which had been created between the stars. Adam gave it to Enoch, Enoch to Noah, Noah to Shem, Shem to Abraham, Abraham to Isaac, Isaac to Jacob. Jacob carried it into Egypt and gave it to his son Joseph. When Joseph died his household goods were taken to the house of Pharaoh. Pharaoh took the staff of Adam, which had descended to Joseph from the first man, and put it among his special treasures."—St. Louis Republic.

A Big Livery Bill.

A Bangor man who sent his office boy to return a hired team to a stable received several days after a bill for the board of the horse and another bill for the hire of the team for the time intervening. The stupid boy took the team to the wrong stable. The man said he wouldn't mind so much, but there seemed to be no limit to the number of cigars he is compelled to pay for at the instance of jeering friends.—Exchange.

Stealing Ide[illegible]

[illegible] Paris. A [illegible] hardly out of [illegible] the workrooms, it might be said—when you see it copied in the show windows of the Louvre and the Bon Marche, where it can be bought for less than one-fourth of the price asked by the great couturiers. At first the rulers of dress thought that some of their workpeople were bribed to give points, but they soon discovered that the pilfering of ideas took place in the showrooms instead of the workrooms. The Louvre and the Bon Marche engaged handsome, distinguished looking young women, dressed them as if they had $20,000 a year and were accustomed from infancy to having and wearing the best, gave them a private carriage and had them go to the great costumers to order garments "just come out."

These afterward served as the models of things which the week after you might buy by the dozens. The large shops resort to this means to obtain novelties not only in the beginning of the season, but all the year round, and the couturiers have no way of avoiding the sales, for their showrooms are open to all who wish to purchase and give orders. To be sure, these couturiers make most of their creations for authentic princesses and duchesses, but here also the shops get the best of them.—Cor. New York Tribune.

An Eccentric Washington Woman.

There is a woman in Washington society whose eccentricities in certain lines are so well known as to pass without comment. Her position as a matron of literary proclivities is the motive for sundry gatherings at her house during the season. On one occasion the guests bidden to the literary feast were informed upon arrival that they must enter by a side door, as the morning being rainy they would otherwise track mud over the hall carpet. That the hostess is not so much a respecter of persons as of things is further evidenced by her conduct at an afternoon reception.

Those of her guests whose garments were ornamented with jet were asked during their stay to remain in the second parlor, where the furniture was of mahogany. This sorting out process was explained by the frank announcement that if people would wear sharp ornaments on their clothes she must protect her own property by excluding them from the sacred precincts of the first parlor, so that the rosewood furniture could not be scratched.—Kate Field's Washington.

How to Keep a Chameleon.

The Florida chameleon, which also is frequently brought home by the tourist, is a bright and intelligent creature. He requires almost unlimited sunshine to bask in, and flies, which he catches on the end of his long tongue, to eat. A fernery is a comfortable place for him. This fellow, it is said, has a temper, and if not well treated or if teased he will show fight, though he can hardly do much harm. The genuine chameleon, after whom the Florida lizard is named, is one of the quaintest and oddest of pets, but he is a native of the old world and rarely seen in our country.

Another American of the family, often sent from the west and south to pet lovers, is called the horned toad, though he is no toad, but a lizard. He is said to be an interesting pet and capable of being taught. All the small members of this race live on insects and need to be kept in very warm quarters.—Olive Thorne Miller in Harper's Bazar.

The Boomerang Is Not New.

The boomerang, the Australian native's weapon of offense and defense, referred to in all reference works as an instrument unknown until after the discovery of Australia, was doubtless known before the time of Christ. Pliny the elder, a contemporary of our Saviour, writes as follows in his "Natural History" respecting an instrument made of the wood of the aquifolia:

"If a staff made of this wood, when thrown at an animal, from want of strength in the person throwing, falls short of the mark, it will come back toward the thrower of its own accord, so remarkable are the properties of that tree."

It is altogether probable that the learned Pliny did not consider the shape of the "staff" and referred its peculiarities to the nature of the wood of which it was made.—St. Louis Republic.

Blunder Worse Than Guilt.

There are some penalties on innocent acts essential to human safety, and the signaler whose failure has destroyed a train must be punished, even though, when he pleads that he was in a "dwam," he is to his own mind telling the simple and sufficient truth. Nature is even harder on blunder than on guilt, and though man has no right to be as stern as nature, which, for example, executed a dynamiter at Madrid—not for his intention to murder, but for his carelessness in dropping his bomb—still, there are points upon which he must be nearly as hard.—London Spectator.

Colonel North's Strong Room.

Colonel North is said to have at Eltham one of the strongest of strong rooms probably in the world. Not only is his gold and silverware stored here, but lady visitors to Eltham are provided for, special arrangements being made for taking care of their jewels during the nights. The room is floored with cement and walled all round with weighty granite. To get into its interior you must pass through many gates, all fitted up with burglar alarms. The treasures are kept in iron cages, and the room is 30 feet under ground.—London Tit-Bits.

IN MEMORY OF PROFESSOR PROCTOR.

[illegible] Monument [illegible] Resting Place.

Ever since his sad and untimely death from yellow fever in New York city on Sept. 12, 1888, the remains of Professor Richard A. Proctor, the great astronomer, have laid in a neglected grave in the burial lot of a friend in Greenwood cemetery, Brooklyn, a touching illustration of how apt the world is to forget even its greatest men when once they have passed away from the scene of their labors and triumphs. No stone has marked his resting place, and the mound that once was there is now almost effaced. But at last, through the generosity of George W. Childs of Philadelphia, the long neglect is to be repaired, and the professor's coffin will be removed to a more appropriate grave, and the site marked with a fitting monument.

MONUMENT TO PROFESSOR PROCTOR.

The new grave will also be in Greenwood, but in a much better location. Near at hand are the graves of Henry Ward Beecher, Fitz-Greene Halleck, John Brougham, Lester Wallack and William J. Florence, and the family plots of Rev. T. De Witt Talmage and Judge Leon Abbett of New Jersey.

The monument is a great block of Quincy granite, beautifully polished and handsomely ornamented. At its apex is a raised star, and about the plot a brass railing resting on posts of carved rustic work. On the reverse side of the monument there is to be an inscription, written by Herbert Spencer at the request of Miss Mary Proctor, the professor's daughter. It reads:

> On public as on private grounds Professor Proctor's premature death was much to be lamented. He united great detailed knowledge with broad general views in an unusual degree, and while admirably fitted for a popular expositor, was at the same time well equipped for original investigation, which, had he lived, would have added to our astronomical knowledge. Professor Proctor was also to be admired for his endeavors to keep the pursuit of science free from the corrupting and paralyzing influence of state aid.
> HERBERT SPENCER.

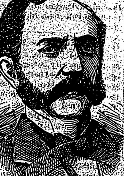
Professor Proctor was only 51 years of age at the time of his death. Though he was best known in this country as a lecturer, his writings were numerous and authoritative, and he was credited with many important astronomical discoveries. He was a phenomenal mathematician and seemed to possess an intuitive power to handle figures rapidly.

CHIEF JUSTICE OF SAMOA.

A Vermont Lawyer Appointed to That Important Office.

The position of chief justice of Samoa is a peculiar one, and the office is filled in a peculiar way. The incumbent is practically supreme on the islands, as his court is the highest tribunal of the nation, and his decision is final. Under the treaty between them on the matter Germany, England and the United States have all to agree on the appointment of the chief justice or else submit it to some disinterested power. That is how it came about that the king of Sweden appointed Chief Justice Cedarkrantz, who has not given satisfaction and has been removed.

Henry C. Ide, who succeeds him, was appointed on the recommendation of the German government, the other two governments concurring. Mr. Ide knows all about the Samoan question, for he was chairman of the commission appointed in 1891 by the three governments mentioned to settle the Samoan land troubles and spent over a year there, rendering very valuable services. As disputes over land titles create a large part of the business submitted to the chief justice, Mr. Ide ought to be well qualified for his new position.



CHIEF JUSTICE IDE.

Mr. Ide is a native of Vermont and has been a very successful practicing lawyer at St. Johnsbury, in that state, since 1870. He is in his fiftieth year and was educated at Dartmouth college, graduating in the class of 1866, of which he was valedictorian. After leaving college he was for two years principal of the St. Johnsbury academy, which he had himself attended as a boy, and in 1869 went to Arlington, Mass., as principal of the high school there. He is a Republican and has held many offices under that party. He was attorney of Caledonia county from 1876 to 1878 and state senator from 1882 to 1886. He was president of the Republican state convention in 1884 and a delegate to the national convention in 1888.

There is no politics in his appointment to the chief justiceship, as President Cleveland was in a measure compelled to appoint Germany's nominee and certainly could not decline to do so for mere party reasons. [illegible]

HOW TO SEE THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Suggestions as to the Most Convenient and Economical Method.

When you go to the World's Fair do not take a trunk with you if you can possibly get along without it, but pack your few necessary traveling articles in a hand bag or grip and carry it along with you. You will never know what a lot of annoyance you have been spared in this way. Then get your tickets from Crookston to Chicago and the greatest Fair the world has ever seen, reading via St. Paul, and thence via "The Northwestern Line" to Chicago. The Northwestern line runs three superbly equipped trains from St. Paul to Chicago, leaving St. Paul at 8:00 a. m. daily, 6:25 p. m. daily except Sunday, 8:00 p. m. daily, making quicker time to Chicago than by any other line. When you arrive in Chicago you will find World's Fair omnibuses at the Northwestern line depot which will take you to the Van Buren street station of the Illinois Central road, where trains for the Fair leave every three minutes, and where World's Fair steamers can be taken for the Fair every ten minutes, or you can take a steam ferry from the depot of the Northwestern line direct to the same place via the Chicago river and making connections with the famous whaleback steamer Christopher Columbus for the Fair for 25 cents. When you arrive at the Fair you will find a number of first-class hotels within a stone's throw of the main entrance and dozens of good restaurants where meals can be had to accommodate the most modest purse.

By following these simple directions your trip is bound to be a pleasant one. See that your ticket from St. Paul reads via the Northwestern line, and remember that by this route you will obtain the best service, the greatest luxury, the most complete comfort. Be sure and buy your tickets at starting point.

For Cash.

You can buy a half section of land handy to the city, about 300 acres in crop and looking nicely, at $20 per acre; or if you do not have all cash we will give you figures on application at the JOURNAL office. Owner desires to engage in other business and is prepared to give a great bargain. [14-tf]

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Montana, Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to Best Trains for World's Fair.

The best equipped and most complete trains from Minneapolis and St. Paul for Chicago and World's Fair run via "The North-Western Line."

"World's Fair Express" leaves Minneapolis 5:45, St. Paul 6:25, every evening except Sunday, arrives Chicago 7:45 a. m., and is equipped with free reclining chair cars and gas-lighted, vestibuled buffet sleepers, and because of its early arrival in Chicago is the best train to take for the World's Fair as it gives a long day in Chicago.

"North-Western Limited" leaves Minneapolis 7:30, St. Paul 8:10 o'clock every night in the year and arrives Chicago 9:30 next morning. This is the easiest riding, finest equipped train west of Chicago, having both Pullman and Wagner private compartment sleepers and Buffet smoking library coaches, and is the only palatial train of its kind in America on which no extra fare is charged.

IN THE
YOU WILL ALWAYS FIND
The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time.
THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social, and municipal affairs, etc.—in short all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. No magazine follows so closely from month to month the course of public interest. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.
THE CONTRIBUTORS to the Review are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers. The list is a roll of the people who are making the history, controlling the affairs, and leading the opinion of the age, such as Mr. Gladstone, the Prime Minister of England, Mr. Blaine, Signor Crispi, Ex-Prime Minister of Italy, Baron Hirsch, H. R. H. the Count of Paris, Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Potter, Doane, Mallalieu, Foss, etc., etc.
THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people have ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the Review furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

A HUNDRED YEARS.

CENTENNIAL OF THE LAYING OF THE CORNERSTONE

Of the National Capitol—Solemn and Impressive Exercises Witnessed by Thousands of People—Patriotic Speeches by President Cleveland and Others.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—The centennial celebration of the anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the Capitol was solemn and impressive.

One hundred years ago to the day and hour Washington, the first president of the republic, as grand master of the Free and Accepted Order of Masons, wearing an apron and sash woven by the wife of Lafayette, laid the foundation stone of the great marble pile that is now the admiration of the world. This city was then a village, its broad, sweeping avenues, magnificent buildings and beautiful parks as yet unmarked upon the map.

Escorted by a small band of patriotic citizens and a troop of cavalry, Washington, accompanied by his cabinet and many of the illustrious men of the day, rode to the fort-crowned hill on which the Capitol now stands, to lay the cornerstone of that giant structure. Over the same route President Cleveland was escorted by dashing cavalry, marching infantry, blaring bands and a vast multitude of people, to add his presence and words to the celebration of the anniversary of the event.

Arriving at the Capitol the parade was disbanded and the ceremonies of the day were begun on the stand erected at the east front of the Capitol. The Rt. Rev. William Paret, bishop of Maryland, invoked the blessing of God, after which Lawrence Gardner, the chairman, made some eloquent remarks. As he concluded Dr. Gardner turned towards President Cleveland and introduced him as the next speaker. The president, who had been greeted with warm applause all the way en route to the Capitol, received a still more enthusiastic welcome now. He spoke as follows:

The President's Speech.

While I accept with much satisfaction the part assigned to me on this occasion, I cannot escape the sober reflections which these ceremonies suggest. Those who suppose that we are simply engaged in commemorating the beginning of a magnificent structure devoted to important public uses, have overlooked the most useful and improving lesson of the hour. We do indeed celebrate the laying of a cornerstone from which has sprung the splendid edifice whose grand proportions arouse the pride of American citizens; but our celebration is chiefly valuable and significant because this edifice was designed and planned by great and good men, as a place where the principles of a free representative government should be developed in patriotic legislation for the benefit of a free people.

If representatives who here assemble to make laws for their fellow countrymen forget the duty of broad and disinterested patriotism and legislate in prejudice and passion or in behalf of sectional and selfish interests, the time when the cornerstone of our Capitol was laid and the circumstances surrounding it

Will Not Be Worth Commemorating.

The sentiment and the traditions connected with this structure and its uses belong to all the people of the land. They are most valuable as reminders of patriotism in the discharge of public duty and steadfastness in many a struggle for the public good. They also furnish a standard by which our people measure the conduct of those chosen [illegible] laid the cornerstone of the Capitol and that they appreciate the necessity of

as a condition indispensible to the preservation of institutions in their purity and integrity. I believe our fellow citizens have no greater nor better cause for rejoicing on this centennial than is found in the assurance that their public servants who assemble in these halls will watch and guard the sentiment and traditions that gather around this celebration, and that in the days to come those who shall again commemorate the laying of the cornerstone of their nation's Capitol will find in the recital of our performance of public duty, no less reason for enthusiasm and congratulations than we find in recalling the wisdom and virtue of those who have preceded us.

The Other Exercises.

After the president's brief address the orator of the day, William Wirt Henry of Virginia, delivered an oration which was both lengthy, refined and ornate. The "Star Spangled Banner," sung by the grand chorus, followed, after which Vice President Stevenson was introduced and made an historical and interesting address. The presiding officer of the senate (with a brief interlude of music) was followed by the speaker of the house of representatives, Mr. Crisp, whose remarks were brevity itself.

The exercises were so prolonged that only an enumeration can be made of the closing observances. They consisted of the rendering of the grand chorus, "The Heavens are Telling," from Hayden's oratorio "Coronation;" a judicial address by Associate Justice Henry Billings Brown of the United States supreme court; a closing speech by Commissioner Marion Parker for the district government, and the rendering of "America" by the Marine band chorus and audience.

OLD WINTERS ON THE FARM.

It'd keep a town boy hoppin
Fer to work all winter choppin

Lawz! Them old times was contrary—

—James Whitcomb Riley.

Waste That Is Now Valuable.

A generation ago there was hardly a mill of any kind that was not troubled with a heap of rubbish or waste material that it did not know what to do with. Silk manufacturers saw the rise of this heap with annoyance, and they took it as a favor if any one would cart it away and use it as a fertilizer. An English inventor guessed at the possibilities in this pile of refuse and set about inventing machinery to utilize it. Today, as a result of his foresight and genius, 5,000 persons are employed in making the finest silk plushes, ribbons and velvets from the refuse piles of silk mills, and the inventor has grown rich.

The cottonseed oil industry is a better known illustration of economizing waste, but the dimensions to which the industry has grown are not so generally known. The annual product in oil cake, lint and hulls from cotton seed, which a generation ago was allowed to rot, is $27,000,000, and it could be made greater if there was a market for the product.—Philadelphia Press.

The Arab's Donkey.

One sees Arabs coming into Constantinople with a donkey load of wood, which they sell for 3 francs. They have come 25 miles with it, sell it and next day ride the donkey back. As a meal costs them but 25 cents, the wood nothing and the donkey does all the work, what seems a small profit is really a good one. And who is it that earns it? All saddle beasts in the east go what our Anglomaniacs call [illegible] in fact, three-fourths of all the animals [illegible]

A UNIQUE ASSEMBLY.

ALL RELIGIONS EXTEND THE HAND OF FELLOWSHIP AT CHICAGO.

Roman Catholics and Protestants, Jews and Mormons, Brahman, Buddhist and Parsee All Singing "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow."

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 20.—[Special.]—By courtesy of Dr. John Henry Barrows, I was one of the 200 or more guests the other evening at the reception accorded the orientals at the residence of Mr. A. C. Bartlett, and there was assembled, I do verily believe, the most unique group ever seen on this western continent. In the place of honor, between Dr. Barrows and the hostess, stood the venerable archbishop of Zante, the Most Rev. Dionysius Latas, magnificent in his robes of office, and both in facial aspect and physical manhood looking the born ruler of men. On the other side of the doctor stood Bishop Keane, and all around were Parsee, Hindoo and Chinaman, Protestants of many denominations, and here and there one of us common men—a journalist, or a lawyer, or the like—to modify the tone of the picture.

Interesting Contrasts.

When the formal presentations were over and the people began to scatter through parlor and hall and form into groups, there was a moving panorama of colors, races and faiths. A high priest from India, clad in snowy white from turban to slippers, talked earnestly and in excellent English with a Methodist preacher from Missouri, who looked as if he had just stepped out of Peter Cartwright's biography and into Lorenzo Dow's clothes.

The resident and other Christian guests were chiefly Chicago's Four Hundred and in the highest style of evening dress, among them Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. Charles Henrotin, Mrs. Annie Besant of England, Miss Jeanne Sorabji of India, Principal G. M. Grant of Canada, ex-Senator Lyman Trumbull and many eminent lawyers, preachers, doctors and other persons of note. The hall decorations consisted of the flags of various nations and flowers from many climes. Music added its charm, and when one looked on the odd combination of ultra fashionable city people with plain country preachers, Catholic priests in their clerical habit and orientals blazing with color or resplendent in snowy white, the thoughts excited were beyond the power of words to set forth. But it was one of those rare occasions in which dress cut no figure, and if a plain newspaper man felt too conspicuous in his everyday clothes he only had to back into a corner and strike an attitude to be mistaken for a distinguished foreigner. Surely such another assemblage was never seen out of India, and probably not there.

All this is but preliminary to some notes on the parliament of religion, which is by common consent regarded as the greatest success of the age. Consider these facts: Out of several thousands invited from all parts of the world, less than a score positively declined; out of 170 who promised to be present and talk or send papers, only three failed, and of those who sent their names to be recorded as actually present all were in the city on the opening day except five. It is seldom, I think, that our national congress is so full on opening day, and yet these people have come from the ends of the earth. Of course such an extraordinary gathering has inflamed ardent Christians, excited enthusiastic humanitarians and set the superstitious to forecasting. A talented Adventist of the radical school has already proved to his own satisfaction that this is one of the signs that the end of the dispensation is nigh, for when these people return home "the gospel will have been preached unto all nations, and then shall the end come."

A Catholic Affair.

The true catholicity of this affair and its world representative character may be shown by a brief outline of its proceedings to date. The separate Catholic congress ended on Sunday, the 10th, and next day the great parliament convened in the Hall of Columbus, in the Art institute, every available space being filled with spectators, while thousands were turned away. On the platform was at least one representative of every faith except Mormonism and fetichism (if faith the latter be), and bishops of every Christian body which is episcopal in government. All joined, 3,500 voices at least, in singing "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," Jew and Jain, Brahman, Buddhist and Parsee singing as freely as Methodist and Catholic.

Then followed the Lord's Prayer by Cardinal Gibbons, nearly all the assemblage joining; an address by President Bonney, the patriarchal blessing by Archbishop Latas of Zante, Christian, Buddhist and Shintovist bowing together as he raised his hands; the address of welcome by Dr. Barrows and responses by Archbishop Feehan, Rev. Augusta J. Chapin, D. D., Harlow N. Higinbotham, P. C. Mazoomdar of India, Prince Wolkovsky, H. Dharmapala, Minas Cheraz (Armenian), Swama Vivekauda (Jain), Miss Sorabji (Parsee), Birchand Raghavi Ganthi and Bishop Arnett, colored. Oh, it was worth a year of common life to witness such a union.

On Tuesday presentation of beliefs was made, the most interesting addresses being by Rabbi Wise, Rev. Maurice Phillips of Madras, Hon. W. T. Harris and Shaku Sozen. Universal regret was felt at the absence of Hon. Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, as his title runs, for he is the lineal descendant in the first born male line of the great Ali, companion of Mohammed, and is the only well known man of that blood who has adopted Buddhistic views. His paper was well read, however, and received with applause. On Wednesday Hon. Pung Kwang Yu of the Chinese legation at Washington expounded Confucianism, Zit Luzen Ashitsu told of Buddhism in Japan and Kinza Ringe Hirai of the same country told us of the influence of Buddhism in promoting a moral life. On this and each succeeding day Christian teachers alternated with those of other faiths, but there was no controversy—only presentation of views.

Religion Versus Irreligion.

On the next three days the principal lecturers were Rev. Lyman Abbott, Rev. Joseph Cook, Takayoshi Matsuyama and Renchi Shibata on Shintoism, Cardinal Gibbons, Julia Ward Howe, Protap Chunder Mazoomdar, Virchand R. Ganthi, Mrs. Eliza R. Sunderland, and Banriu Yatsubuchi. The paper of Errad Shariarji Dadabhai Barucha of Bombay on Zoroastrianism and the prize essay of Kung Hsien Ho of Shanghai on Confucianism were read, as they were not present. These are but specimens of many addresses given and to be given in this parliament, the object of which, according to the call, is to unite [illegible]

PLOT GIVEN AWAY.

One of the Mineral Range Train Robbers Makes a Confession.

MARQUETTE, Mich., Sept. 18.—Practically all the men who had anything to do with the robbery of the Mineral Range express last Friday of $70,000 are in jail, or under espionage, and up to date about $14,000 of their booty has been recovered. Monday morning George La Liberty, a former fireman on the South Shore and Atlantic road, was arrested here by the police under order of the sheriff of Houghton county. La Liberty had lost his place in the recent reduction of hands on the railroad and has been associating with some of the tough characters who were suspected of the train robbery. He was taken to Houghton, handcuffed, and after he had made a desperate attempt to get away and been successfully held, he made a

Clean Breast of the Whole Affair

and was brought back to Marquette. The men now under arrest are A. S. Cannon of Hancock, a young man of good family, whose trunk was used to carry away the money; John King, an athlete; —— Chellew, a saloon keeper of Negaunee; Michael and John Shea, saloonists here; Tom Winters, baggageman; Moses Lojtin, brakeman on the train robbed; D. W. Hogan, the messenger on the robbed car; Ed Hogan, saloonist; W. Shoup, hackdriver, and —— Butler, an habitue of Chellew's place. The officers refuse to give a formal statement of La Liberty's confession; but the following are the details as they have come out. La Liberty, trained as a locomotive fireman, covered the engineer and fireman while the others looted the train. King, an athlete, smashed the express car door with a sledge hammer. Chellew and Butler rifled the safe and the rest

Carried Away the Plunder.

Marshal Foley of Houghton came here after La Liberty and the latter, when caught, asked him to come to the hotel and he would then divulge the secret. Foley went with him and he made an attempt to get away but was foiled. He asked to go to Marquette jail, and there told part of a story, implicating Messenger Hogan of the robbed train, whose arrest followed at Hancock. Then followed a detailed account of where the trunk was left along the line of the Mineral Range road and a special train and some officers were sent after it. They found the trunk. On its arrival at the Houghton National bank it was opened and found empty. On La Liberty's information $14,000 was recovered by the officers. The empty condition of the trunk is accounted for by the suggestion that the money was stolen a second time from the robbers themselves, and Hogan's brother is being looked for in connection with this latest episode.

SECURED $75,000.

Four Masked Men Hold Up a Train on the Mineral Range Road.

CALUMET, Mich., Sept. 18.—At 9:30 o'clock a. m. the passenger train on the Mineral Range railroad coming to Calumet, was held up by four highwaymen between Calumet and Hancock. They secured some $75,000 consigned to the Calumet and Hecla mine, and which was part of the money to be paid by the mine on its pay roll.

Mint Thief Captured.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—It is understood here that the government officers have captured the man who stole $105,000 worth of gold from the mint at Philadelphia, and that $100,000 worth of the precious metal has been recovered.

Marrying For Pity.

A fair maiden who had weathered the blasts of some 35 summers was informed by a booby that unless she married him he would blow the top of his head off. It's a pity she didn't let him do it. Heads of that kind ought to be blown off every time. That is what they are for. But Desdemona pitied Othello, and this fair maiden pitied her lover and went to the parson's with him. That was only a month ago, and now if he wants to kill himself she will present him with the best silver mounted pistol in the market.

Marriage is a solemn contract, and it is better to think twice before signing it. —New York Telegram.

All Right.

Two men became engaged in a fight in the street. Instantly their hats went off and rolled in the dust. One of the men was entirely bald, and the other had a thick head of hair. The bald man seized the other by the hair and began to drag him about.

"Stop him!" cried a bystander.

"Why should you stop him?" asked another. "He's only practicing the golden rule."

"The golden rule? What do you mean?"

"Why, he's doing to the other man what he wishes to goodness the other man might be able to do to him!"—Youth's Companion.

Anticipatory.

Lady of the House—Bother the business depression! To my knowledge you haven't done a stroke of work for years.

Transient Individual—Of course. I was merely anticipating the panic, you know—getting used to loafing so I shouldn't mind it when there was no work to be had.—Boston Transcript.

Good Enough For a Beast.

A droll little story is told of Mr. W. S. Gilbert. He put up his horse one day at a small country inn, on the signboard of which was painted conspicuously the notice, "Entertainment for man and beast." When his lunch was brought, he looked dissatisfied, and surprised the waiter by saying, "This is all very well so far, but where is the entertainment for the man?"—London Tit-Bits.

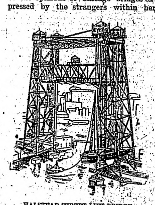
BRIDGES OF CHICAGO.

THEY ARE NUMEROUS AND NECESSARY NUISANCES.

Vexatious Delays to Pedestrians and Street Traffic When the Draws Are Open—Over Fifty Bridges In All—The New and Novel Lift Bridge.

World's fair visitors had many opportunities to learn something new about bridges in Chicago. Those who had a scientific interest in bridges could study them to their heart's content in the very interesting and exhaustive display in the civil engineering department of the Liberal Arts building. Those of them who had no other interest in bridges than knowing when they were safe to cross were yet compelled to learn considerable about them from the numerous and varied examples with which Chicago has so liberally spanned the muddy waters of her sluggish river.

Whether or not in erecting these bridges Chicago had an eye single to the convenience of her citizens the veracious chronicler is unable to state. But if she had a supplementary idea of enriching the already copious vocabulary of international expletives common candor compels the admission that she has been eminently successful. There are 53 bridges situated at the more important street crossings, and it is safe to wager that each and every one of them is daily more execrated in more kinds of more languages than any other institution on earth. An expurgated citation of the opinions of Chicago bridges expressed by the strangers within her gates would be a blank page. As promoters of profanity they have few equals and no superiors.



HALSTEAD STREET LIFT BRIDGE.

The reason is easily made apparent when it is stated that they are all drawbridges of various styles, and that after the manner of their kind they are generally open when a man comes along in a hurry and wants to cross the river. The only occasion on which they are certain to be closed and passable is when the wayfarer has plenty of time to spare, or when he has an irksome engagement to keep which an open bridge would give him an excuse for breaking. Then he will be able to walk across just as if there were no draw. But if he wants to get over the river to cash a check at the bank or a money order at the postoffice just before closing hour, or to catch a train, or to meet his best girl in time for the theater, why, that bridge will hold him up just as effectively as a lone highwayman does a western railroad train. And such holdups are not provocative of mild verbiage.

Chicagoans rather like [illegible] papers are to be credited, though there is a strong suspicion in St. Louis and New York that they only pretend to like it for World's fair purposes. At any rate, they make a little splurge whenever a new bridge is opened or a new kind of a bridge projected and "point with pride" to two or three unique affairs that were invented for their especial benefit. One of them is the "jackknife" bridge, so called because the draw shuts up something like a pocketknife. Then there is the rolling bridge, which forms when closed a three hinged arch, and each half of which on opening rolls back on a circular segment and forms an impassable barrier across the roadway. Most of the bridges, however, are of the old midstream pivotal swinging type. The largest bridge in the city is that at Jackson street, which is 280 feet long.

The new "lift bridge" at South Halstead street is a novel application of the elevator idea. The general plan of raising it is the same as that of an ordinary elevator. At each end of the span, on either side of the river, is a high steel tower, at the top of which are the pulleys over which the hoisting cables pass. These towers are high enough to permit the bridge to be raised 140 feet. As the bridge when closed is 15 feet above the water's surface, this gives a total clearance of 155 feet, quite sufficient to clear the tallest masts. The structure is calculated to resist the pressure of a wind blowing 100 miles an hour and is thus reckoned to be entirely safe, unless all Chicago begins talking at once. The roadway will accommodate four lines of teams and has two sidewalks about 7½ feet wide. The bridge can be raised to its full height in 50 seconds, but the only people who know how long it takes to get it down again are those who want to cross it in a hurry.

Chicago bridges are necessary nuisances perhaps, but something ought to be done to make the city somewhat less dependent on them. The three tunnels under the river suggest a way of doing this. There ought to be more of them.

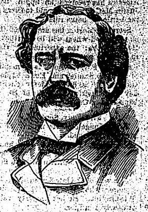
North Carolina's Convict Farm.

The state farm at Roanoke, N. C., employs more than 800 convicts, who have under cultivation about 6,000 acres. There will be an enormous crop this season. The cornfield contains about 2,000 acres and will yield about 100,000 bushels. The cotton crop will be about 1,000 bales. More than 8,000 bushels of wheat have been harvested, and the pea crop will amount to about 10,000 bushels.

A RELIC OF EDGAR ALLAN POE.

A Part of the Original Manuscript of "The Raven."

Judge George Shea, formerly chief justice of the marine court of New York and at one time corporation attorney of New York city, has accumulated a rare stock of anecdotes and reminiscences during the 67 years of his active and busy life, as may be easily inferred when it is known that he has been acquainted with some of the most eminent men of his time, and that he numbered among his intimate friends such men as Lincoln, Grant, Horace Greeley, Gerrit Smith, Commodore Vanderbilt, Charles O'Conor and William M. Evarts. He is not at all reticent of talk about the men he has met and known, but will chat away for an hour at a time in a voice that is cheerful and hearty enough to be entertaining if he only recited the multiplication table.



JUDGE GEORGE SHEA.

Judge Shea recently told a Boston newspaper man a whole lot of interesting things about great people, and among them narrated some recollections of Edgar Allan Poe, who was a friend of the judge's father, John Augustus Shea, himself a poet and literary man of no mean caliber. The elder Shea was a commissary clerk at West Point when Poe was a cadet there, and the intimacy then begun by the two poets continued till Shea's death in 1845. Judge Shea considers it possible that association with his father may have stimulated Poe's poetic genius somewhat, as it was while he was at West Point that the latter began writing verses.

The judge has in his possession a letter to his father from Poe which is a valuable literary treasure. It relates to some alterations in his famous poem, "The Raven," which had not then been published, but which Judge Shea says was first printed in the February number of The American Review in 1845, under the nom de plume of Quarles. The elder Shea secured its publication and was for some time supposed to be its author. The letter is written on glazed paper, the penmanship is clear and legible, and the ink is still unfaded. Here it is, Poe's punctuation and capitalization being followed:

> Dear Shea.
> Lest I should have made some mistake in the hurry, I transcribe the whole alteration. Instead of the whole stanza commencing "Wondering at the stillness broken &c substituting this
> Startled at the stillness broken by reply so aptly spoken,
> "Doubtless," said I, "what it utters is its only stock and store
> Caught from some unhappy master whom unmerciful Disaster
> Followed fast and followed faster till his songs one burden bore—
> Till the dirges of his Hope the melancholy burden bore,
> "Nevermore—oh, Nevermore!"
> At the close of the stanza preceding this, instead of "Quoth the raven Nevermore," substitute "Then the bird said 'Nevermore.'"
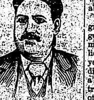
> Truly yours, Poe.

On the back of the letter is the address, "J. Augustus Shea, Esq.," and the words "To be delivered as soon as he comes in."

A DISTINGUISHED VISITOR.

Ganendra Nath Chakravarti Comes From India to the Religious Congress.

It is not often that America is honored by the presence of such an illustrious visitor as Ganendra Nath Chakravarti, who came all the way from Allahabad in Hindoostan to represent the East Indian theosophists at the world's congress of religions in Chicago. It is not often either that a visitor to our hospitable shores sacrifices as much as he did to come. He is a Brahman, the highest caste among the natives of India, and loses caste by leaving his native land. There is a chance of his restoration to rank by going through certain ceremonies of purification upon his return, but he does not seem to be certain of it.



GANENDRA NATH CHAKRAVARTI.

Professor Chakravarti is a man of distinguished appearance, tall and stout, and his manners are those of a cultivated European. He is an accomplished linguist and speaks English well and fluently. He is a fine orator and a man of extensive reading. His familiarity with the history and progress of the United States is surprising. He is the professor of mathematics in the University of Allahabad, and was himself graduated from the University of Calcutta.

English Trained Nurses.

In England they have an institution known as the Rural District Nursing association. The nurses are in training two years at a cost of $250. Each nurse has a salary of $125 to $150, with board and lodging and a donkey cart in which to go the rounds of a district of 2,000 to 3,000 inhabitants.

MEN WHO HAD LUCK.

STORIES CIRCULATED IN A GROUP OF TACOMA SPORTS.

Most of Them Were Told by Professional Gamblers and May or May Not Be True, but an Affidavit Is Required For the Yarn About the Gold Seeker.

"Well, that was luck."

The speaker was one of a group of half a dozen men who were standing on Pacific avenue puffing away at Havanas and talking just to pass time away and to clear their throats. The conversation had been about the livery stable man, Martin, of this city, who had fallen heir to $350,000 three years ago and didn't find it out until a few days ago.

"Talk about luck," said one of the group, who was a gambler, "we see plenty of it. Do you know that one day last week a man entered one of our gambling houses with a nickel and won out $400 in three hours? He had gone clean busted the night before and found the nickel in an out of the way corner in his room the next morning.

"That blokie went to the gambling house with the intention of placing his 5 cent piece on the number 5. He got into the room when the roulette ball was whizzing around on its tour of numbers. He rushed to the table and got down his nickel on the five just as the game runner shouted 'All down!' In a few seconds the ball started on its 'rear end' bouncing, and in a few seconds more the man shouted 'Five!' That gave the man with the nickel $1.75 for his 5 cents. Then he put $1 on No. 17, and that number came up, giving him $35 more. He continued to play with varying luck until in three hours he had won $400. And the next day he was broke again. He borrowed a nickel and tried the game again, but it didn't go."

"I can tell a story of a man who was lucky," said a business man. "In the early days of the gold excitement in California, there came into San Diego a man who was ragged and sick almost to death. He was taken in hand and fed and fixed up. Then he told a story of a wonderful find of gold he had made. It was only a few days off, he said, and he would take a party to the place if they would outfit.

"Several men who heard the story of the great gold in the mountains that was theirs to go after got up a party of 50. The start was made with that man as leader. After a few days' travel it became evident that the man had forgotten the way. They traveled on, trusting to luck, however. Indians were hostile at the time, and they started in to mow the gold hunters. They picked off one after another with their bullets. A score were thus taken off. Then a fever struck the party, and 11 more went the way of death.

"By this time the 19 survivors were crazy with rage. They had been 14 days out and were traveling in the most arid country. Food was growing less and less, and death faced everybody. On the afternoon of the fourteenth day the leader, who had caused so much misery, was given three days more to find his gold 'find.' If he was not successful by that time, he was to hang.

"Well, the three days had almost passed, and still there was no sign of the find. The last hour was almost up. It seemed that the man must hang. There were only five minutes more, now two minutes, now one minute, now a half minute—then came his luck. Just as the time was up for the hanging that man dropped dead."

"I don't see how he was lucky," put in the gambler who had told the first story.

"Why," said the business man, "he was lucky because if he hadn't died he would have been hanged."

Another gambler told how a few days ago a green Swede who knew nothing about the game, but determined to try his luck, had won nearly $1,000. He had been an onlooker once or twice and seen big winnings. He went to the roulette wheel with $20, and in a few hours he had won out $800. "It seemed that no matter what number he put chips on—and he played recklessly, as all new players do—it came up every time. That was pure luck. The man played no combinations or 'arrangements,' because he was as green as grass and knew nothing about the game."

"I have a friend," spoke up one of the group, who is connected with the city government, "who by the merest luck made a discovery that is netting him millions. His name is Perkins, and a few years ago back in Minnesota he made his discovery. He was a traveling man for a grocery firm, and while walking to a train to go from one country town to another one day he whittled a stick.

"He had whittled the stick in a triangular shape. On the train the idea struck him that the shape would be just what was wanted for railroad spikes. The square spikes in vogue were not the right thing because they split the grain of the green ties when driven into them, and when dry the wood shrank away from them. The triangle shaped spike would not split the grain, and subsequent shrinkage would be done away with. Perkins submitted his discovery to Pullman, and now the spikes are being made by millions at Pullman, Ills., making millions for Perkins and Pullman."

Another gambler here chimed in with the statement that during the past week a gambler from Seattle had won $2,800 at faro in Tacoma rooms in two sittings. Both sittings occupied 18 hours, and the first sitting resulted in the winning of $1,800 and the second $1,000. During the latter game the man was out nearly the whole $1,800 he had won at sitting No. 1, but he picked up and won big money. "I suppose he has gone back to Seattle with his dough," said the gambler, "as I have not seen him for some days."—Tacoma News.

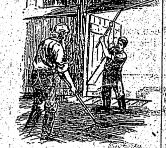
AT THRASHING TIME.

EVOLUTION OF THE WORK OF SEPARATING GRAIN FROM HUSKS.

From the Flail and the Treadmill to the Modern Steam Thrashing Machine—Reminiscences of the Good Old Times—Advice to the Novice.

If you ever hire out to help a farmer at "thrashin time," you will do well to stipulate that you are not to be placed at the tail of the straw carrier, particularly if the farmer have barley in his barn or his stacks, because if you are a green hand and therefore fail to make that proviso you will surely be set at that part of the work, and if you are you'll wish you had never been born. If it happen that the straw is carried up into the mow (pronounce this word to rhyme with cow) and not out upon a stack, you will probably either commit suicide or quit the job and let the straw take care of itself.



FROM MORN TILL NIGHT.

You will be choked with the dense black dust, which will likewise fill your eyes, and the short straw will cover you up if you stop long enough to clear your throat or vision. Your mother wouldn't know you half a minute after the machine has got fairly to running, for this same dust will speedily arrange itself in a dark layer on the surface of your face, and before half an hour has passed you will get a barley barb in your mouth, or perhaps in your hand, or some other portion of your anatomy. It will be then that you will stop work in despair, and if you are of an impetuous disposition you will be likely to make use of picturesquely arranged language when you explain to the boss that you have had enough. If you don't, he will.

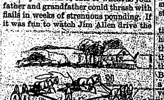
But "goin thrashin" has its compensations—in the minds of men who like that sort of thing. If it hadn't, they would not be likely to engage in the business.

Maybe you are not a greenhorn in the matter of "thrashin." Maybe you can remember, if you were born in the country and your first birthday was long enough ago, how your father and your grandfather used to get up long before daylight in the cold winter time, and after eating breakfast by candle light go out to the barn and pound the grain out all day with flails. You can also remember, probably, how you used to have to get up at the same early hour some days and feed the stock and "chore around" for two or three or four hours before you started away through the drifts to school.

It used to strike you as a tremendously mean thing for your father to rouse you from your warm bed on those cold mornings, and you wouldn't think of subjecting your own son to such treatment now. You'd expect his health to break down under it, but you remember, no doubt, that you were quite as sturdy and strong as he is, and maybe you were sturdier and stronger. It didn't hurt you a bit. Maybe it did you good.

Deacon Allen, the nearest neighbor, who lived in the red house with the big yellow barns at the foot of the valley, used to have his grain trod out by horses, and it was lots of fun to go down there and help Jim Allen drive the horses. Jim didn't like to do it, but with him it was work, and he had to keep at it all day, while with you it was play, and stolen at that. Jim lives at the foot of the valley now in the new white house he built after his father died. He is a prominent citizen in the valley, a member of the county board, and he owns a "separator" and a steam engine to run it, and he does the "thrashin" for all his neighbors every fall.

While you were yet a small boy the life of the flail and the treading out methods of thrashing came to an end, and their place was taken by wonderful machines, by the use of which in one day three or four men and a team of horses working in a treadmill could thrash out as many bushels of oats or wheat as your father and grandfather could thrash with flails in weeks of strenuous pounding. If it was fun to watch Jim Allen drive the horses when the grain was trodden out [illegible]



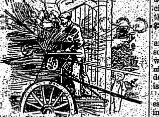
ROUND AND ROUND AND ROUND.

[illegible] ing by the side of the splendid great "separators" that took their places. It took more men to operate these machines, and the force was furnished by horses hitched in teams to the ends of the long sweeps of a "horsepower" that was set up outside the barn. When everything was ready, the driver used to get upon the platform in the middle of the power, and cracking his long whip start the horses on an interminable journey round and round and round in a small circle described by the ends of the revolving sweeps. You used to think that if when you were a man you could stand up on the platform of a horsepower and crack your whip and get $1.50 a day for doing it you would have not lived for naught.

There was another man who used to inspire you with admiration, and he was the feeder who stood on a platform and shoved the grain into the cylinder all day long. He was a man of nerve and skill, and he got bigger pay than any one else who went with the machine. His work was hardest, too, and it was possessed of an element of danger that made you shudder when you thought about it, for while he stood there mid noise and dust and turmoil imperturbable as a sphinx, he might at any moment, if he carelessly let his hand go too far toward the swiftly whirling wicked teeth of the cylinder, lose that hand or perhaps an entire arm.

You will not soon forget the horrible accident that happened to Sam Dawson, tall, straight and blue eyed—Jim Allen's older sister's "intended." He was a master hand at "feedin," but one day he turned to speak to the man at his right, who was "cuttin bands," and his left hand was drawn in. It was but a moment's lapse, but it cost Sam his hand and most of his arm, and it was thought for days and days that he would die from shock and loss of blood. Jim's sister jilted him, too, when he got well. She didn't think she could afford to marry a man with only one hand, and he went away, out of the life of the valley neighborhood.

"When the thrashers come" was always a great day on the valley farms. There were ten or a dozen of them all told. Three or four "went with the machine" from farm to farm. The rest were farmers and their hired men who "changed works" and helped one another out. The women folks used to dread "thrashin time," for it meant hard work in the kitchen. A dozen tired, hungry men can eat a great many doughnuts and a power o' pies, to say nothing of the boiled potatoes and pork and bread. The men who went with the machine assumed a sort of professional superiority over the rest and were freely accorded the respect which they demanded. No one else was really a "thrasher," and no one else could tell quite such good stories in the evening or during the "noonin" after dinner. Besides, they were animated newspapers, carrying the gossip from farm to farm, and as such were highly regarded by all the women.



IMPERTURBABLE MID DUST AND NOISE.

How you used to envy the "thrashers" because of their wide experience! Very likely you hired out to a man who ran a machine when you were a young man, and it is as likely as not that when all the romance of a "thrasher's" life disappeared you met your first disillusionment. It was not the last you were to encounter by any means.

Some years after you had seen the first horsepower and its circling horses you began to hear about portable "steam ingines" that were to be used to furnish the power to run the separator. You had never thought of a steam engine as being on any of the valley farms. Steam engines belonged to the town, not the country, and were apt to burst, or the fire would cause a conflagration. Everybody protested, but some one bought one, and the entire valley turned out to see it work. It was so successful that horsepowers were relegated to a dead past with greater suddenness even than had been the flail, and in a couple of seasons every one was used to seeing the smoke and hearing the steady puff of the steam thrasher.

But it is only in civilized countries that the primitive methods of thrashing have been done away with. In Mexico they still tread out their grain, and so they do in India, and in this country the flail is yet used on buckwheat. Beans were generally trodden out until a few years ago, when a machine was invented that will thrash them as well as the big separators will wheat.

IN THE METROPOLIS.

CITIZENS OF NEW YORK MAKING PLANS FOR THE FUTURE.

Improvements on a Gigantic Scale Projected—Hundreds of Millions of Dollars to Be Spent in Beautifying the Chief City of the Continent.

Much has been said from time to time of the absence of public spirit, of local pride and of neighborhood feeling in New York. Even the men who have made great fortunes here do not seem to have any regard for the city that has given them their opportunities for achieving wealth. "Men do not understand the causes of their success," said a speaker of the board of trade recently in commenting upon the difficulty in arousing public interest here in the movement for the improvement of the Erie canal, on which so much of the prosperity of the city depends. The lack of public spirit was signally illustrated in the half hearted way in which the business men entered into the movement to secure the World's fair for New York. Chicago was a blaze of enthusiasm on the subject, but New York entered into the competition in a listless, don't care sort of way, which naturally resulted in Chicago carrying off the prize.

The fact is that New York is a city of markets, of ships, of shops, of hotels and of tenement houses, but not of homes. The rich men may have mansions here, but their homes are in their country houses. The people who live in flats and tenement houses are engaged in a struggle for a bare existence, and have not the time or disposition to give much thought or care for the city. The diversity of races and languages represented in the population serves only to separate the people more and make them regard the city with utter indifference.

But there is reason for believing that this state of things is gradually growing better. There are evidences of increased public spirit, of a greater pride in the city and of a larger interest in her development and improvement. Great schemes of public improvement have been projected or begun. Millions have recently been expended in the acquisition of new parks, and twice lately when it was proposed to do something that would injure Central park there was an exhibition of aroused public opinion that prevented the outrages and would have done credit to a much smaller but more enthusiastic city.

Rich men are now contributing a liberal portion of their wealth to enterprises that will increase the glory of the metropolis. Columbia college is being rapidly developed into a great university. A magnificent cathedral has been started. A spacious botanical garden is to be established. A fine aquarium is to take the place of Castle Garden on the Battery. A splendid speedway for horses is to be built. The city is to erect an immense municipal building, which it is proposed shall be a notable architectural addition to the metropolis. The present city hall is to be given to the trustees of the Tilden trust and made the home of a $2,000,000 library.

The art and natural history museums are being rapidly developed and will soon take rank among the best in the world. Monuments and statues are being multiplied, and eight years after his death the $500,000 tomb of General Grant is approaching completion.

But in other and perhaps more interesting ways is the revival of public spirit in New York being manifested. Business men are showing an increased interest in the good government of the city and in its improvement in little things as well as great. Other cities might indeed copy with advantage some of the methods of the organizations that have been formed here for the public weal.

The City Improvement society has been formed and has started out to investigate the various complaints of citizens and to secure, if possible, better pavements, better street cleaning and similar improvements in parks, bridges and streets of the city. Lately a municipal art society has been organized by leading artists, architects and others, with a view of making the city more beautiful. They seek to improve the architecture of the public buildings, to secure artistic decoration within them and to prevent the erection of inferior statues and other inartistic structures. Another society is engaged in marking with bronze tablets the places of historical interest. Others of a more philanthropical nature are endeavoring to better the lives and condition of the tenement house population.

The women have organized a health protective association, and are endeavoring to institute reforms that shall decrease the death rate and make New York a better city to live in. The latest reform which they have taken up is that of securing a health regulation requiring the removal of the refuse of the 60,000 horses in the city of New York. The physicians comprising the Academy of Medicine have lately been acting with vigor and courage to secure improved quarantine protection and a purified water supply. The chamber of commerce and the board of trade—the mouthpieces of the merchants and bankers—have lately exhibited increased activity and exercised a wider influence. All these things certainly indicate that New Yorkers are beginning to wake up and to show a livelier interest in the welfare of the city.

Perhaps the fact that other cities are getting closer to her in the competition for business has something to do with this. It is beginning to dawn upon her citizens that unless she can unite with Brooklyn, bridge and tunnel the North river, throw more bridges over the East river, get rapid transit from city hall to Westchester county and [illegible]

Effect of Paris Life on American Students.

An American artist of considerable reputation, while speaking the other day with reference to the easy going Bohemian habits so common among men in his profession, said: "It is not a pleasant thing to say, but I believe it is true that a period of two or three years of student life in Paris practically ruins about as many young artists as it benefits. Student life in Europe, and especially in Paris, is full of allurements and temptations which only those capable of great self control are able to resist. It is in its social aspects a delightfully free and easy sort of life, which appeals almost irresistibly to the average young man. It develops the habit of indolence with frightful rapidity, and from indolence it is but a short step to indifference, dissipation and reckless self neglect. Convivial associations and the gay company of a colony made of kindred spirits as bright and magnetic as himself too often put his ambitions to sleep, and he drifts on and on until he becomes a spendthrift and a lounger, if nothing worse. At the end of two or three years he returns to America, his money spent, his health frequently shattered and himself so thoroughly bohemianized that he finds it difficult, if not impossible ever to regain anything of the orderly, methodical habit of industry upon which his professional success depends."—New York Herald.

Mr. Labouchere's Fish Story.

If Mr. Henry Labouchere has a habit of getting into trouble, he has also a happy knack of getting out of it. For instance, the other day, after he had printed an important piece of news about the proper way to cook crawfish and a humane reader of Truth expostulated with him about his advice to the cook to cut the live fish in halves, he retorted merrily by expressing the opinion that it is ridiculous sentiment to treat creatures of low or rudimentary organizations as if they had the same susceptibility to pain as a human being, and settled the question finally by telling an anecdote about an angling friend of his who once "caught a perch foul."

> The hook pierced the fish's eye. My friend felt that he had not caught the perch according to the rules of the game, so, to compensate him for losing his eye, he put him back into the water. He then baited his hook with the eye and went to work again. Within three minutes he caught that same perch again with his own eye.

This is a capital fish story. We have not heard a better tale in a long while. It is a lie of course, but all fish stories are, and it has the merits of originality and humor. We like Mr. Labouchere the better for such harmless fibs.—New York Times.

Like the Belt of the Summer Girl.

The ancient girdle was used for other material or actual purposes besides that of a receptacle for money. At it were hung the thousand and one odds and ends needed and utilized in every day affairs. The scrivener had his inkhorn and pen attached to it, the scholar his book or books, the monk his crucifix and rosary, the innkeeper his tallies, and everybody his knife. So many and so various were the articles attached to it that the flippant began to poke fun. In an old play there is mention of a merchant who had hanging at his girdle a pouch, a spectacle case, a "punniard," a pen and inkhorn and "a handkercher, with many other trinkets besides, which a merry companion seeing said it was like a haberdasher's shop of small wares." In another early play a lady says to her maid: "Give me my girdle and see that all the furniture be at it. Look that cizars, pincers, the penknife, the knife to close letters with, the bodkin, the earpicker and the scale be in the case."—Chambers' Journal.

A Handle to His Name.

"I understand," said a pompous employer to one of his clerks, "that you are in the habit of speaking of me by my Christian name?"

"It is possible that I have done so, sir," answered the clerk humbly.

"In future you will use the prefix 'Mr.' when alluding to me. I am 'George' only to my friends. Do not forget hereafter that I have a handle to my name."

"I will try to remember," said the clerk. "I know we always say George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Tom Palmer, but these are distinguished men, not everyday people, George—excuse me—Mr. Smythe," and the clerk retired to write out his resignation.—Detroit Free Press.

Pigeons Do Not Fly by Sight.

The numerous experiments made by balloonists have proved that pigeons are incapable of flying at any great height. Birds thrown out at 6,000 meters fell like dead, and even at the moderate height of 800 meters pigeons liberated by the balloonist Gaston Tissandier approached the earth in a spiral course. It is evident, hence, that they are not guided wholly by sight. To bring a point 300 miles distant within the range of vision it would be necessary to ascend nearly 20,000 meters. The carrier pigeon, starting on such a journey, must consequently start with faith in the unseen.—Philadelphia Press.

The Fickle and Raging Missouri.

The current of the Mississippi river averages from 2½ to 4 miles an hour in velocity, but a steamboatman on the Missouri would be pretty apt to call this still water, as that stream bowls along under ordinary circumstances at the rate of 8 and 10 miles an hour, and on state occasions it develops the speed of an avalanche. Engineers consider bridging the Missouri a difficult accomplishment, as the swift current is so versatile in its course and ruinous in its velocity that it is impossible to predict where the channel is liable to drift.—Alton Sentinel.

AT THE OLD TRYSTING PLACE.

The dead leaves rustle at my feet,
The moon is shining brightly;
Something has softly dimmed my eyes.
Across the path one shadow lies,
The path two trod so lightly.

It was upon a night like this
Love left us only sorrow;
I held her little hand in mine;
That parting is to me divine,
Then there was no tomorrow.

Since I have learned life's lesson well
Hearts are not easy broken.
Tonight all joys I have forgot;
There's something sacred in this spot,
Where sweet goodbys were spoken.

I'd feel less lonely with myself
If I were broken hearted;
Would I could live that night again,
With all its sadness-sweetened pain,
When love from love was parted!

What a Young Man Did.

A college graduate had hardly received his diploma before he was compelled to face poverty and family disgrace. His father, who had been reputed to be wealthy, was an embezzler and a fugitive from justice. His mother and sisters were entirely dependent upon his modest earnings in a broker's office.

He had planned taking an advanced course of professional study in architecture. His ideal occupation had to be abandoned. He was in love with a charming girl, but ceased to visit her since marriage was out of the question. An opportunity for a year's travel in Europe at a friend's expense was given up.

Year after year he maintained a hard, bitter struggle to make a living at uncongenial employment for his mother and sisters, to support his father abroad and to overcome prejudice caused by the family disgrace. He became a successful business man, but was prematurely gray at 40. His life was haunted by the ghosts of his youthful hopes.

Such lives do not furnish material for exciting stories. They are dull and prosaic, but are nevertheless heroic. To give up all that is dear to youth and to be loyal to family obligations sometimes is a crowning triumph of unselfishness.—Youth's Companion.

Many Ministers Present.

Ex-Secretary Lincoln, while United States minister to England, wished to get into Westminster on the occasion of a special service there. Archdeacon Farrar had told Mr. Lincoln to go to the east door of the cathedral to avoid the crowd and to inform the usher that he was the American minister, so that he could be conducted at once to the archdeacon's pew. When Mr. Lincoln sent in his name and title, the usher came out and said, with surprise, "For gracious' sake, how many American ministers are there?" It seems that several gentlemen of the cloth had each deftly made his way into the church by informing the usher that he was an American minister.—San Francisco Argonaut.

What Could He, Indeed?

A group of women in China got hold of a fashion magazine from the United States. After examining it carefully for some moments one of the number said to a missionary who had been talking to them against "foot binding:" "China women pinch foot. You say China woman velly bad. Melican woman not pinch foot. Melican woman pinch here," laying her hand on her waist. "Life here, life not in foot. Melican woman velly much more bad than China woman." What could the missionary say?—Louisville Recorder.

Five Years' Bank of England Paid Notes.

The stock of paid notes for five years in the Bank of England is about 77,745,000 in number, and they fill 13,400 boxes, which if placed side by side would reach 2¼ miles. If the notes were placed in a pile they would reach to a height of 5¼ miles, or if joined end to end would form a ribbon 12,455 miles long. Their superficial area is rather less than that of Hyde park. Their original value was over £1,750,626,600 and their weight over 90¼ tons.—London Tit-Bits.

Followed Plenty of Advice.

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind, etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system, as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject, long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Restorative Nervine positively contains no opiates or dangerous drugs.

THE question of continuing the World's Fair until January 1st is now up for consideration in the National board, the majority of which is in favor of it, but whether the foreign exhibitors will consent to remain is problematical. It is said that many of them are anxious to start for their homes.

O. C. Gregg superintendent of farmers institutes has completed his course for the season. He reports that he has conducted forty three institutes, and a gratifying degree of interest shown. There is practically no opposition to the institutes in any part of the state. The institute work has now so far progressed that its effects can be seen. Much has been done to stimulate an interest in a more intelligent manner of farming. More and more attention has been awakened in better means of stock raising and gardening by the institutes. Mr. Gregg is much gratified by the season. The annual report of the institutes is now in preparation. It will comprise about 400 pages, and 20,000 copies will be printed for distribution.

On the pension question, Joel P. Heatwole in the Northfield News truly says: It was not for gain or for gold the great mass of Union soldiers forsook the pursuits of peace and engaged in the most fiercely contested war of the century. A higher motive than the ridiculously inadequate pay of the soldier was their inspiration. Patriotism, not greed, was the force that recruited the armies of the nation; the invincible power that sustained them in the midst of disease and death until victory was won at the cost of a million lives. And Cleveland knows it. The old soldiers are not beggars. They ask no alms, but justice. That justice the nation that owes to them its existence will never suffer to be denied.

Bro. Stevens in the Warren Register comes back at McKenzie in the following decisive manner. Bro. Stevens was fighting for his country when Mac was a handsome little baby in the cradle: "The Crookston Times of last week says that nothing will ever make Judge Loehren "the tool of the pension agents to defraud the government as some of his predecessors have been." We challenge the Times to prove that any Commissioner of the Pension Bureau, either republican or democrat, was ever allied with the pension agents or any one else, for the purpose of defrauding the government out of a single cent. It is about time some of these blatant soldier-hating organs were made to substantiate a few of their wild statements, or to pull in their horns. Sen. Voorhees, of Indiana, whom no one will accuse of being a republican, in his great speech on the silver question a short time ago, said that the pension department had always been as honestly administered and as free from fraud and corruption as any other department of the government."

The Wabasha County Herald presents the following doleful picture of life in Wabasha county this fall. What a contrast to this country where the farmers have had lovely weather for harvesting and rain enough to make fall feed good and render plowing easy. The Herald says: "We are now passing through one of the most protracted dry spells in the history of Wabasha county or Southern Minnesota. Farm work is practically at a stand-still. It is too dry to plough, threshing is about done, everything about the barn yard is cleaned up and now nothing remains to be done but to wait and as a little recreation draw from one to two tanks of water a day from a creek five or six miles away. The farmer who has sufficient pasturage for his stock is especially fortunate. There has been very little growth since July and the only grass that cattle have to eat is what grew before that time and that is now dry enough to burn. The present hot weather has one redeeming feature too. It is finishing up the corn crop nicely, every ear of which will be hard and well ripened.

The work performed by the human heart each 24 hours is equal to the lifting of 129 tons to a height of one foot in the same length of time.

The pain was terrible, and it was thought the burn was so severe as to scar the child for life. I took the lady a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which after greasing the sore, she applied. It soon removed all the fire and eased the pain, and in ten days the boy was well, no trace of the scar remaining. J. D. McLaren, Keysport, Clinton county, Ill. For sale by S. A. A Monster Advertisement.

The largest advertisement that has ever been thrown out for wondering humanity to gaze upon is that of the Glasgow News, made of flowerbeds on the side of a mountain back of Ardenlee, Scotland. The words "Glasgow News" can be seen and plainly read at a distance of four miles. The length of each letter is 40 feet, the total length of the line 323 feet and the area covered by the letters 14,845 feet. The borders of the bed are sown with white flowers; the centers with red and purple. The effect from a distance is said to be very grand. —St. Louis Republic.

Matthew Arnold's Brutality.

"Do you take sugar and cream?" a hostess asked Matthew Arnold from behind the breakfast urn.

"Neither," he replied. "I only take cream when the coffee is nasty."

The feelings of the hostess may be imagined after this statement, to have her guest taste the beverage and direct the waitress to bring him sugar and cream.—New York Times.

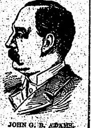
COMMANDER ADAMS.

He Is Popular In the Grand Army and Has a Good War Record.



JOHN G. B. ADAMS.

The new commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, Captain John G. B. Adams, was born in Groveland, Mass., Oct. 6, 1841, and lived in that vicinity up to the outbreak of the war, when he enlisted in Major Ben: Perley Poore's rifle battalion, which was afterward incorporated in the Nineteenth Massachusetts infantry. Before his regiment left the state he was made a corporal, and by rapid promotion soon became first sergeant, second and first lieutenant, and then captain, the rank he held when the war closed.

He was with his regiment in most of the battles of the Army of the Potomac in which it took part up to the siege of Petersburg, where he was captured with his regiment by the enemy and held for nine months as a prisoner of war. At Fredericksburg Captain Adams saved his regiment's colors from capture, and in the second day's fight at Gettysburg he was severely wounded twice. He was back in the field again in time for the battle of the Wilderness, though not fully recovered from his wounds.

After the war he worked in a Lynn shoe factory for 10 years and then became an inspector in the Boston custom house. After that he held the postmastership at Lynn for eight years, leaving there to take the deputy wardenship of the Concord reformatory. In 1868, on the first election of Grant to the presidency, he was the messenger who carried the electoral vote of Massachusetts to the national capital. In 1885 he was elected sergeant-at-arms of the state legislature, and has since been re-elected every year. His salary is $3,000, and he has the appointment of about 40 messengers, doorkeepers and other assistants.

His comrades of the Grand Army have loved to honor him. He was the first recruit mustered into Lander post of Lynn, now the second in membership in the order. He has served a term as department commander of Massachusetts and has 12 times been elected a delegate to the national encampments. For the past seven years he has been president of the Association of the Survivors of Rebel Prisons.

One Disadvantage of Civilization.

Generally speaking, the more civilized and refined races are more sensitive to pain than barbarous and uncivilized races. A New Zealander has been known to chop off his great toes so that he might get on a pair of boots which had been given to him. On one occasion a native Australian came to a settlement to get a wooden leg, his own leg being burned away at the knee. It had been wounded so severely that amputation was necessary, and as his tribe had no appliances to stop the flow of blood his leg had been simply burned off.

The Virtues of Cinnamon.

"No living germ or disease can resist the antiseptic power of essence of cinnamon for more than a few hours" is the conclusion announced by M. Chamberland as the result of prolonged research and experiment in M. Pasteur's laboratory. It is said to destroy microbes as effectively as corrosive sublimate.

FOUGHT FOR HOMES

WILD SCENES IN THE RUSH FOR LAND IN THE STRIP.

Hundreds Are Injured, Many Fatally, In the Struggle For Advantage—Crowds of Disappointed Boomers Reach Kansas City On the Way East.

GUTHRIE, O. T., Sept. 17.—The scenes that were enacted Saturday in the wild race for land in the Cherokee strip were beyond description. People fought like wild animals to get aboard trains to get into the strip, and hundreds were injured, some fatally. Men forgot their manhood; women lost their self respect in the wild struggle for advantage, and those who won secured but a chance in a lottery with numerous blanks and many prizes that were worse than blanks.

The arrival of morning trains from the south was the signal for the opening of the Cherokee strip. The people in the trains wanted to remain, but the deputy marshals with guns and clubs drove them out like so many cattle, telling them they must go to the lines, a mile away, and many walked there, old men and weak women

Fainting by the Way.

Then came a change of order and the cars were again thrown open and the crowd at the depot surged in, filling them to the roof, while men hung upon the trucks, upon the tender and on the mail car guards, and hundreds climbed upon the roofs. Those who had obeyed orders and gone to the line waited in vain for the train to come and were compelled to get into the last trains, leaving all hope of getting land or lots. During the terrible struggle to get on the first trains one man had his shoulder broken, one a leg dislocated and a woman an arm broken. Twenty others were badly trampled upon.

"Sooners" Get the Best.

A mighty shout went up as the first train moved out over the prairie, followed by a second, a third, a fourth and a fifth. The run to the town site of Perry was made in 40 minutes, but when the trains came in sight of the town two-thirds of the best lots were taken by the "sooners." Horsemen were pouring in over a bluff to the east at the rate of 50 a minute. Those on the first train secured some business lots and those on the second some residence lots in the outskirts, but the 7,000 in the other trains got nothing. It was a wild and exciting race all the way between the trains and the horsemen, with the odds in favor of the horses.

Woman Falls From a Train.

One unknown woman fell from the second train near Wharton and was fatally injured. Lorenzo Holcomb of Mulhall, O. T., was fatally crushed by his horse falling upon him, and John McCann had his leg broken, but afterward rode six miles and secured a good lot. A conveyance conveying Major Bateman of St. Louis and Rev. John Aughy of Mulhall was wrecked and Rev. Mr. Aughy badly injured. At one bad gulch on the trail three conveyances were wrecked and six horses and one man killed. Another man was fatally injured near by. All along the line are strung wrecked vehicles, and many injured people are being brought into Orlando and other towns along the line. The greatest number of certificates issued at any one place on the southern line of the strip was 33,000 at Orlando. Hennessey came next with close to 30,000, and Stillwater next 17,000. The largest crowd was at Orlando, and four-fifths of the 20,000 people massed there were bound for Perry, the county seat of Perry county, and now the largest city in all.

Many Leave in Disgust.

The first legal settlers to arrive at Perry found the town in possession of sooners and most of the stakes pulled up and destroyed. By mistake the land office had been built on a square of private lots and things are in such confusion that the streets, alleys and all are being held by lot stakers. The whole affair has been badly managed from beginning to end, and there are denunciations of the United States marshals and Secretary Smith for the shameful abuses that have been allowed. Hundreds of people have left in disgust, but there are still 20,000 people there holding down lots on the site and all over the adjoining claims.

Many Make the Race from Stillwater

At Stillwater the crowd numbered about 7,000. Most of them went into the Pawnee country and scattered wildly. One man was killed there and several badly injured. At Hennessey about 12,000 people were massed, three-fourths of them bound for the town site of Enid, and the same scenes were enacted there as at Perry. One man is reported shot over a town lot quarrel and one woman badly injured by throwing herself from the train. T. R. Ham of Paul's Valley beat the train on a bicycle and secured a fine claim adjoining the town site and ten other bicyclists got claims. So great has been the scope of country covered by the rush that details are late in arriving, but when the truth is known it is pretty sure that the death list will reach a score and the injured be numbered by hundreds.

Boomers Returning East.

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 18.—Over 1,000 ex-boomers passed through Kansas City during the day en route to their homes in all parts of the country from the Cherokee strip. A more tired and disgusted lot of men was never seen together. They had gone to the opening unprepared for such a tremendous rush as occurred, and were mainly those who had depended on the trains to take them into the strip.

HONOR FOR HENNESSY.

The Dubuque Prelate Invested With the Archbishop's Pallium.

DUBUQUE, Ia., Sept. 18.—After many weeks of preparation the investiture of Archbishop Hennessy is complete and the sacred insignia of authority brought from Rome was with much form and most impressive solemnity placed upon him by the highest representatives of the mother church in America. Not a tenth of those desirous of witnessing the ceremonies

Could Find Room to Enter.

Even many who hold cards of admission from the committee were obliged to turn away, and when the procession was formed, headed by Cardinal Gibbons and Monsignor Satolli, it was difficult to make a way for them to the portals of the sanctuary.

As the procession marched up the great central aisle the choir sang "Ecce Sacerdos." When the chancel rail was reached the "Hallelujah Chorus" by the choir was sung.

After the mass the ceremonies of investiture took place. There were the investment, the oath, the prayers, the consecration and benediction, in which Cardinal Gibbons took a prominent part. The ceremonies were carried out to the fullness of every detail and were strikingly solemn and impressive.

In the afternoon the visiting prelates and prominent personages to the number of 400 were banqueted at Mount St. Joseph's college. Addresses were made by Mgr. Satolli, Archbishop Ireland, Archbishop Corrigan and others.

REPUBLICANS FILIBUSTER.

Attempt to Prevent the Federal Election Bill Being Reported.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—The first skirmish over the federal election bill took place in the house during the day, and although the casualties were few it was manifest that both sides were in earnest and that the regular battle will be a severe one. The Republicans opened their batteries by declining to allow the "casus belli" to be even reported to the house. Under the generalship of Mr. Burrows the Republicans resorted to filibustering tactics and for the day had the best of the skirmish as they prevented the reporting of the measure, and the house at 2:45 adjourned without action. But before this was done the Democrats adopted a resolution revoking all leaves of absence except those granted on account of sickness. Over this resolution there was a very brief but very spicy discussion in which Messrs. Reed and Burrows took a prominent part.

Continued Roll Calls.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—For two hours in the house the skirmish fight over the federal election bill continued, Tucker, of Virginia marshaling the Democratic majority, and Burrows of Michigan taking charge of the Republican forces. Had it not been for continuous roll calls the house would have had a very lively session. At 2 o'clock the house paid a tribute of respect to the late J. Logan Chipman of Michigan and at 2:30 adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—The debate in the senate on the repeal bill was altogether on the affirmative side of the question. Two speeches were made in favor of the bill—the first by a Democratic senator, Mr. Lindsay of Kentucky, and the second by a Republican, Mr. Higgins of Delaware. Both were uncompromisingly and unconditionally for the repeal of the Sherman act. Mr.

Faulkner's Amendment.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14—In the senate, after the offering of Mr. Faulkner's amendment to the repeal bill—and a personal explanation from Mr. Hawley denying that he had been absent from the senate chamber more than three days during the present session, the repeal bill was taken up at 12:30, and Mr. Daniel of Virginia addressed the senate in opposition to it.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.—Senator Voorhees moved that the general debate on the repeal bill be closed next Wednesday, and the vote be taken on Saturday, Sept. 23. Senator Dubois of Idaho objected to any limit of debate, and Mr. Voorhees at 2:30 withdrew his motion. The house transacted routine business of an unimportant character.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—Neither senate nor house transacted any business, adjourning to attend the ceremonies of the centennial of laying the Capitol cornerstone.

Embezzler Weeks Caught.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—District Attorney Nicoll has received a telegram from Secretary of State Gresham quoting one, received by Secretary Gresham from the United States minister to Costa Rica announcing the capture in San Jose of Francis N. Weeks, the embezzler of over $1,300,000, and assuring the United States government that the authorities in San Jose would surrender the fugitive in response to the request of the Washington authorities for Weeks.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—The new White House baby will be known hereafter as "Esther." This old-fashioned name has been selected for the child by the president and Mrs. Cleveland. It is stated that the selection of this name has no significance other than the partiality of the parents for scriptural denominations, and that it means "a star" and "good fortune."

A NEW TARIFF BILL.

PREPARING A REVISION OF THE CUSTOMS SCHEDULE.

Prospect of a Heated Debate During the Coming Winter—That Blessed Baby. Facts Regarding the Little Stranger Are Hard to Get—Unwholesome Curiosity.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—[Special.]—Now that we have reached the end of the tariff hearings before the ways and means committee, it is important to learn what the policy of the committee is to be as to the preparation of a new tariff bill. Chairman Wilson informed your correspondent today that he and his colleagues would get to work at once upon their difficult task of preparing a revision of the customs schedules. Mr. Wilson said that if the hearings had any influence upon the committee it was to increase their conviction, not only that the schedules need revision, but that this is a good time to undertake the work.

"I must confess," said Mr. Wilson, "that a few weeks ago several members of the committee, including myself, were in doubt as to whether this were a good time to undertake general tariff revision. The financial troubles which were then sweeping over the country seemed to indicate that the business interests would, for a time at least, welcome escape from any change of customs duties which might affect their operations and the values of their raw materials. But now that we have heard from a considerable number of manufacturers, importers and producers, we are convinced that in many lines this is a better time to make changes of the tariff than if it were a season of great activity and prosperity.

"Manufacturers are now to a certain extent recasting their lines, reorganizing their forces and proceeding, so far as the future is concerned, with great caution and care. Therefore this is a fitting moment to revise the tariff schedules so that the reorganization, the formation of new plans and the making of contracts for the future on a new basis of tariff may all come together. Of course I cannot say how much revision we shall undertake. We now have the evidence before us, and the committee will proceed with great care and conservatism. We wish to injure no one nor to add to the burden of any interest, and yet to keep always in mind the demands of the people for lower tariffs.

"People who do not live in Washington, and who do not come to this city occasionally to see how things are done, have little idea of the difficulties that are in the way of the preparation of a tariff bill. Were our committee ever so radical, the influences to which it is subjected by senators, representatives and others of both political parties would tend to keep us in conservative lines. Probably we shall be able to finish the construction of our bill within six weeks, and during the coming winter of course there will be another tariff debate in both houses of congress."

Another Tariff Debate.

It is understood here to be the policy of the managers of the house to curtail debate upon the coming tariff bill, restricting discussion to perhaps two or three weeks; hence it is not impossible that the new tariff bill will go through the house and reach the senate in the latter part of November. The discovery has been made that the radical silver senators hope to be able to prevent the passage of the repeal bill until the tariff bill comes over to their body. In order to do this they will find it necessary to filibuster most desperately, but they are desperate, if one may judge by their expressions. Senator Stewart of Nevada, the grizzled warrior of silver, says, for instance, that he alone and single handed can prevent action in the senate for a period of 30 days.

Senator Stewart's Threat.

"And I will do it, too," he adds, with a significant thump of his brawny fist upon his desk. "I have filed away for many years the speeches of Republicans and Democrats in the house and senate, and I have at my finger's end now about a cord of speeches in favor of free silver made by men who are now trying to urge this iniquitous measure through the senate. When I get ready, I will send speech after speech of this kind to the reading clerk, and when this clerk drops down in his tracks exhausted I will send for another clerk; when he gives up, we shall have a third one, and how are they going to take me off my feet and reach a vote? If it were necessary, I could keep this up all winter and fill the hospitals with reading clerks, but I don't think that will be necessary. Public opinion is changing, and the people who a few weeks ago were rampant for passage of this bill to destroy silver are now turning the other way. We'll beat them yet."

The White House Baby.

There is a great desire among the society women at the capital to see the new baby at the White House, but as yet only a few of Mrs. Cleveland's intimate friends have had the pleasure of beholding Baby Ruth's sister. President Cleveland has been very much annoyed by the notoriety given to the little stranger. The president is very much opposed to newspaper gossip about the members of his family. Mrs. Cleveland agrees with her husband in this, and professional gossipers as well as women newspaper correspondents find a very cold welcome at the White House now. Mrs. Cleveland declines to be interviewed even by the best women writers and deliberately discourages and frowns down all efforts to obtain facts and incidents from the White House home circle.

The contrast between the White House now and under the late administration is very marked. During the Harrison regime the women correspondents and letter writers were made welcome at the executive mansion. Mrs. Harrison and her daughter and daughter-in-law were always willing to afford help and suggestions to the bright and industrious women who furnish the public with news about the occupants of the White House. While it cannot be said the Harrisons courted notoriety of this sort, they sensibly recognized the fact that public interest in the presidential family is always very keen and that no harm whatever can come from satisfying this curiosity.

President Cleveland, however, thinks much of this curiosity is unwholesome and that any gratification of it is to be suppressed. He cannot see why the birth of a baby at the White House should attract any more attention than the birth of a baby in any other home in the land. The general opinion here is that the policy of the Clevelands in this respect is rather extreme and that the efforts made to conceal facts and prevent publicity are wholly unnecessary. [illegible] are the lines drawn at the White House that the women writers who [illegible]

Men, women, and children have, however, taken their lard, and entertained their dyspepsia for generations. This was because an acceptable substitute for lard had not been discovered. It is here now—science's latest boon for the kitchen and the family.

Cottolene

Is the new, dainty, odorless, pure, and satisfactory substitute for lard. Every member of the family can eat and digest the food into which it enters. Bright housekeepers see this point and use Cottolene.

Dan McKinnon reports business at the Ideal restaurant improving. All who know Dan's style will patronize the Ideal, and all who do not will want to. You make no mistake if you try the Ideal. It is an ideal place to board at.

W. F. Bugg has returned from the hospital at Brainerd very much improved by the surgical operation that was performed there, and expects to be able to resume his position in the Valley Roller Mills at an early day, whereat his friends all rejoice with him.

Ada Index. "Sandy McDonald came near losing one of his horses last Saturday afternoon. The horses were taken out of the barn and tied to a wagon to make room for some cattle belonging to the east side meat market and during the absence of the men one of the horses layed down and in rolling cut a large artery on some glass. When found the animal was in a very weak condition and but for the prompt attendance of Wm. Neucome, would have soon died.

The McKinnon boys report a yield of 12 bushels of wheat per acre.

The big Walker saw-mill is putting in long days—running from 7 a. m. until 9 p. m.

The first killing frost of the season occurred on the night of Sept. 15th. No wheat caught this year.

There are those who freely predict that wheat will sell in this market for 90 cents before snow falls. The fellow who could ensure that could make a large-sized fortune.

Col. Bobleter came up from St. Paul last week to enjoy a hunt with August George and A. C. Schmidt. They have been having great times hunting the festive chickens.

The McIntosh Times says that Knute Rollag had the misfortune to break his shoulder recently. He had his stacking all done previously, however which makes him feel somewhat more reconciled to enforced idleness for a time.

The farmers have their fall plowing well advanced for so early in the season.

E. M. McCrea, the Canadian colonization agent, has been joined by his wife and family from Prince Alberic N. W. T. They have taken rooms in the Vance block and will remain all winter.

Geo. J. McManus who is located at Winona now, was in the city last week attending to his interests here and introducing Mr. R. W. Richards, who expects to locate in Crookston and represent the New York Mutual Life.

A hunting party consisting of J. V. E. Wyatt, E. Q. Flanders, P. E. Misgen and his brother-in-law Andrew Filler, went north on Saturday and brought in a lot of game. The JOURNAL was generously remembered in the distribution of the spoils.

Dr. A. A. Just returned from a pleasant visit at the World's Fair at Chicago on Saturday morning. Reports having had a large-sized time while away. Took in all there was to it except what he didn't see and that was a good bit. Is very enthusiastic over the big show.

Shortly after Mrs I. U. Jennings arrived in Chicago last week she received a telegram announcing the death of her brother at her old home in Michigan and left at once to attend the funeral. So this trip will be a sad one for her instead of all she had anticipated of pleasure at the World's Fair.

We have reports of three, four and five bushel yields of wheat north of town. Such yields are quite discouraging and suggest the idea that the weeds must be getting in their work up that way. The weed question is getting to be an important one for the farmers to solve but must be met somehow.

On Thursday morning of last week Ole E. Rude found one of his horses dead in the pasture. The horse had been in apparently good health when last seen alive, and Ole is of the opinion that the animal was killed by lightning during the severe storm on Wednesday afternoon. It will prove a severe loss to Ole at this time when he needs all the horses he had for fall plowing.

Our readers will perhaps remember that early in July mention was made in these columns of a quarter section of land sowed by B. C. Jorgenson very late. Mr. J informs us that he finished cutting that wheat the day before the big rain last week and he thinks it will be far ahead of his early wheat. It was, however, an experiment that he would hardly care to follow every year.

The heavy rains of Wednesday last practically shut off all but stack threshing for the balance of the week though some did try it again on Saturday. A first-class thunder shower as late in the fall as that is a great novelty in this country. The rain left the land in excellent shape for fall plowing.

The Grand Forks News of Friday, Sept. 15th, says: "Hugh Thompson, President of the North Dakota Milling Association, was in city yesterday. He had quite an animated talk with local members of the association here and told them plainly that if they wanted wheat they must buy it now. It is understood that in consequence of Thompson's visit the association will pay three cents a bushel more than Duluth prices, less freight and handling charges."

Hugh Thompson: My wheat did not yield remarkably well and I see no reason to change my estimate, made before harvest, of an average of eight bushels per acre for Polk county. On one piece, summer-fallowed, last year, I received 21 bushels per acre but the balance was far below that which convinces me that summer-fallowing when properly done is the thing to do. Farmers could make more clear money by working one-half the land they do if they would summer-fallow the other half every year.

A. C. Rhinehart: Speaking of summer-fallowing reminds me of my experience. I took a piece, soon after I finished my spring's work, plowed it very shallow—just skimmed it so light a team would plow 5 or 6 acres a day—all they could walk over, then just before harvest, when the weeds had a good start, I turned them under about the average depth and I never had a better crop than that land produced. I am duly convinced that when you hear a man say that he can't make summer fallowing pay something is wrong with his methods. Either he don't [illegible] right or something else is wrong for it is plain that all we have to do is to kill the weeds and summer-fallowing properly done will do that every time.

Ed. Ross is driving Collins' hack in those days.

Casper Stuhr, of Euclid, is reported very ill.

Will Himmelsbach reports an average yield of 18 bushels 1 hard per acre.

Ole P. Renne was up to attend the Viggo Ullmann speech on Monday evening.

Geo. Castle lost a valuable mare while coming home from Dakota last Thursday.

H. C. O'Neil, a Chicago auctioneer, is disposing of Saake's Jewelry stock. He is an artist in his line.

Dr. Wattam and wife came down from Warren on Sunday, and left on the evening train for Minneapolis.

Dept. Postmaster Al. Losey started for the World's Fair on Sunday evening, to be gone a week or ten days.

Miss Eunice Abott, daughter of E. E. Abbott of Mentor is doing clerical work in the office of Judge of Probate Benson.

Dr. A. Nelson came up from Fertile Sunday evening, and remained till Tuesday morning to hear the Ullmann lecture.

Ed. Roberts is threshing his wheat on Watts' place. Says he don't know exactly how much it will go per acre, but it will set him out of debt whatever.

Cedar siding is taking the lead for siding, same as cedar shingles are. It is much the best, will last years without painting. Stewart Lumber Co., have it.

Dr. Warninger: Ham Nut made a mile in 2:43 this week. That's 10 seconds better than he did at the fair. Brown Bennett, owned by Chris Greenhalgh, also did a mile in 2:43.

Andrew Eiken returned from Duluth on Monday morning and will buy wheat this fall. Says the body of Henry Berthiaume had just been brought to Superior just before he started for this city.

Deacon Robert Bain came up from Fisher on Monday, with his son James and enjoyed himself during the day chatting with his old-time Crookston friends. The Deacon is wonderfully hale and hearty for a man of his age.

Cedar shingles, five kinds, cheaper and much better than pine, will last at least twice as long. For sale by Stewart Lumber Co.

Mayor Stephens: Mr. Ullmann's lecture was fine. By-the-way, he's a woman's rights man. A woman suffrage bill received a majority of 64 votes in the Storthing, but it takes a two-thirds majority to pass a measure of this kind.

A. Kaiser of Fosston was in the city yesterday on business and incidentally dropped a few remarks about the coming fair at Fosston, which he predicts will be the best—in point of agricultural exhibits—ever held in the county.

Wm. Box Jr. came down from the farm near Warren on Saturday evening looking as fresh and rosy as could be. Referring to his accident last summer he said he came nearer passing in his checks that time than he ever did before and for a time he thought he was a goner sure. Says times have been somewhat dull about Tacoma but is sanguine of a revival of business soon.

On Saturday morning the driving team of Pierce & Kelsey took fright and ran away. In attempting to run into Collins' livery barn they smashed down his hay scales, broke a window out of the office and landed in a heap in an arm chair. One of the animals broke his leg and had to be killed.

Miss Addie Dickmann arrived last week from a visit to the old country and will remain awhile in the city with her sister, Mrs. G. H. Palmer. She brought G. H. a meerschaum pipe from Germany that renders G. H. envied among smokers. Hib feels very proud over his gift and well he may, as it is a genuine daisy.

Mr. L. P. Hunt, secretary of the Minnesota board World's Fair commissioners, writes the JOURNAL that they would like samples of the present wheat crop, wheat which be entered in the Minnesota exhibit. Any farmer who has threshed and has a fine sample, would no doubt receive a premium upon it. A peck is the amount required and it should be addressed to L. P. Hunt Minnesota Building, Jackson Park Chicago, Ills.

John J. Reeves was arrested and brought before Judge C. S. Spendley on Monday, charged with uttering forged paper. He had passed various and sundry forged checks, for which he received certain sums in the coin of the realm and now he meditates in the county bastile awaiting the action of the grand jury in default of $300 bail.

Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Adams leave this week for a trip to the World's Fair.

Dr. Henault returned on Tuesday evening from a hunting trip to Fosston.

C. A. Sharkey returned on Wednesday, from a pleasant trip to the World's Fair.

Frank Gravel and Dave Turner intend to leave for the World's Fair on Saturday evening.

Dr. Robertson returned from a pleasant outing at Maple Lake on Tuesday evening.

Buy fir flooring, it is cheaper than pine and as hard as oak. Stewart Lumber Co. keep it.

Clerk of the Supreme Court, Kline, was up with Col. Bobleter after chickens last week.

W. E. Kelsey left for Chicago on Saturday evening to attend the World's Fair.

Messrs. Hoch, Seaman and Snaaker, came up from Minneapolis this week to complete the brewery deal.

A. M. Stewart: Business is picking up. Many of the farmers are buying lumber to put up granaries to store their wheat till the price goes up.

For cedar shingles and siding, fir flooring and ceiling, spruce siding and finishing go to Stewart Lumber Co., yard and office near N. P. depot.

Comrade Cleveland was in from Maple lake this week chatting with the boys. The season at the lake has been quite successful, but he thinks he will be in better shape next year than ever to entertain big crowds.

Mrs. J. F. Davis died at her home in McIntosh on Tuesday and the body was brought to this city for interment. Mrs. Davis was formerly Miss Benjamin and lived in this city for awhile where she was united to Mr. Davis, who is a son of L. Davis of Andover.

Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Spendley have been called upon to part with their baby boy who died at 11 o'clock on Tuesday of cholera infantum. The little one was something over 6 months old. The bereaved parents have the hearty sympathy of many friends in their sore affliction.

For ceiling or partition use nothing but Washington fir, it is all kiln dried and will not shrink, oil it and it looks well. For sale by Stewart Lumber Co.

The mayor called a special meeting of the city council last Tuesday evening to consider the question of fixing the broken sewer. There was nothing done further than the appointment of another committee, and instructing the city engineer to confer with Engineer Russell of Grand Forks, and report the result of their conclusions to the council.

I. W. Webb, who was awarded the drainage contract conditional upon furnishing bonds in the sum of $50,000, failed to put up the bonds as required on Saturday last and the contract will have to go somewhere else. Mr. Rhinehart's chances are considered good as he is no doubt the lowest responsible bidder.

For interior finish white spruce lumber beats anything, it is fine grained and can be highly polished if desired, is cheaper than pine. Stewart Lumber Co. handle it.

Brakesman Bill Talleday fell from a box car at Euclid on Monday and was seriously injured. At first he thought he was not much hurt and resumed his duties until reaching Argyle, where he was forced to quit and await the down train to return to Crookston. At last accounts he was doing nicely.

Services at the Congregational church next Sunday as usual, 11 a.m. and 7:30 p. m. The pastor will speak Sunday morning on "Christianity, a religion for this present world." In the evening the topic will be "The Making of the Bible or Canon of Scripture." Everybody made welcome.

Rev. L. W. Squier expects to leave tonight for the fair to be gone a couple of weeks. Rev. Thos. Billings of Fisher is expected to fill the pulpit in the M. E. church next Sunday. Mr. Squier will be accompanied by Rev. C. F. Sharpe of Fergus Falls, formerly pastor here, but at present the presiding elder of the district.

President Ullmann of the Norwegian Storthing received a warm welcome from his countrymen on Monday. The mayor kept open house at the club room in the Bickett block and hundreds came to pay their respects to their illustrious countryman. In the evening the opera house was well filled to listen to an eloquent address given in the Norwegian language.

W. E. McKenzie went into Rasmussen & Moltz' store on Tuesday and Rasmussen was showing him how to handle a gun when the gun suddenly got in its work and Mac came within an ace of catching the contents, which missed him by a few inches passing through the glass door. Fortunately no one got hit but both Rasmussen and Mac were scared out of a year's growth which neither of them can well afford to lose as they need it in their business.

Stewart Lumber Co. are now receiving a large consignment of lumber and shingles from Seattle and Tacoma. This lumber is all kiln dried and consists of cedar shingles of all grades, cedar siding, white spruce finishing lumber from eight to twenty inches in width, spruce siding, fir flooring four and six inch, fir ceiling four inch, and fir partition stock four inch. This lumber can be sold from five to ten dollars a thousand less than for same quality of pine and is much better in every respect. We see no reason why they should not sell large quantities of this lumber here.

Only One Month More

And the World's Fair—the great Columbian Exposition—will be a thing of the past, a memory for those who have visited it. If you have not yet seen its wonders, remember that one month more is all the time that remains for you to feast your eyes on such an exhibition of the world's progress in science, mechanics, art and all things that go to make up civilization, as has never before existed, and will not, in all probability, be assembled again during your life-time. From Christopher Columbus to Chicago is four hundred years, as the calendar measures time, but when we see the the models of his caravels, and then look on the modern steamship, the latest war vessel, the magnificent railroad trains, the electrical appliances of to-day, it seems as though the interval, measured by achievement, might have been four thousand years. Four hundred years from Columbus to Chicago—and four hundred miles from the Twin Cities to Chicago via the trains of the Burlington Route, splendid and luxurious with reclining cars, standard and compartment sleepers, and peerless dining cars. For tickets via this line and any information apply to your home agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Among the incidents of childhood that stand out in bold relief, as our memory reverts to the days when we were young, none are more prominent than severe sickness. Special Council Meeting to Consider the Broken Sewer Question.

The Normal College Entertainment —Doc. Henault's Escape, Etc., Etc.

As foreshadowed in these columns last week, the drainage contract was finally awarded to A. C. Rhinehart, of this county, and work will soon be commenced and pushed to completion as rapidly as possible before the freeze up. We are glad that a Polk county man gets the contract, as this ensures work for all within the county who want it, instead of its being done by outside parties.

Special Council Meeting.

Special meeting of the city council of the city of Crookston held in the city hall on Tuesday evening Sept. 19th, 1893.

Roll call.

Aldermen present, Anderson Jennings, Jerome, Morrisey, Norrie, Walker, Cromb, Simmons.

Aldermen absent, Childs, Marlatte, Watts.

Call of the Mayor read.

Crookston, Minn., September 19th, 1893.

A special meeting of the city council is hereby called to meet at the city hall, on Tuesday, September 19th, 1893, at 8 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of determining the best plan for building a new sewer to relieve or remove the existing break in the Third street sewer outlet.

A. D. STEPHENS,
Mayor.

The city engineer reported that the break in the main sewer on Third street would continue to be a heavy expense to the city, and would probably increase in expense in the future, as a sediment was constantly settling near the pump.

Moved by Alderman Morrisey, seconded by Alderman Simmons, that the city engineer be instructed to procure the service of W. S. Russell, of Grand Fork, they to make an examination as to the feasibility of repairing, and probable cost thereof, the Third street sewer outlet, and report at a meeting to be called by the mayor when the report is ready. Carried.

On motion council adjourned.

E. C. CARRUTH,
Clerk.

Opening of Crookston Normal College.

Messrs. Tuve and Christiensen, the proprietors of the new institution of learning in this city, have fitted up the McKinnon hall for college purposes, and will open the school next Tuesday and give a musical and literary entertainment in the college rooms in the evening commencing at 8 o'clock sharp. As will be seen by the program below, an enjoyable evening's entertainment has been provided.

To Polish Their Teeth.

Dr. G. G. Henault had quite an experience while on his visit to Erskine last week, which a little bird whispered to us, as the genial doctor is not saying a word. He went out in the woods on Sunday to meditate—and shoot any bird that might be inclined to be belligerent, and while returning he suddenly became aware of the presence of a large timber wolf following and evidently watching him. It was near the witching hour of twilight and the doctor began to get a little nervous when he discovered another, not far away on the other side. He hurried up a little and the animals quickened their pace also and began to get nearer and nearer. He thought of everything he had ever done or said in his life and redoubled his [illegible] somehow [illegible] forgot that he had a [illegible] Upon approaching [illegible] the wolves gave up the chase [illegible] away into the gathering darkness of the woods with howls of disappointment, and allowed the doctor to escape, which he was not slow in doing. When he reached the house at which he was staying he had no strength left, but as soon as he fully realized that he was yet alive began to brace up. He said it was the worst experience he ever had, however, and does not care to repeat it. The wolves had no doubt heard what a good dentist doc. is and wanted him to polish their teeth on probably.

This in addition to the regular trains on the 5th and 7th will give ample opportunity to all to visit the Fair. The trains will leave Crookston at 8 a. m. and returning leave Fosston at 8 p. m. A reduced rate of one fare and a third for the round trip has been secured. Remember that the fair takes place on the 4th, 5th and 6th of October, with additional horse races on the morning of the 7th.

Friends.

A blending of pathos and humor, laughter and tears, sentiment and nonsense, comprises the drama "Friends," which was given at the Grand Tuesday evening. The play is a good one and the company is much above the average. The piano playing by Mr. Henderson in the second act is a great feature of the show. Mr. Henderson is a master of the instrument and combines the rare qualities of a [illegible] actor as well as a musician, two accomplishments which seldom go together.

Suit for Damages.

The Waterworks Company here has got into trouble with the North Dakota Milling Association. When the new power house was put up, the Waterworks Company contracted with the Milling Association to furnish power for the Valley Roller mills, but owing to the low state of the water in the river this summer the Waterworks Company shut off the power to the roller mill and wanted to annul the contract. The Milling Association commenced action against the power company to compel fulfillment of contract, and the power was turned on again, but the association will ask for damages.

Guardian Asked For.

The question of the appointment of a guardian for Thos. Sanders of East Grand Forks, was argued before Judge of Probate Benson yesterday. Attorney Cochrane, of Grand Forks appeared for Sanders, and Attorney Argile for the petitioner, Jas. Sanders. Thos. Sanders is a farmer, is 73 years of age, and very strong and hearty, but at times he becomes excited and orders his family off the place. Hence his children want a guardian appointed. Judge Benson didn't think there was sufficient evidence to warrant the appointment of a guardian, and so discharged the case.

W. B. DAWLEY, P. M.

Thos. R. Johnstone of Fisher, who returned a couple of weeks ago from a trip to Scotland, was in the city Tuesday and talked entertainingly of the old country and the condition of the people, which he claims is much better than the condition of the farmers and laborers of this country. He will do collection work for Larsen, Carpenter & Co. this fall.

Charley Lindell was setting up the cigars this week on account of the arrival of a boy in his household Tuesday.

Mrs. Bert Duntley returned yesterday from a visit to the fair and the Twin Cities.

The opera house was so cold Tuesday evening during the performance of "Friends" that the audience couldn't keep warm with overcoats on, and the management received much well-deserved cussin' for not having the steam heat turned on.

WARSHIPS SUNK.

DISASTERS AT SEA IN WHICH HUNDREDS WERE LOST.

The Russian Monitor Pousalka Believed to Have Sunk With Nearly 200 on Board—Sixty Lives Lost by the Sinking of a Haytian Cruiser.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 25.—The iron monitor Pousalka of the Russian navy is believed to have gone down in a storm on the Gulf of Finland while on her way from Revel to Helsingfors. Much wreckage, apparently from her, has been washed ashore, and the body of a Russian marine was picked up on the coast almost opposite the point where she must have been during a high gale several days ago. The Pousalka put to sea with 12 officers and 166 men, all of whom are believed to be lost. She was built 25 years ago, and was counted among Russia's best coast defense armorclads.

Loss of Pousalka Confirmed.

PARIS, Sept. 27.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg confirms the report that the iron monitor Pousalka of the Russian navy has been lost.

HAYTIAN WARSHIP LOST.

The Alexandre Petion Goes Down With All on Board.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—A report of the sinking of the Haytian warship Alexandre Petion was received in this city during the day. All on board, with one exception, were lost. All told 80 were drowned. Among the number were many prominent officials and diplomats of the republic. The news of the catastrophe was brought to this city by ex-Minister to Hayti J. S. Dunham, who arrived on Prince Wilhelm I, from Port Au Prince. The disaster to the Petion occurred on Sept. 6, about 50 miles south from Cape Tiberot.

Report Confirmed.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—The report of the sinking of the Hytian warship Alexandre Petion, has been confirmed by the captain of the Prince Wilhelm I. The number on bourd was 60, not 80 as first reported.

SIXTY PERISHED.

News of the Burning of a Russian Ship.

VICTORIA, B. C., Sept. 27.—The Northern Pacific steamer brought word of the burning of the Russian steamer Alphonse Reavecke, with a loss of 60 lives.

AN OPEN SWITCH

Sends a Fast Express Crashing Into a Freight—Eleven Killed.

KINGSBURY, Ind., Sept. 23.—Eleven bodies resting upon improvised slabs and tables under the roof of the modest Masonic hall of this village and a score of injured as inmates of the city hospital of Peru, 70 miles distant, tell the story of the railroad horror on the Wabash Friday morning.

A moment of forgetfulness or absentmindedness on the part of a brakeman, who is given the best of reputation by the Wabash officials, tells the story of the seconds that preceded the catastrophe. The passenger train was running in two sections. The first section had passed the station and the switchmen evidently forgot the second section and turned the switch for a freight to go out. A moment more and the second section dashed into the freight standing on the sidetrack.

A Miner's Carelessness.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Sept. 22.—By an explosion of gas in the Lance colliery No. 11 of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal company at Plymouth, five men were instantly killed and five others seriously injured. The names of the dead are: David M. Jones, contractor; William Jones, rock miner; John Flanagan, mason; Joshua Golightly, assistant mine foreman, and Owen P. Jones. The accident was caused by Joshua Golightly, who entered a body of gas with his naked lamp.

LEASE CANCELED.

Wisconsin Central Again in Control of Its Own Directors.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 27.—A decision cancelling the lease of the Wisconsin Central to the Northern Pacific was rendered during the afternoon by Judges Jenkins and Seaman of the United States court. Judge Jenkins delivered the opinion of the judges and announced their decision. It was held that if the Chicago and Northern Pacific had a claim it was simply as a contract creditor and that its interests were not to be considered paramount to those of other creditors.

Opposed to the Geary Law.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 23.—At the meeting of the State Congregational association the following resolution was adopted: The General Congregational Association of Minnesota, representing a membership of over 50,000, respectfully petitions the congress of the United States to repeal the so-called Geary act for the exclusion and deportation of the Chinese. We call upon our senators and representatives to use, in our behalf, every possible effort to secure such repeal.

GOD, MAN AND MATTER

BRETHREN ALL, YET THEY INDULGED IN SHARP WORDS.

Rev. Joe Cook Criticised the Hindoos, and the Hindoos Attacked Christianity—The Shouters of the Midway Plaisance. Breezy Letter From the Fair.

WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 28.—[Special.]—The parliament of religions reached a point where sharp acerbities develop. The thin veil of courtesy was maintained, of course, but behind it was ill feeling. Rev. Joseph Cook criticised the Hindoos sharply and was more sharply criticised in turn. He said that to speak of a universe that was not created is almost unpardonable nonsense, and the Asiatics retorted that a universe which had a beginning is a self evident absurdity. Bishop J. P. Newman, firing at long range from the banks of the Ohio, declared that the orientals have insulted all the Christians of the United States by their misrepresentations of the missionaries, and the orientals, with their provokingly calm and supercilious smile, replied that this was simply the bishop's ignorance.

Buddhist Philosophy.

In response to the question direct, three learned Buddhists gave us in remarkably plain and beautiful language their bedrock belief about God, man and matter. The first they ignore, the second they regard as a link in an endless chain, and the third they consider—well, the only word I can think of, to fit their idea is unmanageable. The common people, they admit, believe of such philosophy only so much or so little as they can comprehend. The advanced Buddhists hold as follows, and I condense now from the statements of all three: "Good and evil are not from an omnipotent will, but inhere in matter and are determined solely by results. Happiness and misery are results, not punishments. The universe has no center or outside, and no beginning or ending either in time or space. There never was a creation; there never will be a destruction. Man cannot know an infinite; his entire duty is to know man and improve his own character. Happiness is possible by continued improvement, but not at all certain; and whether happiness be attainable or not, the duty of man is just the same."

Being pressed to define the distinction between this and what is called atheism in this country, H. Dharmapala of Ceylon said: "One has to be an atheist in the sense employed by Max Muller. Without that atheism no new religion, no reform, no resuscitation, would ever have been possible. Without that atheism no new life is possible for any one of us. * * * In the sense of a Supreme Creator, Buddha says that there is no such being, accepting the doctrine of evolution as the only true one—with the corollary, the law of cause and effect, he condemns the idea of a Creator. The supreme god of the Brahman and minor gods are accepted, but they are subject to the law of cause and effect." He went on to demonstrate that this is the only faith by which it is possible for man to get rid of all prejudice, become supremely unselfish, recognize a brotherhood with all living things, develop his psychic powers till past, present and future are equally clear to him, and finally become absolutely free from evil and lapped in the felicity of infinite repose. His peroration was as pretty a thing as a Chicago audience ever heard. Demosthenes never exceeded it.

Cantankerous Remarks.

Swami Vivekananda, the Hindoo monk, was not so fortunate. He was out of humor, or soon became so, apparently. He wore an orange robe and a pale yellow turban and dashed at once into a savage attack on Christian nations in these words: "We who have come from the east have sat here day after day and have been told in a patronizing way that we ought to accept Christianity because Christian nations are the most prosperous. We look about us and we see England the most prosperous Christian nation in the world, with her foot on the neck of 250,000,000 of Asiatics. We look back into history and see that the prosperity of Christian Europe began with Spain. Spain's prosperity began with the invasion of Mexico. Christianity wins its prosperity by cutting the throats of its fellow men. At such a price the Hindoo will not have prosperity."

And so they went on, each succeeding speaker getting more cantankerous, as it were. Even among the most enlightened Christians some very queer things were said. Thus Dr. Paul Carus of Chicago said, "The ancient patriarchs preached the love of enemies," which astonished many who thought they had read all the Bible. Dr. H. R. Haweis of London argued that man's capacity for music is a proof or demonstration of the immortality of the soul. It is an odd, perhaps amusing, fact that most of the peculiar things were said on the day when only British Christians talked. Some ill natured people say there will be a row yet, but of course there will not, for Christians, Buddhists, Brahmans and all the rest are gentlemen. Rev. Joseph Cook said, "I am in a condition of fear and trembling regarding its outcome," and then proceeded to attack the Roman Catholic church for its position on the school question. This was at the meeting of Methodist ministers.

Trouble at the Plaisance.

While the orientals in the Art institute gave us Christians diversely digs in their provokingly smooth way, their congeners on the Midway plaisance are out of one trouble only to get into another and are in a new sort of hot water every week. Little by little they are being reformed out of all resemblance to their original conditions, and the street is now far more quiet and conventionally decorous than the Bowery. Alviss Tskender Khan Coroyanty and Archague Khan Coroyanty, commissioners here for the shah of Persia, after trying all sorts of protests with the managers, sent an ultimatum to Secretary Gresham demanding that the Persian flag and all Persian emblems be removed from the so called Persian theater. They allege that there are no theaters in Persia and that this thing is a disgrace and a misrepresentation. Just the same, it has secured an injunction from the circuit court, and until that is disposed of the commissioners cannot interfere with it, but it is far more decent than it was.

A general order was then issued for all the shouters to shut up. They paid no attention to it, and so a patrol wagon and force of guards went through the plaisance, and the visitors had more fun than on any other day of the fair. "Bismillah!" said the wild Turk, who has made so much noise and fun for the crowd, "no shout, no show!" He then invited the crowds in pantomime. Several others did the same, and it was funnier than the shouting. The Dahomey touters did not understand the guards and shouted louder than ever, so they were arrested. Altogether a dozen arrests were made and there were several pretty fights. Well, the shouters are silenced, the dancers are reformed, and the wild fakirs are gone. [illegible]

SIX DAYS OF DEBATE.

The Present Week in Congress Likely to Be Devoted to Talk.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25.—There is a reasonable certainty that congress will spend the entire week in debate. The first business in the senate will be the resolution offered Saturday morning by Mr. Stewart declaring for the independence of the three great branches of the federal government. Mr. Stewart will make it a text for an attack on the administration on the ground that it has trespassed upon the constitutional powers of the legislative branch of the government in the case of the pending repeal bill. Notice of formal speeches have been given by Senators Bate of Tennessee, Perkins of California, Pasco of Florida and Dubois of Idaho. These speeches will not fill in all of the time, as the lengthening of the morning hour will give seven full hours for debate each day. But after Monday evening the list of speakers will doubtless be increased, and there will be a half dozen senators who stand ready to talk at any moment they are called on to do so.

In the House.

The house will, on Tuesday next, enter upon the two weeks' debate of the bill to repeal "all statutes" relating to supervisors of elections and special deputy marshals, reported by Mr. Tucker from the committee on election of president and vice president and representatives in congress. According to the terms of the order reported by the committee on rules, the house will proceed to its consideration on that day "immediately after the second morning hour, or if said morning hour shall not sooner have ended, then at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said day." And it further provides: "That the consideration of said bill shall be resumed immediately after the second morning hour of each legislative day thereafter, up to and including the 9th day of October next. That on the next legislative day, to-wit: the 10th of October, at the hour of 1 p. m., the house shall resume the consideration of said bill, and shall proceed without further debate and without further intervening motion to vote, first, on the pending amendments, if there be any, then on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill, then on the final passage thereof and then on motions to reconsider and lay on the table, should such motions be made. If from any cause this order shall not be fully executed on the last day mentioned herein, then this order shall continue in force and be operative each legislative day thereafter, until said bill shall be fully disposed of."

The Past Week.

During the past week neither house transacted any business, the senate debating the silver bill and the cloture resolution and the house Democrats spending the time trying to get a quorum in order that the bill to repeal the federal election law might be reported. Thursday a quorum was secured and the bill was reported.

Attacked the President.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25.—Speaking to his resolution regarding the independence of the co-ordinate branches of the government, Senator Stewart of Nevada attacked the president bitterly for what he termed the interference of the executive with the legislative branch of the government. At 1:45 Mr. Stewart yielded the floor without finishing his speech, and Mr. Cameron of Pennsylvania spoke against the repeal bill. The house had barely a quorum and transacted no business of consequence.

AS TO PENSIONS.

Commissioner Lochren Submits His Annual Report.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Pension Commissioner Lochren has submitted his annual report to the secretary of the interior. The number of pensioners on the rolls of the bureau is 966,012, with a net increase of 89,044 during the past year. During the year 24,715 claims for increase of pension and 81,990 for additional pension under the act of June 27, 1890, were allowed. In the same time 115,221 claims for pension and for increase were rejected. Claims pending consideration July 7 numbered 711,150. Amount of money paid for pensions during the year was $156,740,467. Balance at the close of the year was $2,437,871. Appropriations for the next fiscal year, Commissioner Lochren states, will be ample and the estimates for the fiscal year 1895 amount to $162,631,550. Referring to the estimates for the fiscal year 1895, Commissioner Lochren says:

"If these were based wholly on the experience of former years and the capacity of the force of the bureau to handle cases through the formal stages of examination to allowance, the result would be a much larger estimate. But 1895 is 30 years after the close of the war. The pension roll, in view of its size, compared with the number of men enrolled in that war, will, in my opinion, by that time have reached its limit and begin to decrease."

To Admit Utah.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—The house committee on territories considered the bill for the admission of Utah as a state and it will be reported to the house in the near future by Mr. Wheeler of Alabama, chairman of the committee, with a recommendation that it pass.

Black Hills Fire Losses.

LEAD, S. D., Sept. 25.—Damage to burned bridges along the Black Hills and Fort Pierre road is estimated at $25,000, at Continental $30,000, Rapid Creek $10,000, and at Runkel $15,000. The loss of timber cannot be estimated.

PHOTOGRAPHS IN MULTIPLE.

The Portraits Turned Out by Thousands to Satisfy a Fad.

Hidden under the staircase of a frame building on Pennsylvania avenue is an oddity in the shape of a photographer's shop. Nobody ever goes there to have his picture taken, and yet the business is a profitable one. For one thing, the proprietor has a long lease of the premises at a rental of only $3 a month. His establishment amounts to nothing more than a large closet, which is utilized as a darkroom for work. There is nothing to be seen of screens, skylights, shabby furniture, which looks as good as new when taken by the camera, or the instruments for holding the head steady, which are so suggestive of torture to children. The words "Look pleasant, please," are never uttered in this secluded studio.

In fact, the photographer himself is very rarely to be found on the premises. People send in pictures of themselves to be reproduced by an extraordinary process of multiplication. They must be cabinet sized photographs. He has an instrument which looks very much like a stereoscope of the sort that one looks through at photographs, only about three times as big. In place of the part for the eyes there is a small camera, and a few inches in front of the latter is a kind of frame in which the cabinet portrait to be reproduced is put. The camera, though such a little one, has 88 lenses. One might compare it to the eye of a bee, which is multiple in like fashion.

It is a snap camera and makes 88 miniature copies of the cabinet portrait at one shot on a single negative. From the negative the pictures are printed off in sheets of 88 distinct photographs each. It does not take long to produce them in large quantities at this rate, and so the operator finds a profit in selling them at the price of $1 for 50. He sells 100 for $2, 500 for $7, or 1,000 for $14. It is a very cheap way to procure a lot of counterfeit presentments of one's self. A good many people order 500 or 1,000. At the time of the inauguration such photographs of Mr. Cleveland were worn as badges by some of the visiting political clubs, with a ribbon fastening each one to the buttonhole of the wearer.

The back of these little photographs, which are a novelty, are spread with dextrine. It serves as a sort of mucilage, so that the pictures can be licked like postage stamps and stuck upon anything. Commercial travelers affix them to the corners of their "advance cards" sometimes, which they mail a week or two ahead to firms in towns which they expect to visit shortly. Thus the recipients get a notion of the appearance of the agent before he comes along if they were not previously acquainted with him or are agreeably reminded of his physiognomy. In the same manner theatrical people stick them on their letters, and various other professional persons adopt similar practices. In fact, it is quite a fad.—San Francisco Examiner.

One of Ralph Waldo Emerson's Stories.

Mr. Emerson himself had a story—I forget whether I heard it in a lecture or in conversation—about a New England come outer who went into a hatshop and selected for himself a costly hat. The hat was put up and the dealer supposed he was to be paid, but the man whom he had thought to be a purchaser said simply: "Oh, I pay nothing for anything. I am the man who does not believe in money." The poor dealer had a note to meet at the bank that day and hardly knew how to do it. He looked with dumb delight upon his customer and said: "I wish to God, sir, that nobody else believed in money! Take the hat, with my thanks to you for coming for it."

Mr. Emerson would say this was all spontaneous—it was natural on the part of the customer and on the part of the trader. But when, the next day, another man who had heard the story came into the shop and selected for himself his hat and said that he did not believe in money, the dealer refused the imitator where he had accepted so readily the inventor. And Emerson drew the moral from the story which I want to draw now. A prophet who speaks the word that comes to him from the living God speaks, I may say, with the living God's power. But he who imitates the prophet has no spell.—Edward E. Hale's Address.

Engagements and Marriages.

The following figures have been compiled from the combined recollections of 32 maiden ladies and 45 military officers, all resident in the county town of one of the home counties. Out of the 1,540 engagements to marry which their joint reminiscences present, 46, or about 3 per cent, ended in lunacy, incarceration or decease of one of the parties; 385, or 25 per cent, were broken off at the instance of the girl and 262, or about 17 per cent, by the man; 169, as near as possible 11 per cent, were interfered with by friends; 154, exactly 10 per cent, came to an end for reasons not made public; 185, or about 12 per cent, faded away without incident in the lapse of years; 108, say 7 per cent (not included in any previous category), led to actions for breach of promise. The remainder, a pettifogging 15 per cent, resulted in marriage.—London Letter.

A Young Woman's Reasoning.

"I am told, dear, that Jack Rattlepate spent most of his vacation in your back parlor. Aren't you giving him rather a dangerous amount of encouragement?"

"Why, no, dearest, he is merely a boy. To be sure, he is a year older than I, but I shall be out next winter, while Jack has two years more in college, and it will be six years after that before he can earn much of anything. So practically he is six years younger than I, and that makes him 12. It is absurd to talk of encouraging a boy so young as that."—Harper's Bazar.

HOW TO SEE THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Suggestions as to the Most Convenient and Economical Method.

When you go to the World's Fair do not take a trunk with you if you can possibly get along without it, but pack your few necessary traveling articles in a hand bag or grip and carry it along with you. You will never know what a lot of annoyance you have been spared in this way. Then get your tickets from Crookston to Chicago and the greatest Fair the world has ever seen, reading via St. Paul, and thence via "The Northwestern Line" to Chicago. The Northwestern line runs three superbly equipped trains from St. Paul to Chicago, leaving St. Paul at 8:00 a. m. daily, 6:25 p. m. daily except Sunday, 8:00 p. m. daily, making quicker time to Chicago than by any other line. When you arrive in Chicago you will find World's Fair omnibuses at the Northwestern line depot which will take you to the Van Buren street station of the Illinois Central road, where trains for the Fair leave every three minutes, and where World's Fair steamers can be taken for the Fair every ten minutes, or you can take a steam ferry from the depot of the Northwestern line direct to the same place via the Chicago river and making connections with the famous whaleback steamer Christopher Columbus for the Fair for 25 cents. When you arrive at the Fair you will find a number of first-class hotels within a stone's throw of the main entrance and dozens of good restaurants where meals can be had to accommodate the most modest purse.

By following these simple directions your trip is bound to be a pleasant one. See that your ticket from St. Paul reads via the Northwestern line, and remember that by this route you will obtain the best service, the greatest luxury, the most complete comfort. Be sure and buy your tickets at starting point.

For Cash.

You can buy a half section of land handy to the city, about 300 acres in crop and looking nicely, at $20 per acre, or if you do not have all cash we will give you figures on application at the JOURNAL office. Owner desires to engage in other business and is prepared to give a great bargain. [14-tf]

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Montana, Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

SING ME A SONG.

Sing me a song, some old loved tune,
To ease my heart of its weight and care;
Sing as you did when the world was June,
With glorious sun or silver moon,
And the perfume of flowers was in the air.

Sing me a song; some little air
That you used to sing in the long ago,
When you were younger, but not more fair,
And we knew naught of the burden of care.
Sing sweet and soft and low.

Sing me a song, then we'll say good night.
We'll say good night with a tear and a sigh,
To our own June time, when the world was bright
With summer sun or soft starlight.
We'll say good night and goodby, goodby.

—George F. Brennan in Brooklyn Eagle.

A WILD NIGHT.

An engineers' party of one of the big mines in Sonora, Mexico, were going into Nogales, A. T., to spend a few days and rest from the hard labor they had put in during several weeks. They rode north all day and scarcely exchanged a word between one another, but as they got toward their destination it began to grow dark, and then an argument arose. Some wanted to push on and get into the United States, which was still about 15 miles away, and others wanted to go into camp just where they were and move on again early in the morning.

Both plans met opposition from a few, and then one member of the party said he knew where there was a house at which they could stop. He had never stopped there, but he had seen the place from a distance and had been told that it was a sort of tavern. The plan seemed a good one, and all were willing to go off the road and find comfort for the night.

Then the man who knew of the place began to describe the location exactly. All listened attentively, and when he had finished one member of the party, Fred Brewster by name, said: "Boys, I ain't in it. You fellows go to your hotel, but I'll ride all the way to Nogales by myself before I go there."

"Why, what's the matter?" all asked at once.

"Well, I can't tell you in a few words, but I have been there once, and I will never go there again unless I am carried."

All became excited at once and wanted to know all about it, and at the same time they made up their minds to go to the place. But they did not like to leave Fred on the road and urged him to come along. They said there was no danger with such a crowd, and they were all well armed and good fighters.

"But you can't fight with what you find there," said Fred.

This remark made the others only more curious, but they told Fred to hurry up and give his reasons, as they would have to be moving along in a minute.

"Well, fellows, I'll tell you," said Fred hesitatingly, "but the fact is the place is haunted, and I won't go there, so goodby."

A change came over the crowd in an instant, and all called loudly to Fred, who had started off on his horse, to come back.

"I guess we won't go to that place tonight," said one member of the party, and all came to the same conclusion in a moment. Fred came back, and it was then agreed to camp where they were. But a strange silence had fallen over the party at the mention of a ghost. The idea of confronting the supernatural will shake the nerves of the oldest plainsman.

As the fire was being built and the work of fixing for the night proceeded with, all who came near to Fred told him how glad they were that he had mentioned the fact about the haunted house. Not that they were afraid of ghosts. Oh, no! But a place of that kind could not be comfortable after it had such a name.

After supper had been disposed of and clouds of tobacco smoke were mingling with the glare from the campfire, the crowd revived a little, and asked Fred to tell the story of his experience in the haunted building, but all the time every man was looking over his shoulder at frequent intervals. Still the story had to come, and as Fred had aroused the curiosity of the crowd he knew there was no use to try to get out of it, so he proceeded at once when he had found a comfortable spot on his blanket, where he could look into the fire and see the wreaths of smoke curl upward until they mingled with the stars.

"It's only a couple of months ago," commenced Fred, "since I was at that place, and why I am here now is more than I understand. I didn't say anything about it at the time, because, you know a fellow don't like to speak of such things.

"But I was caught out one evening over there on the desert and was about to make my bed on the horse blanket when I saw the house from a distance and thought I might be able to get some sort of lodging there, so I went in that direction. Before I got to the place I struck a good well marked road and wondered why I had never heard there was a road over that way. But I didn't bother very much, as I was too glad to get to the place, which, as I neared, I saw to be quite a large building. When I got up to it I found that it was a hotel and seemed to be in a prosperous condition.

"The landlord came out and took my horse, telling me to go into the front door, where I was met by his wife, who proved to be a kind, good natured lady and seemed anxious to do everything she could for me. They got me a very good supper, and we sat in the corridor talking about different things until it grew quite late.

"Both were so good natured and pleasant that I hated to leave them, but when I said I wished to retire they led me across a large clean court with a fountain playing in the center and trees and flowers blooming everywhere.

"My rooms were large and furnished in a substantial manner, but somehow they looked very old, [illegible] whitewash on the walls was smooth [illegible] a sort of grey in color as if from age. There were no pictures [illegible] the walls, and the only relief to the large blank space was the [illegible] seemed to be looking at me while I was looking about the rooms and stirring the fire, which was necessary because the place is high and the nights are cold.

"It must have been about midnight when I blew out the candle and got into bed. Oh, how cold the sheets were. It made me feel as if I was getting into a coffin. But it did not make much difference, and I was soon dozing off, but I was too tired to go to sleep at once.

"As I lay there it seemed to me I saw a pink flame come from the candle and rise up toward the ceiling, where it disappeared. Then another came, and they kept coming, but I thought I must be very fatigued and worn out, and that they were the result of my imagination. Then some animal seemed to rush across the fireplace, but when I looked all I saw was a pile of red embers and the corners of the room filled with dark, impenetrable shadows. I listened, but as no sound struck my ear I thought I had better give myself a rest and turned my face to the wall and went to sleep in an instant.

"I may have slept several hours, and it may have been only a few minutes, but I suddenly came to my senses and found the room filled with a peculiar red glare that seemed to come from everywhere at once. Then I heard strange sounds, as if there were people in the rooms. But I couldn't see any, and I might as well say that I began to feel very queer and reached for my revolvers, but found that I had left them in my saddle. But I had my knife, which I took hold of and kept ready for any emergency.

"The silence was unbroken for a long time, and then I heard one of the most unearthly yells that ever struck my ears. It seemed just outside of my door, so I got up and peeped out. But all was quiet, and the fountain was splashing in the moonlight, and the water in the basin was sparkling cheerfully. It did not seem as if there was anything wrong, but I determined to ask the landlord about it and went across the court to find him. It was very cold, and as I called to him my teeth chattered dreadfully. No answer came to my call, so I went back to my room and put on more clothes.

"Then I walked all over the house, but as I did not know where the landlord's room was of course I couldn't find him.

"I had reached the front hall where I entered the building and was debating what to do when that unearthly howl reached my ears again. This time it was just in front of the door, and I opened it as quick as I could so as to see what was there.

"But it was the same as before. I looked over the desert for miles on one side, and on the other the view was broken by the mountains which came to within a short distance of the house. Seeing nothing, I stepped outside, my knife in my hand, and looked around.

"Before I could realize what was going to happen I saw two enormous panthers come from somewhere. They were standing on their hind legs, and growling ferociously.

"A moment later I was paralyzed with fear and then turned to the door so as to get inside and escape the monsters. But horror! The door had blown shut and the latch had caught on the inside, so there was no way to open it. There may have been some string or other arrangement, but I did not know where to find it, so was at the mercy of the animals.

"There was nothing to do but fight, so I took a firmer grip on my knife and waited for the attack, but felt that it was certain death to me. The beasts were the largest I ever saw, and they were beside me in an instant. The largest one made a jump for me, and I dealt it a blow over the heart that I thought settled it, for it rolled over on the ground and laid still. The other was frightened for a few minutes and hesitated about attacking me, but I now had hope, with only one to fight.

"How I finished the animal is more than I can tell, as my memory is very dull on that point. But he made a rush at me which I had to dodge, and I made an attempt to get behind him. I had almost succeeded and could have done my work right there, but my foot slipped and I fell down, and before I could get to my feet the panther jumped on me. But in some strange way he jumped for my feet, and I got hold of his tail and commenced gashing his hind legs with my knife.

"For several minutes the air seemed in a whirl, and I was all mixed up with my antagonist, but unable to tell in a telling out. We fought and rolled over on the ground until I was covered with wounds, but at last I saw my chance and plunged my knife in the animal's stomach and gave a downward rip. It did the work enough to let me get up and find the animal's heart with the steel.

"I looked at my two victims a moment and then started to awaken the landlord by pounding on the door [illegible]

"Suddenly I was grabbed from behind with terrible force, and turning around saw that both of the animals I had left for dead had got up again and were about to make short work of me.

"I had no show this time and calmly waited for the end to come. Both the panthers got hold of me and started for the mountains, dragging me over the stones and logs as if I was a feather, and the speed they made seemed swift as lightning. I had no idea of where I was going and didn't care, as I had no hope of escape and fully expected to be taken to the panthers' lair and devoured.

"I was right about the place, because I was soon dragged to a sort of gorge that had a cavern at one end, and I was taken to this place and laid on the ground, and both my enemies sat and looked at me [illegible]

"Somehow I was not hurt very much and was able to move easily. I made an attempt to get up, but was promptly [illegible] fellows came out and wanted to make a meal of me right there, but were stopped for some reason by the older ones.

"What was to be done with me was now a most important question to me. The old ones did not seem as if they wanted to devour me, but the cubs do it. But this the cubs objected to and commenced on my feet, which were badly bitten before the old ones could stop them. Then one of the boldest of the cubs made a rush for my throat, but I kept him away with my arm.

"This seemed to anger the old panthers, for they chased the young ones back to the cave and then took hold of me again and started somewhere.

"They went faster than before, and it was not long, although it seemed ages to me, before I was laid down on the ground. I opened my eyes and found that I was in front of the door of the hotel. I looked again and saw that it was open, and that the panthers were sitting down and watching me closely. But the temptation was too great, and I had to seize the chance of escape, although it looked like certain death.

"I made a sudden jump and got inside the door and closed it after me as the two beasts threw their huge bodies against it.

"I was now safe and commenced calling the landlord and wondered why he had not heard the fight. It was also evident that he had got up and opened the door. But no landlord came, and as it seemed to me I had looked in every part of the house before I gave up finding him and went to my room, where everything was just as I had left it, except that the candle had gone out, but the fire was burning brightly.

"I wanted to wash my wounds, and as there was not much water in the pitcher on the stand I went out to the basin of the fountain. It was most refreshing to let the soft cold water fall over my head, and in a short time I did not feel the least bit as if I had been through such a terrible struggle. I sat down on one of the seats in the court for some time before going to bed, but the moonlight, flower trees and the splashing fountain were not long in producing a feeling of drowsiness, so that when I laid down I was asleep in an instant.

"When I awoke, it was late in the day, and the sun was streaming in all around me. For several minutes I was dumfounded and wondered how I got into the place where I was.

"It was the same room in which I had laid down to sleep, but it looked as if nobody had entered it for 100 years. I was lying on a pile of rubbish, and everything around me was in the last stages of decay. I got up and went into the court, but the fountain was dry, and nothing could be seen but crumbling walls. There was no sign of vegetation, and the trees and flowers had vanished with the water.

"I was in an awful state of mind and thought at first that I had slept in that room for years and years. But when I made my way to the outer door by climbing over rubbish and fallen timbers and looked out the first thing I saw was the two dead panthers, and a short distance off my horse, with his saddle still on him, tied to a cactus.

"My mind was in a whirl, but I had no desire to skin the animals, so I got on my horse and went to Nogales as fast as I could, where I put in several days doctoring my wounds and getting my mind back into its natural state.

"I did not attempt to solve the mystery, as I felt sure the whole affair was supernatural, and the sooner I can forget it the better I will feel."

The crowd had all been silent during Fred's story, and most of them had allowed their pipes to go out, but when he had finished several commenced to ask questions. But all were glad they had not passed a night in the old place and said they did not blame Fred for not wanting to go there again.—San Francisco Call.

Buddha Avenged Himself.

A curious story is told of a white elephant once shown in a circus at Bangkok. The circus belonged to an Englishman named Wilson. He advertised boldly in the sacred city of Bangkok that he had a real white elephant in his show. His tent was crowded to suffocation, and sure enough, the elephant which appeared was snow white. It had been whitewashed, and the clown made great fun out of rubbing himself against it and bringing the white off on his clothes. It is easy to imagine how outraged the Siamese felt, and European residents feared that he would be lynched, but the Siamese loftily remarked that Buddha would avenge himself—that man and elephant were to die, and when the elephant died at sea a few days afterward and the proprietor was carried off by dysentery as soon as he landed at Singapore, they were justified of faith exultingly.—London Tit-Bits.

Why Buried With Head to the West.

All Christian nations, I believe, bury their dead with the head to the west. There is a "why" for this, just as there is for every other known custom. As far as I have been able to ascertain after an exhaustive search of all the leading authorities, our present custom in burial modes originated in primitive times, when the people believed in corporeal resurrection. They had an idea that inasmuch as the star that heralded Christ's coming first appeared in the east, judgment day would be ushered in with the Lord's appearance in the same direction, and that when they arose from the dead they would be facing him whose mission will be that of sounding the doom of all earthly things.—St. Louis Republic.

Must Be Identified.

Mr. and Mrs. S. W. McCaslin of Chicago are the first couple who have been compelled to advertise in the papers requesting all World's fair relatives to bring identification papers. The advertisement, which appeared in the personal column of the Chicago Tribune, reads as follows: [illegible]

THE CRIMINAL EYE.

Frequently an Aid to the Detective In Following Cases.

Eyes are the most certain revealers of the criminal nature. Many an expert detective tells a criminal by just one glance—not at him, but from him. The criminal eye varies greatly in setting, but not so much in color. Sometimes it is deeply placed in the head, as if it tried to hide, fearing the result of its own involuntary revelations. Sometimes it is bulgy, protrusive like a frog's and heavy lidded. Such eyes, taken in connection with some other signs, denote treachery, lechery, loquacity, mendacity and general cruelty, with just enough cowardice to prevent the criminal from doing murder except insidiously or through others.

Of the criminal eye there are many remarkable anecdotes. The murderer Francesconi had little about him to indicate the ferocity that ambushed in his breast. His forehead was high and smooth; his beard was plentiful. To most people he rendered himself rather companionable by a certain cheap facetiousness that often masquerades as wit, and on account of this social quality Francesconi's conceit was tolerated, and his huge egotism did not have its full chance to repel people.

But years before his crime a young girl—afterward the Countess della Rocca—who had never left home and who lacked experience of life, recoiled from him violently when introduced and refused to endure his presence. When questioned why she behaved thus toward one who stood so high socially, she answered, "If that man has not already murdered people, he will do so." This girlish prophecy very soon came true, and when Lombroso inquired by what sign she had foretold she replied: "The eyes. I saw him in his eyes."—Henry Austin in Donahoe's Magazine.

The Farmer's Mission.

A plaster image which commands an extraordinary sale in the country districts of Germany represents society thus:

On the steps of a sort of stairway which ascends to a little level landing and then comes down again are seven human figures. One represents the emperor, with scepter and crown; another, a nobleman bearing a sword; another, a priest in his cassock; another, a helmeted and armed soldier; another, a beggar with staff and pouch, and last of all, at the foot of the ladder, a farmer or peasant carrying a heavy sack of grain.

Upon each of these figures there is a little legend which represents what each character is supposed to be saying.

The emperor—who, by the way, is not the highest placed figure in the group, that honor having been reserved for the Jew—says, "I govern you all."

The nobleman says, "I lord it over you all."

The priest says, "I pray for you all."

The Jew from his commanding position at the "top of the heap" says, "I make money out of you all."

The soldier says, "I protect you all."

The mendicant says, "I beg from you all."

The farmer, sweating under his burden at the foot of everything, murmurs, "God's will be done, but I feed all six of you!"—Youth's Companion.

The Desire For Happiness.

There are some stars that we cannot see at all when we look straight at them, but which become visible when we look to one side. So there are things that we cannot get when we try directly for them, but which presently fall into our laps if only we try hard enough for something else. Everybody knows it is that way with happiness. Make it a primary object, and it leads you a doubtful chase, but ignore it in the rational pursuit of something else, and presently you may find it perched unnoticed on your shoulder like a bird whose tail has felt the traditional influence of salt.

So, of course, the very first essential to the achievement of happiness of any durable sort is to rise above the necessity of being happy at all. It may be conducive to this sort of achievement to remember that great spirits in all times have found in their own involuntary discontent, a spur to exalted endeavor. Neither Lincoln nor Balzac nor Carlyle was a happy man, but they put the saddle and bridle on their own depression and rode it under whip and spur into immortality. Columbus himself had low spirits, and Socrates and the judicious Hooker both had Xantippes.—Exchange.

Trinity's Bronze Doors.

Two of the three bronze doors which William Waldorf Astor has given to Trinity church, in New York, have been put in places in the side portals of the church and already have attracted the attention of many visitors. Each door is the independent conception of a sculptor, while all three are parts of the plan of an architect. Richard M. Hunt drew the architectural design into which the doors are fitted. To Carl Bitter was assigned the great front portal. His work is now under way, having been delayed by the sculptor's occupation in the decoration of the Administration building at the World's fair. When he has finished his panels and the front door is cast in bronze, it will be swung, and the whole will be formally dedicated.—New York Letter.

Routed the Dog Catchers.

Dog catchers on Tuesday attempted to capture a canine belonging to a certain butcher. The butcher and a crowd of bystanders gave chase after the wagon, and overtaking it stopped the vehicle, cut the harness, set the horse loose, released all the imprisoned dogs and gave the dog catcher and his assistants a severe mauling.—New York News.

An Obscure Litterateur.

It seems odd that a man could make $12,000 a year in New York by writing fiction, die and remain as utterly unknown as if he had never existed. Arthur Elder Nelson, whose death occurred some days since, was such a man. He did not get even a three line obituary in any newspaper. His dealings were mostly with two huge New York concerns devoted exclusively to the manufacture of dime and half dime novels, and his specialty was the fiction that deals with boy pirates, boy highwaymen, robbers and other equally interesting juveniles. He started six years ago, when he was 25. Educated and refined (he was an Oxford man), he came to this country shortly after attaining his majority. His first effort in the line of blood and thunder narrative was made during his leisure as a drug clerk.

The success of his production encouraged him to persevere, and for the last two years he had worked steadily. His publishers say that his own share of the profits of his pen last year were $12,000, and he lived pretty well up to his income. He spoke four languages, and his wide reading and ripe scholarship enabled him to wander at will in the highways of literature, plundering wherever he saw an opportunity. Thus his works were, as a rule, mere plagiarisms brought down to his reader's level. He never aspired to anything higher. Certainly if he had wished to be a serious writer his income could never have exceeded say $3,500 a year, even had he attained great vogue. As it was, he kept a horse and carriage and enjoyed life.—Journalist.

A Folding Bridge.

There is a peculiar folding bridge at Canal street, Chicago, at a place where the Chicago river is too narrow to permit the use of a swing bridge with a pier in the middle of the stream. It consists of a movable roadway which divides in the center over the middle of the stream. Each half of the bridge is hinged at about one-third of its length from the shore. This permits the parts overhanging the river to drop down in front of the abutments, while the shorter hinged portions rise, forming a gate which intercepts the passage of teams or pedestrians. The two halves of the bridge are supported by heavy bars reaching down from steel towers about 50 feet high.

The whole bridge is 177 feet long, the movable part 100 feet and the actual span over the Chicago river 80 feet. The roadway is 21 feet wide, and there is a seven foot passage on each side. The whole structure is built of steel and weighs 180 tons. It is operated by a 10 horsepower engine on each side of the river, aided by a system of counter weights, the machinery being below the level of the bridge. It is operated very quickly, and the span has been opened or closed in 15 seconds. The structure cost but about $40,000, including the masonry abutments, and is very strong, a 20 ton steam roller passing over it without serious deflection.—Exchange.

Indian Simplicity.

An amusing story comes from the Wabigoon Lake Indian reserve, Canada. It seems that white men, regardless of treaty stipulations, have been poaching upon the preserves of the Indians. The red men resented this, but were at a loss what to do about the matter, as the white men paid no heed to their objections.

After much debate among themselves they concluded to carry their case to the highest authority. The chief went to Barclay station, therefore, and sent the following cable message:

To Prince of Wales, London:
White men cutting timber on Eagle lake. Would you kindly come and settle matter? This was given to us. Please advise.
KAH KIWEASH, Chief Wabigoon Lake.

We may smile at the Indian's simplicity, but his confidence and his wrongs certainly deserve some consideration.—Youth's Companion.

The Warm Salt Bath.

Warm salt baths taken at a temperature of 90 to 95 degrees are eminently suited for those with whom the open sea bath does not agree. Many people believe—and it is an idea that is hard to kill—that a warm bath at this temperature is "relaxing," but as a restorative after bodily fatigue, especially in hot weather, or as a means to relieve muscular pain and tension, it is difficult to find a better substitute. We go further and hold that such a bath is better than open air bathing for the nervous and debilitated, and especially in cases of irritability arising from mental worry, sleeplessness, intemperance and late hours. And the efficacy of such a bath in lumbago, gout, rheumatism, paralysis, sciatica and neuralgia is time honored and is capable of everyday demonstration.—London Lancet.

Depended Upon the Decision.

Judge B. F. Dennison was once arguing a case before Judge Roger S. Greene, and in the course of his remarks he kept constantly referring to "Browne on Statute of Frauds," always making two syllables of the word "Browne" and pronouncing it as if it were Brown-ee.

Judge Greene fidgeted around in his chair, stood the mispronunciation as long as he could and then blurted out:

"Judge, why do you say Brown-ee? You wouldn't call me Green-ee, would you?"

Judge Dennison slowly replied in a rather dry tone of voice:

"That depends on how your honor decides this case."—Germantown Telegraph.

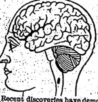
Ivy a Foe to Dampness.

The growth of ivy on the walls of houses renders the walls entirely free from damp, the ivy extracting every particle of moisture from wood, brick or stones for its own sustenance by means of its tiny roots, which work their way into the hardest stone. The overlapping leaves of the ivy conduct water falling upon them from point to point until it reaches the ground without allowing the walls to receive any moisture whatever from the beating rain.—Detroit Free Press.

MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle; six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

THE train robbery business has had a set-back in Missouri, where a decoy train, loaded with police, was sent out and held up by robbers. Two of the latter were killed, and six captured.

England was enjoying a big snowstorm last week, which followed a fortnight of unprecedented hot weather. Weather prophets in England are predicting an unusually severe winter there.

THE fight commenced by the elevator companies on the farmer's elevator came to a sudden end in the decision of Judge Willis dissolving the injunction suit brought by one Henry Rippey, of Martin county. It was brought ostensibly to test the constitutionality of the act and the judge decides that the act is constitutional. This ends it unless the companies happen to think of something else.

THE attention of our readers is called to the advertisement of A. H. Burke in another column. Mr. Burke is the ex-governor of North Dakota, and is now in the grain commission business at Duluth. "Honest Andy," as he is called in North Dakota, will sell your wheat for you, and give you all there is in it. If you contemplate shipping any wheat, it will pay you to correspond with Mr. Burke at Duluth and see what he can do for you. The North Dakota papers say that farmers who have shipped their wheat to him have all done well.

The Detroit Record says: It is learned that instructions will soon be issued from the Indian department whereby the Indians are to be permitted to cut, bank and fell all dead and fallen timber on ceded and unceded Indian lands. This is a wise step as thereby the Indians will realize some compensations and the public some benefit from the millions of feet of valuable dead and down timber, which otherwise would soon go to waste and ruin. It is also rumored that the department will probably modify matters in reference to the sale of pine and other lands so that the same will be put on the market as soon as examined and appraised.

THE St. Paul Globe seems never happier than when sticking pins into a republican, generally because the victim is a republican. Just now the Globe is after Mayor Wright with a sharp stick, and alleges that "Fred" is "haughty" and pompous" and a colonel in the militia, while every one who knows F. P. Wright well knows that the attacks of the Globe are wholly malicious. Mayor Wright is one of the most prominent young business men of St. Paul—one whose sterling business qualities has made of him one of the most successful of St. Paul's business men—we wish as much could be said of the writer of the Globe articles, who is naturally one of the best-hearted men in the newspaper business, indefatigable worker and a man who will do all in his power to serve the cause he happens to represent, whether independent, republican or democratic. What is the matter with Col. Wright? Why he is all right, a republican, a good business man and one of the best mayors St. Paul ever had. If the Globe did not attack him, but on the other hand found words of praise, his friends might then well suspect something wrong in him.

The rush of people to obtain a claim upon the Cherokee strip just opened to settlement, reveals a phase of human nature that is singular to say the least. For days and weeks they waited patiently for the signal gun that should start the wild rush for lands, hundreds more than there is land for, and when the signal came at last they rushed pell-mell, men, women, teams and all in one heterogeneous crowd without order or system. As a result many were severely hurt by being run over and some even killed. And for what was all that headlong haste? Why for a chance to get a bit of land that has never been nor ever will be equal to a claim in the Red River Valley that could be secured without danger to life or limb. Land in Northern Minnesota can yet be had under the homestead laws, can also be bought at extremely low figures, and it is a wonder to us that people will [illegible] themselves to get claims [illegible] the chances [illegible] do. Hundreds of disgusted boomers are said to have left the strip almost as soon as they had reached it, and it is predicted that hundreds of those who succeeded in getting a claim will soon give them up and leave—just as soon as they find out how very worthless they are. Why didn't those people seek homes in Northern Minnesota where they can find the richest soil in the most healthful climate on earth?

Ignatius Donnelly has spent many years of his life in the vigorous attempt to convince the farmers of the state that they are little better than slaves—and the more land they have the worse they are off, but once in awhile he slops over and reveals his true inwardness, gives himself away involuntarily. He has been out in Montana and writes back as follows: "But of one thing I feel assured: That Minnesota is one of best regions of the earth. Agriculturally it is "the jumping off place." You jump off and light in the midst of of the sage bush of the rainless land. Half way across North Dakota you are in the desert, where men gamble with the Lord for water and win once in four or five years; and then hang on by their teeth, with the sheriff pulling at their coat tails, for another four or five years. In Montana they irrigate and raise fine crops, but they require two things, arable valleys and attainable water; hence the fields are small. It is pitiful to see human energy contending against adverse conditions; lives of isolation for the means of mere existence. A good farm in Minnesota is worth a county west of it. In the cattle business in Montana you can raise huge herds without hay or shelter; but just as you have swelled your flocks to patriarchal proportions, comes a terrible winter and sixty per cent perish, hump-up, stupefied, starved, in the deep snows. With irrigation you can raise hay enough for a small herd, but not for flocks of ten or twenty thousand; that is impossible. And so the moral I draw from my journey is, that any man who has a farm in Minnesota should do his best to hold on to it. The capitalists travel, they know the value of our beautiful state, hence their anxiety to get possession of the farmer's field. Hold on to your lands. Hang on to your land to your last grasp. There are no more Minnesotas on the planet; and every day the battle of life will grow fiercer."

The South Carolina Liquor Law

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post from Greenville, S. C., writes of the new liquor law as follows:

The dispensary in Greenville, according to the Post correspondent, is a large store room on the main street. The front part is separated from the rear by a railing, beyond which sits the dispenser—called by the local negroes "Mr. Spenser"—with a pad for blank applications for whisky on the desk before him. The stock of whisky, beer, etc., is stored near by. There is no mirror in a gorgeous frame to enhance the attractions of elegant and costly bottles. No mint fills the air with seductive fragrance. There is no "bar" with cheese and crackers. No roasted coffee or spices are at hand to disguise a tell-tale breath. The walls are bare. Pictures and statues are wanting. The beauty of art is not enlisted to strengthen the charm of the place. The dispensary is matter-of-fact to the last degree.

Rye and corn whisky appear to be the popular beverage in Greenville. One cannot get less than a half pint, and it must not be drunk on the premises. The whisky is said to lack age and it comes high. The state gets $3 a gallon for an article the saloon keepers used to sell for $1.35. Minors and habitual drunkards cannot get it at any price. If A tries to get it for B's use, A subjects himself to a severe penalty. Besides this, a mother or wife, sister or other near relative may ask the dispenser not to sell to a person, and henceforth that person is unable to get it. Nevertheless business is pretty brisk, if the newness of the system be considered. Since the Greenville dispensary has been open, sales have increased till at present they are about $200 a day. Last month the profits were but $64, half of which goes to the city and half to the county. But as time goes on the profits are expected to grow. The best customers of the saloon laid in supplies at cut prices when the saloons were closed, and their stocks are not yet exhausted. Sales will mount up, it is thought, when consumers come to rely wholly upon the dispensaries for the abatement of their thirst. [illegible]

Opinion is divided as to the merit of the system. Disinterested citizens are disposed to give it a fair trial. The police are said to [illegible] labors lessened. There were fewer [illegible] were but $49 against $168 in July, 1892. There were but 60 disorderlies as against 87 in the preceding July. The negroes particularly are quieter and go home earlier at night. In the absence of a loafing place attractively furnished they cultivate the domestic virtues, and a large percentage of their earnings go to their families. Boys, it is said, "go down town" less at night than formerly. Soda water is consumed to an increased extent at the drug stores, but not enough to lead the proprietors to make them acceptable resorts for loungers. The women are said to be charmed with the effects of the law. Farmers' wives observe that husbands, formerly bibulous, now leave town earlier, and reach home sober. "Look hyur, chillun," a colored wife is reported as saying to her progeny recently, "see what dat Mr. Spencer done gone and done to us," at the same time spreading on the table the bacon and flour her reformed Lord had brought home. But the situation has its disadvantages also, one of them being the doubtful constitutionality of the law. The courts are whittling at its substance and it is feared the whole of it will soon be lost. As Gov. Tillman is supreme, this might mean out-and-out prohibition. Therefore, the enemies of the law fight it with many misgivings.

Autumn Fashions for Ladies.

The latest news from the fashionable centres indicate that jackets with full skirts and very large sleeves will be extensively worn during the fall season, and also that of the princess gown—the newest models of which are very elegant—will be very popular. As for skirts, the double skirt will be one of the features of the coming styles. For either jackets or waists the pretty "godets" drapery and the picturesque directoire revers will be universally adopted. The McDowell Magazines, which are the leading fashion publications, both in Paris and this country, contain many designs of all the newest styles. "La Mode de Paris," "Paris Album of Fashion," are the most popular of these magazines. The former two cost only $3.50 each a year, or 35 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure any of these publications at your newsdealer, do not accept any substitute, but apply directly to Messrs. A. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th Street, New York.

To Sue the Rainmakers.

James Butler, a Lyon county farmer, has had papers prepared for a very peculiar suit. Some weeks since a great cloudburst in his neighborhood caused the destruction of Butler's wheat crop. A few days later A. B. Montgomery, a rainmaker, being at Goodland, claimed to have caused the cloudburst, which came without warning from the barometer.

Now Butler proposes to make Montgomery's rain company pay the damage. The same storm caused a washout on the Santa Fe line, and a terrible wreck followed, in which an engineer was killed. The wife of the dead engineer will also bring suit against Montgomery for $10,000 damages.—Kansas Cor. Philadelphia Press.

An Old Fashioned Sleigh.

The sleigh which the Canadians presented to the Duchess of York as a wedding present is a large, old fashioned three seated affair, which was more fashionable 20 years ago than now. But is the pattern that she expressed a wish for. It is made of second growth ash overlaid with curved panels of mahogany. It has high single steel runners painted scarlet and has a dark blue body striped with red. It is trimmed with dark blue cloth and has solid silver mounts.

Fined For Laughing in Church.

A curious case was tried at Cranbrook the other day, when four young men were fined 12 shillings each for laughing in church. It seems that a man fell asleep and snored so loudly that the church official had to wake him up. The sleeper on being aroused was so startled that the young men could not control their amusement. The parish clerk admitted that he had smiled, but in spite of this the offenders were fined.—London Tit-Bits.

Grand Opera Under Difficulties.

The hushing down of applause during the progress of a Wagnerian opera appeared rather to disconcert Mr. Lassalle, who, on making his first appearance this season in "The Flying Dutchman," at Covent Garden last week, was received absolutely without a hand. Between the acts, however, he was accorded as much applause as he could have desired. The performance of "The Flying Dutchman" must have been considered a strange one by any members of the Wagner party who may have been present. Some of the artists, in accordance with Italian precedent, sang to the footlights instead of to each other, the band, conducted by the Italian Mr. Mancinelli, went at it with vigor, the drummer particularly making a night of it, while the hitches in the stage arrangement were often very laughable.

To see several men walking in the trough of the sea pulling along the gigantic phantom ship of the Dutchman, calling to each other "Get on!" and "Whoa!" as the vessel from time to time struck on a rock, was amusing enough. Mild wagers were laid that the Flying Dutchman would never get to land at all, and indeed Mr. Mancinelli laid down his baton and stopped his band while the ship was being maneuvered. It was not the fault of Mr. Lassalle, for he clearly could not be expected to walk the waves. In the last act, too, the ship absolutely refused to smash up, and it was left still swimming the ocean when the curtain finally fell.—London Figaro.

A Fresh Word on Iced Drinks.

"At this season it will be in place," writes a physician in a paper on household chemistry, "to say something as to the wholesomeness of the extremely cold water, tea, lemonade, etc., which are so extensively used in this country. It must be acknowledged that medical men are not in possession of facts sufficient to form a positive conclusion and many adopt the opinions which agree with their desires. It cannot be denied that one may become a toper in nonintoxicants as well as in intoxicants and that it is easy to create by habit a strong desire for frequent drafts of very cold water.

"With some persons the perspirative function is so active the effect is less serious, but in the majority of cases these abundant cold drafts disturb the stomach, and it would certainly be better if one could learn to be satisfied with water at a temperature of 50 degrees F. rather than 40 degrees, and to limit somewhat the amount taken." There is some indication that the medical profession is losing its confidence in the merits of effervescing (carbonated) beverages such as soda water.

performed by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, one in particular being that of a little daughter of a Church of England minister. The child was literally covered from head to foot with a red and exceedingly troublesome rash, from which she had suffered for two or three years, in spite of the best medical treatment available. Her father was in great distress about the case, and, at my recommendation, at last began to administer Ayer's Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which effected a complete cure, much to her relief and her father's delight. BANDITS TRAPPED.

TRAIN ROBBING ENTERPRISE GETS A SERIOUS SET BACK.

Officers Heard of an Attempt to Hold Up the Kansas City and St. Joe Express and They Were Prepared. Two Robbers Killed and Four Captured.

ST. JOSEPH, Sept. 26.—A bold attempt at train robbery was cleverly frustrated here just after midnight. As a result two would-be train robbers are dead and four are behind the bars in jail. Of six men who attempted the robbery not one escaped. The train which the bandits attempted to rob was passenger train No. 3 on the Kansas City, St. Joseph and Council Bluffs railroad, which left Kansas City at 9:05 p. m. and which arrived here at 12:30 in the morning. The officials of the road had been notified that the robbery had been planned, and they notified the police. When the train arrived here was made up and 16 police officers, under command of the chief of police, were put aboard. In order to thoroughly deceive the robbers the train was made an exact duplicate of train No. 3, and consisted of an engine and tender, an express and baggage car and the usual coaches and Pullmans. When the dummy reached a point two miles north of St. Joe the engineer's attention was arrested by a lighted lantern moving to and fro between the rails. He promptly obeyed the signal and six masked men surrounded the engine. One of the six mounted the engine, and, presenting one revolver at the engineer's head and another at the fireman's, held them in subjection while the other five men hastened to rob the express car. They ordered the messenger to open the door, which he did forthwith.

Three of the bandits entered the car, leaving two without to keep guard. The policemen who were guarding the train were distributed in the various cars, the majority of them being concealed in the express car. The three bandits who had undertaken the work of robbing the car entered the car, when the police ordered them to surrender. The robbers were but they opened fire at once upon the police. The police returned the fire and a general fusilade followed. About 25 shots were fired on both sides. When the smoke cleared away the lifeless bodies of Kohler and Indall were found lying on the floor of the car. Both had been shot through the head.

Frederick, the third robber engaged in the fight in the car, was uninjured, and was placed under arrest. None of the officers were injured. While the fight was going on in the car, those of the police not engaged in it were looking after the two robbers who had been left outside to keep watch. The police quickly took them in and placed them under arrest. The bandit who had been detained to uard the engineer and fireman quickly realized the situation when he heard the battle going on in the express car and promptly made his escape, but was captured later and placed in jail here.

ROBBERS WERE FOILED.

Attempted Hold Up on the Illinois Central—Four Men Shot.

CENTRALIA, Ills., Sept. 22.—The New Orleans limited on the Illinois Central was held up shortly after 11 p. m., just outside this city, and in the battle which followed between the three robbers and the train hands one of the robbers was mortally wounded and three of the train crew were badly hurt. The thieves got nothing in the way of booty. Those who were hurt in the shooting incident to the attack were: Engineer Young, Conductor Odum, Fireman McDowell and George Jones, one of the robbers. The wounded robber received a charge of shot over the left eye. Engineer Young was shot in the shoulder and in the center of the back. The fireman was hit in the chin and forehead, the ball lodging in the neck. The conductor received a painful wound in his right hand. All of the train crew live at Centralia. The wounded robber was brought to Centralia, and when told he could not live gave the names of his confederates as Martin Nichols and J. Hardin. Both were captured later near the scene.

Trainmen Armed.

CHICAGO, Sept. 27.—The Michigan Central began Monday to arm the trainmen of all trains carrying American express or mail cars and other roads intend to soon follow suit. The employes have been supplied with Winchester repeating shotguns loaded with buckshot, and additional employes armed have been put on, so that there will be at least 10 fully armed on each express and mail train.

LYCHERS SHOT.

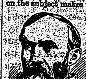
OUR REPRESENTATIVES IN HAWAII.

Something About the New Minister and Consul General.

In the present delicate state of our relations with Hawaii anything bearing on the subject makes interesting reading for the people. Consequently they will want to know something about Albert S. Willis of Kentucky, who succeeds Mr. Blount as our minister there, and Allis Mills of Virginia, who accompanies him as consul general at Honolulu. Both these gentlemen go to their new positions fully equipped with information in regard to the intentions of our government with respect to Hawaii, and the importance and delicacy of their duties can hardly be magnified.



ALBERT S. WILLIS.

Mr. Willis will be remembered as an old member of the national house of representatives, in which body he served five consecutive terms, beginning with the Forty-fifth and ending with the Forty-ninth congress. He was a man of considerable influence in Democratic party councils and held the important position of chairman of the rivers and harbors committee during his last term. He is a native of the Blue Grass State and was born in Shelby county Jan. 22, 1843. After preliminary attendance at the public schools he graduated from the Louisville high school and then taught school for four years, studied law and was admitted to practice in 1866, since when he has been continuously engaged in the duties of his profession. He was elected attorney for Jefferson county in 1870 and re-elected in 1874, holding the office till he was elected to congress the first time.

Mr. Mills, the new consul general, is a resident of Lynchburg, Va. He was born in England and is about 37 years old. Up to 1879 he was a congressional reporter and after that was connected with several committees of the house and senate. Mr. Bayard, while secretary of state, appointed Mr. Mills his private secretary, and Mr. Blaine transferred him to the consular bureau as clerk in the correspondence division. When Mr. Blount was sent as special commissioner to Hawaii, Mr. Mills accompanied him as disbursing officer, and the familiarity thus gained with Hawaiian affairs is supposed to have led to his appointment as consul general.

HOW TO WORK THE BRAIN.

But This Scheme of Life Is For the Independent Only.

A healthy person does not need an afternoon nap. If a man finds himself napping at that time, either he has eaten too much at his midday meal or his cerebral circulation is feeble.

It is the universal habit of the pig that is being fattened to sleep in his sty after his midday meal. The working horse, on the other hand, which gets nothing at midday but a feed of corn—a small but highly nutritious meal—does not sleep at all after it, but is fresh and ready for work in half an hour.

One would like to persuade all literary workers to work in the day and to sleep in the night. They should never go for more than eight hours a day. Early rising would be good for most of them. A cup of coffee and a piece of toast at 6:30 might be followed by an hour's work from 7 to 8. The whole hour between 8 and 9 should be devoted to a thoroughly good breakfast and a short walk. Work from 9 to 12.

Half an hour should then be spent in gentle sauntering in the fresh air, and a light lunch should follow—say a chop and bread, with a modicum of light pudding, accompanied by a small glass of lager beer. From 1 to 2 a pipe and a saunter, and at 2 a cup of black coffee. From 2 to 4 work, at 4 a cup of afternoon tea and a rest until 5. From 5 to 6 or 6:30 work, and at 6:30 the real labors of the day should be over and completed.

At 7 a good, well cooked, appetizing, slowly eaten dinner, followed by one cup of black coffee, but no tea. At 10:45 a small cup of cocoa and one or two pieces of toast. At 11 bed, and sleep to 6 or 6:30. The brain worker should not work more than five days a week in this fashion. He should have two days of leisure in the week.

The first of these should be devoted to brisk and thoroughly fatiguing exercise in the open air and the second to lolling, lounging, at little light reading and the like. This is the kind of life which physiology would suggest for the brain worker, and, in this "scheme of life" there is neither place nor necessity for the afternoon nap.

How to Make Excellent Tooth Powder.

Mix one part of best pulverized chalk with two parts of finely pulverized charcoal. Add sufficient castile soap suds and spirits of camphor to make a thick paste. Apply with a piece of flannel or the finger, rubbing vigorously. It will whiten the teeth beautifully and is said not to injure the enamel.

How to Make Black Coffee.

After dinner or black coffee is made by simply doubling the proportion of coffee to the amount of water. Use 2 rounding tablespoonfuls of coffee to every cup of water. If you will dip the strainer or drip in cold water just before filtering the coffee the fine grains will not go through. Do not fill up the strainer with water, but pour slowly and steadily until all the water has percolated through the coffee, keeping it where it will not cool. Serve at once.

A DESOLATE SCENE.

AN INDIAN VILLAGE DEPOPULATED BY A MAN EATING TIGER.

The Inhabitants of a Native Village Driven From Their Homes by the Ferocious Daring of a Bold and Bloodthirsty Ruler of the Jungles.

As the party of a sahib one Indian evening came down the hillside by the widening path to the jungle village, no sound whatever arose from its few and humble habitations. Nobody came out to make salutation or to offer supplies. No cattle were perceived wandering about, no children, no birds, except indeed many vultures upon the tree in the square and upon the temple roof. The pots in the grain dealer's shop were empty and overturned; a piece of cloth just begun was left with broken threads upon the loom in the next hut. On the other side of the way the chatties at a potter's were tumbled and broken, and a sheet of copper lay at the blacksmith's forge half bent to make some vessel, but precipitately abandoned. Wherever one gazed there were signs of a hasty flight on the part of the inhabitants, who did not seem to have left anybody to represent them.

Yes, there was one silent and melancholy representative, and the sudden appearance of her would have startled the party very much more than it did but for a discovery made by the sahib's ghorawallah—the groom—close by the silent and empty temple. There was a muddy patch there in the square, from which the last of the rainwater had but recently dried up, and in the black slime so left were deeply imprinted the "puds" of an evidently immense tiger. It was of course evident now to the Englishman and those with him that the striped terror which left those footmarks had given the villagers notice to quit and was somewhere or other near at hand in practical possession of the fee simple of the village.

Desolate beyond expression was the little unpeopled "place" of the hamlet, and the look of the helpless red god staring from his portico upon the huts that he could not protect, and the excitement of the horrible vultures perched on the cotton trees, aware, no doubt, of the deadly secret of the place, for round the corner, by the dyer's shop, where two or three newly stained turban cloths still hung upon walls to dry, they came upon that secret. Across the threshold of a mud hut, evidently dragged off from the broken charpoy on the earthen floor, lay the body of a woman, torn on the delicate brown neck and along the shoulders and breast with long red claw marks. A dead infant, also mangled by a savage bite, lay half concealed under the corpse, the appearance of the bodies showing that they had only been lately killed. No one could doubt what had killed them. The sign manual upon their bodies was surely that of the royal beast who often in this way disputes the right of his human rival in India and roars to scorn the illusion that man is master of created things.

The sahib's party was badly equipped for tiger shooting and passed not without anxiety and the closing up of the three or four servants and coolies through the outskirts of the evicted village. At any moment her ladyship the tigress or his lordship the tiger, who had taken possession of the place, might emerge from a grain store or a cow pen, or even from some milk bush or jowari patch, to ask the travelers what business they had upon the royal property. The Englishman hastily put bullets into both barrels of his shotgun and walked his horse as quickly as his men could follow out of the ill fated gaum.

At its outskirts they were astonished to hear a voice high above their heads which came, as they afterward found, from a young Hindoo low caste man sitting concealed in the branches of a large mango tree from which could be seen both entrances of the village. He had made a rude platform in a fork of the tree and watched on it with the long barrel of a matchlock protruding and by his side an earthen jar of water. They invited him to come down and to tell them the meaning of the extraordinary spectacle they had witnessed. He descended and informed them that for months past his village had been infested and persecuted by a tigress which, after killing cattle and goats, had slain and partly eaten three or four children outside the hamlet, and had taken during the past eight or nine days to entering the village at night and carrying off somebody or other sleeping, as the Hindoos do, outside their huts under the verandas. The woman slain that morning with her baby was the wife of the poor matchlock man, and he had perched himself in the tree hoping to avenge her death when the sahib's party passed.

It was too serious a case not to be reported in the proper quarters, and an expedition of practiced tiger shooters was equipped among the officers at the nearest station. The beast was tracked and was killed after receiving 11 bullets, and then it turned out that she had a half grown cub which had lost a limb, and thus the maternal affection of the ferocious parent had driven it to these desperate ways. Indeed the spectacle of that village was full of philosophical suggestiveness. The dead human mother had been slain by reason of the very same instinct which had made her seek in vain to preserve her child from the attack of the tigress driven to its wits' end to find food for its own helpless offspring. The tigress was in her way as tender a parent as that loving mother whom she murdered, and then, besides, there was the whole village depopulated to make one wonder what sort of a world it would have been if, as might well have happened, tigers had evolved as masters of the globe instead of men.—Edwin Arnold in London Telegraph.

MILLS AS A FIGHTER.

HIS VIGOROUS SPEECH IN THE REPEAL BILL DEBATE.

How the Texas Senator Runs Counter to Public Opinion—The President's Opportunity—The Passage Where He Raised His Voice to a Commanding Height.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28.—[Special.]—Senator Mills of Texas made one of the most vigorous speeches of the repeal bill debate. He was forceful not only in his rhetoric and his gestures, but he had the backwoodsman habit of pulling his sleeves up above his elbows. Mr. Mills is a plain, blunt man, who believes in calling a spade a spade, and like many another man of this sort reared in the woods or in the fields, likes to take his coat off whenever he has important business on hand. If it had been possible for Mr. Mills to take off his coat without violating the propriety of the senate chamber, doubtless he would have done so and been glad of the chance. But since this was impossible he did the next best thing, and between his sentences tugged away at his coat sleeves and kept them most of the time well rolled up above his elbows. When you see a man with his coat off or with his sleeves pushed up, you may be sure he means business. Mr. Mills meant business on this occasion. He threw mauls, sledge hammers, rocks and other things at the heads of the opposition.

A Courageous Texan.

This repeal bill debate has brought out some queer situations, and Mr. Mills' position is an illustration of the manner in which this contest has induced men to stand now for things which they never stood for before. Mr. Mills has always been a silver man. He represents one of the strongest silver states in the Union; but these things make no difference with a man like Mills. On reaching the conclusion that his duty in this particular instance was to favor repeal, he would have done so had the whole state of Texas marched up here with shotguns and pistols in hand to prevent him. As chairman of the house committee on ways and means Mr. Mills favored free wool, although his state of Texas and particularly the district which he then represented were solid for the wool tariff. He fought prohibition in Texas when prohibition seemed likely to capture the state.

When he was a candidate for senator, Governor Hogg wrote him a letter offering to patch up a trouble that they had had about some political matter, but the blunt and bluff Mr. Mills declined the hand of peace extended by this influential Texan, and on the eve of the senatorial battle sent a letter in reply that must have made Mr. Hogg's hair stand on end in anger and surprise. Notwithstanding all these acts of running counter to public opinion in his district and state, Mr. Mills has always been returned to congress and was finally promoted to the senate by his admiring constituents. The theory on which Mr. Mills governs his life is that the people of Texas respect a man of courage and consistency and will not strike him down.

In the Senatorial Theater.

During these long weeks of discussion we have had some rather pathetic scenes in the senate chamber, and none more sad, though with a comical side to them, than the heartlessness with which some senators are deserted by their colleagues whenever they rise to commence their speeches. In what is known as the morning hour, which comes immediately after the senate meets, the attendance is usually very large. Nearly every senator is in his seat, for if the day is to bring forth any new move on the part of the leaders it is expected to show itself at this time. As soon as preliminaries are settled in the morning hour and the senator who is entitled to the floor arises in his place and addresses the presiding officer, as a rule about 50 senators also rise in their places and make for the cloakrooms, the restaurant or the committee rooms.

A similar exodus occurs from the press gallery, where the correspondents are always on the alert for politics or battle, but have no patience for listening to long and prosaic speeches. The occupants of the public galleries, however, do not stir. They are there out of curiosity, to see the great men and hear them, and to most of these auditors the speech of one great man is nearly as good as a speech of another. Thus almost in a twinkling the orator finds himself with an exceedingly top heavy house. On the floor are the presiding officer, the clerks, a few pages and perhaps five or six senators scattered about and looking very lonesome. The audience is in the galleries. Strictly speaking, the auditors to whom the senator addresses his words are not in the capitol at all, but far away in the state which he represents. They are the people whom the speaker wishes to reach, and whose favor he seeks.

When the Scene Changes.

If one wishes to see how quickly the senate may change in this theater of politics and ambition, let him wait for that moment in which a dull and uninteresting senator takes his seat and some of the real orators or leaders rise to address the senate. People come flocking into the chamber through the doors like bees entering a hive after swarming. They come from the cloakrooms, committee rooms, and even from the faraway library and house, so quickly that one wonders how they could have received the information that there had been a change of scene and of speakers in the senate chamber. In 60 seconds the senate changes from sleepiness, lonesomeness and desertion to a theater crowded with animated and eager senators and newspaper correspondents.

The President Addresses Congress.

President Cleveland improved an opportunity the other day to make a little speech to the senate and house. In the early days of the republic it was the regular practice for the president to come to the capitol at the beginning of each session of congress and make an address to the national legislature, this address taking the place of the annual message of later days. The occasion which the president improved was the anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the capitol. The president presided at this meeting and made a short speech. It was noticeable that where the voice of other speakers had failed to reach more than a very small number of the large audience present, the strong, vigorous tones of Mr. Cleveland rang out clear and distinct over the whole assemblage. He did not look or act at all like a man whose health had been undermined by some constitutional trouble. One passage of his address had evidently been prepared for the ears of those senators who might be present, and when he reached this passage the president turned his face toward that part of the platform on which the senators were sitting and raised his voice to a commanding height. It is not often during the consideration of a great public question in congress that the president obtains an opportunity personally to address members of the senate and house assembled [illegible]

Dueling In France.

Until within a few years dueling in France was so common that 5,000 such encounters were fought every year. The vast majority of these occurred in the army, but in 1890 M. de Freycinet, the minister of war, discouraged the practice and rendered it optional under circumstances in which it had been considered imperative. Among civilians, however, the game goes merrily on, being chiefly sustained by angry politicians or excited journalists. It was calculated in 1886 that since 1870 847 duels had been fought in France outside the army. In only nine instances were any of the combatants disabled, while 98 per cent of those engaged left the field unscathed.—London Tit-Bits.

The English marriage service was the subject of conversation. Lowe said in his dashing way that it was full of nonsense. "Why," he exclaimed, turning to his wife, "it made me say 'with all my worldly goods I thee endow,' when I had no worldly goods wherewith to endow you."

"Well," he said, "all the world knows that I did not endow you with them."—"Life and Letters of Viscount Sherbrooke."

It is the largest sundial in the world.—St. Louis Republic.

Fast Torpedo Boats.

The famous torpedo boat builder at Elbing, Schichau, has attained an unprecedented speed even for this class of vessel, torpedo boats built by him for the Russian and Italian governments having reached 27¼ knots in an hour's run at sea. The new British boats are to be 200 tons displacement, while the Russian boats are 130 tons, so that the former may do better by reason of greater power and greater size. The length of Schichau's boats is 152 feet 6 inches, the beam 17 feet 6 inches.

"She may carry 40 tons of coal in her bunkers. On trial, however, she had only 20 tons on board. The small guns carried weighed 2¼ tons, the torpedo armament 6 tons, the crew, provisions, stores and firearms 4¼ tons, drinking water 2¼ tons, engine and boatswain's stores and reserve parts 4¼ tons, so that all the movable parts came to 20 tons, making, with coal 40 tons.—Steamship.

Making the Most of Household Pets.

Whatever beast is kept it should have its own quarters in which it is at home and free from intrusion and to which it can retire when it chooses. This home should be kept clean and sweet by frequent changes of bedding and the use of soap and water. No one has a right to keep an animal in confinement who finds it too much trouble to attend to its health and comfort. It should be regularly fed on food that is most healthful for it, and what is quite as essential to its happiness and consequently to its health, it should be talked to and noticed as much as anybody.

I am certain many animals and birds suffer and die in our homes from pure loneliness and from being regarded by their human neighbors as creatures of an altogether different nature. Whereas the truth is, if one will but cultivate their acquaintance, he will be astonished to see how the dullest and most stupid will wake out of its apparent torpor and show understanding and character.

I know a family very fond of pets, in which the creatures show most extraordinary individuality. Their cats do things no cat was ever before known to do; their parrots and other birds show what we call human nature in a wonderful degree, and their dogs almost talk. The reason is plain; the animal or bird is made one of the family. It is talked to and petted as well as cared for. Its intelligence develops, and the beast becomes very like the human being.—

A Boy on Breathing.

The following was handed in as a composition on breathing by a Kentucky boy, says the Washington Star, from which it is here reproduced:

Breath is made of air. We breathe with our lungs, our lights, our liver and kidneys. If it wasn't for our breath, we should die when we slept. Our breath keeps the life a-going through the nose when we are asleep. Boys that stay in a room all day should not breathe. They should wait till they get out of doors. Boys in a room make bad, unwholesome air. They make carbonicide. Carbonicide is poisoner than mad dogs. A heap of soldiers was in a black hole in India, and a carbonicide got in that there hole and killed nearly every one afore morning. Girls kill the breath with corosits that squeezes the diagram. Girls can't holler or run like boys, because their diagram is squeezed too much. If I was a girl, I'd rather be a boy, so I can holler and run and have a great big diagram.

RED WING, Minn., Sept. 23.—The most terrible conflagration that has visted this city in years started during the afternoon, laying an immense amount of property in ruins and throwing a large number of men out of employment. The fire originated in the sash and door factory of the Charles Betcher Lumber company, and almost before the first alarm sounded that great wooden structure was one huge mass of flames. GLIMPSES IN A MINT.

THE PROCESSES OF COINING THE PRECIOUS METALS.

"Making Money Is Just Like Making Cake," Says a Mint Officer—Mixed, Rolled Out and Cut—The Work Women Do In the Philadelphia Money Factory.

It is rather difficult to attempt a description of how money is made. Even encyclopedias, which are supposed to be equal to any and all emergencies, object to that. In a measure they are right. To get the best idea of the multiple and minute processes of minting one must be an eyewitness. It adds charm to the proceedings to stand by the dusty furnaces, arranged in sentinellike rows, to see them open their jaws and to look right down into the fiery cavern, where insatiable tongues of flame are licking up the molten masses of silver and gold.

A day or two ago Officer Brown, standing beside a visitor who had watched with all the fascination of a novice the great iron mouths opening and closing, betrayed himself into a neat little explanation of the process of minting money. Officer Brown has been many years at the mint, so the visitor listened with interest as to one who spoke with authority. Here is the process in a nutshell:

"Making money," said he, with one of those eloquent waves of the hands he keeps by him to use on explanatory occasions such as these, "is just like making cake. You mix the dough; we mix the metal. You roll out the dough into shape; we roll out the metal into bars. You cut the dough into cakes; we cut the metal into coins. Then we stamp them. The metal left over is melted up and used again, just as the cook gathers up the left overs, rolls them again and cuts more cakes."

In other words, an amount of metal, say the equivalent of $90,000 in gold, which chemically is made up of 90 per cent gold and 10 per cent copper, is put into a black lead crucible about the size of a peck measure. It is kept in the furnace 1 hour and 15 minutes. The workman watches his gold as sacredly as the cook her cakes, and when the molten liquid is brought to the proper consistency he takes a three cornered black lead cup, about the size that would fit a monkey's head, and dips up $2,000 worth of the metal at a time, pouring it out again with that marvelous dexterity, which only comes from practice, into molds holding $1,000 each. Nothing can be more beautiful than the fiery stream of young and pure gold as it glides into the locked arms of the iron mold. When the liquid solidifies it forms a bar, or, to be technically correct, an ingot about 12 inches long and about half an inch thick.

These ingots are subjected to a process of rolling out which lengthens them without increasing the width. The bars are then ready to be cut. One machine cuts the coin; another stamps them after the process of milling has been performed. Milling, in mint parlance, has somewhat of a different signification than in ordinary vernacular. It signifies the rolling over of the edge of the coin preparatory to stamping it with the minute denticulations which are commonly known as the milling. The latter is part of the process of stamping and is done at the time that the signet is put on the coin.

Speaking of stamping introduces the large corps of women who form a considerable part of the working force of the mint. About 100 of them are employed, and they attend entirely to the adjusting and stamping. It may be said in explanation of the process of the term "adjusting" that every coin before it is shaped is carefully weighed. If too heavy, the edge is delicately filed until the coin is of lawful weight; if too light, the piece is sent to be remelted. This process of weighing and adjusting is an employment to which women, with their delicacy of touch, are well suited. They are also in charge of the stamping. Incidentally it may be said that most presses stamp from 80 to 110 coins every minute. In one short hour $45,000 in $10 gold pieces can be stamped around the edge and on both sides.

There is another part of the work which comes under the charge of the women employed at the mint. They do the sewing. At first thought it seems a trifle incongruous to associate sewing with minting money, but all the bags used by the mint are sewed in the building. The bags are made of white duck and run up by machine, being sewed twice for security. The bagmaking is no small thing when you come to consider the number it takes to pack up the newly coined wealth of the country each year. The 5 cent pieces are packed in $50 bags and the pennies in $10 bags, small silver in $1,000 and the gold in $5,000 pouches. Roughly speaking, last year fully 2,000 bags were made up for gold alone, 16,000 for silver, 5,000 for half dollars, besides many thousands for the smaller coins.—Philadelphia Times.

Cost of Superstition.

"Don't you know this haunted house idea has a tremendous hold on people's minds?" said a dealer in residence property. "I have several houses on my hands for either rent or sale that somehow seem slow to take, and I now know at least one of the reasons. There was a murder committed in one, and several suicides have occurred in another, and when a buyer or renter goes to look at these houses some galoot of a neighbor will stick his head into other people's business and squeal about the happenings in those houses, and no matter what the prospective customer thought of the property this settles it. People don't want houses where murders and suicides have been committed."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

NO INJUNCTION.

Judge Willis Declines to Interfere With the Minnesota Elevator.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 23.—The fight between the elevator companies and the farmers ended late in the afternoon in a complete victory for the latter. The contest has been going on since Aug. 8, the elevator companies, through Henry Rippe of Martin country, having on that date asked that the state railway and warehouse commission and state auditor be permanently enjoined from erecting the state farmer's elevator at Duluth, for which the legislature had appropriated $120,000. Leading attorneys of the state have been arguing the case for the past two days. At the conclusion of the arguments Judge Willis decided not to grant the injunction prayed for and that he would not interfere with the state or its officers in proceeding to carry out the act of 1893. The construction of the elevator will be pushed, but it will not be ready to receive wheat until August, 1894.

CHRISTIAN BROTHERHOOD.

One of the Results of the World's Congress of Religions.

CHICAGO, Sept. 22.—Out of the world's parliament of religions has come a "Brotherhood of Christianity." Its object is the advancement of Christian work, the perpetuation of the remarkable spirit of unity that has characterized the religious parliament and the creation of a bond with which to begin the federation of the world upon a Christian basis. When the announcement of the formation of the brotherhood was made in the parliament considerable enthusiasm was manifested, and Colonel Thomas Wentworth Higginson made a short address on the subject of unity. In the hall of Columbus Rev. Anna Garlin Spencer interested a fair audience on religion and the erring and criminal classes. Speaking of Christ and the social question Prof. F. C. Peabody of Harvard made the strong statement that when the church was strongest then was when it was that mendicy and mengary prevailed the most. Such men as Count Tolstoi, he said, were to be condemned, for they looked on the field, found the forces opposed to them, and then retreated, leaving others to fight the battle.

Adam's Staff.

The Talmudic writers tell us that "the blessed God gave to the first man in paradise a staff which had been created between the stars. Adam gave it to Enoch, Enoch to Noah, Noah to Shem, Shem to Abraham, Abraham to Isaac, Isaac to Jacob. Jacob carried it into Egypt and gave it to his son Joseph. When Joseph died his household goods were taken to the house of Pharaoh. Pharaoh took the staff of Adam, which had descended to Joseph from the first man, and put it among his special treasures."—St. Louis Republic.

A Big Livery Bill.

A Bangor man who sent his office boy to return a hired team to a stable received several days after a bill for the board of the horse and another bill for the hire of the team for the time intervening. The stupid boy took the team to the wrong stable. The man said he wouldn't mind so much, but there seemed to be no limit to the number of cigars he is compelled to pay for at the instance of jeering friends.—Exchange.

Stealing Ideas.

It must be surprising to the uninitiated to see how soon fashions become generalised in Paris. A "creation," a new fashion, is hardly out of an exclusive house of the Rue de la Paix—hardly out of the workrooms, it might be said—when you see it copied in the show windows of the Louvre and the Bon Marche, where it can be bought for less than one-fourth of the price asked by the great couturiers. At first the rulers of dress thought that some of their workpeople were bribed to give points, but they soon discovered that the pilfering of ideas took place in the showrooms instead of the workrooms. The Louvre and the Bon Marche engaged handsome, distinguished looking young women, dressed them as if they had $20,000 a year and were accustomed from infancy to having and wearing the best, gave them a private carriage and had them go to the great costumers to order garments "just come out."

These afterward served as the models of things which the week after you might buy by the dozens. The large shops resort to this means to obtain novelties not only in the beginning of the season, but all the year round, and the couturiers have no way of avoiding the sales, for their showrooms are open to all who wish to purchase and give orders. To be sure these couturiers make most of their creations for authentic princesses and duchesses, but here also the shops get the best of them.—Cor. New York Tribune.

An Eccentric Washington Woman.

There is a woman in Washington society whose eccentricities in certain lines are so well known as to pass without comment. Her position as a matron of literary proclivities is the motive for sundry gatherings at her house during the season. On one occasion the guests bidden to the literary feast were informed upon arrival that they must enter by a side door, as the morning being rainy they would otherwise track mud over the hall carpet. That the hostess is not so much a respecter of persons as of things is further evidenced by her conduct at an afternoon reception.

Those of her guests whose garments were ornamented with jet were asked during their stay to remain in the second parlor, where the furniture was of mahogany. This sorting out process was explained by the frank announcement that if people would wear sharp ornaments on their clothes she must protect her own property by excluding them from the sacred precincts of the first parlor so that the rosewood furniture could not be scratched.—Kate Field's Washington.

How to Keep a Chameleon.

The Florida chameleon, which also is frequently brought home by the tourist, is a bright and intelligent creature. He requires almost unlimited sunshine to bask in, and flies, which he catches on the end of his long tongue, to eat. A fernery is a comfortable place for him. This fellow, it is said, has a temper, and if not well treated or if teased he will show fight, though he can hardly do much harm. The genuine chameleon, after whom the Florida lizard is named, is one of the quaintest and oddest of pets, but he is a native of the old world and rarely seen in our country.

Another American of the family, often sent from the west and south to pet lovers, is called the horned toad, though he is no toad, but a lizard. He is said to be an interesting pet and capable of being taught. All the small members of this race live on insects and need to be kept in very warm quarters.—Olive Thorne Miller in Harper's Bazar.

The Boomerang Is Not New.

The boomerang, the Australian native's weapon of offense and defense, referred to in all reference works as an instrument unknown until after the discovery of Australia, was doubtless known before the time of Christ. Pliny the elder, a contemporary of our Saviour, writes as follows in his "Natural History" respecting an instrument made of the wood of the aquifolia:

"If a staff made of this wood, when thrown at an animal, from want of strength in the person throwing, falls short of the mark, it will come back toward the thrower of its own accord, so remarkable are the properties of that tree."

It is altogether probable that the learned Pliny did not consider the shape of the "staff" and referred its peculiarities to the nature of the wood of which it was made.—St. Louis Republic.

Blunder Worse Than Guilt.

There are some penalties on innocent acts essential to human safety, and the signaler whose failure has destroyed a train must be punished, even though, when he pleads that he was in a "dwam," he is to his own mind telling the simple and sufficient truth. Nature is even harder on blunder than on guilt, and though man has no right to be as stern as nature, which, for example, executed a dynamiter at Madrid—not for his intention to murder, but for his carelessness in dropping his bomb—still, there are points upon which he must be nearly as hard.—London Spectator.

Colonel North's Strong Room.

Colonel North is said to have at Eltham one of the strongest of strong rooms probably in the world. Not only is his gold and silverware stored here, but lady visitors to Eltham are provided for, special arrangements being made for taking care of their jewels during the night. The room is floored with cement and walled all round with weighty granite. To get into its interior you must pass through many gates all fitted up with burglar alarms. The treasures are kept in iron cases, and the room is 20 feet underground.—London Tit-Bits.

SUNDAY AMUSEMENT.

IN MEXICO A PRIEST SENDS HIS BIRDS TO A COCK FIGHT.

An Enthusiastic Lover of Game Roosters Entertains His Congregation With Rare Contests Between Belligerent Cocks. One Sunday's Sport.

"It was in a Mexican village," said the explorer. "Great had been our surprise the evening before when a little after 5 o'clock we rode into the public square up to the door of the convent and observed a long line of game cocks guarding one side of the great church. Well, that was our first impression. Closer inspection made things plainer. In the convent, residence of only the priest and his relations, we hung our hammocks, rested awhile, refreshed the inner man with tortillas and black beans, then went forth to investigate the feathered regiment. The large church was built out into the square, so that its rear wall was on a line with the convent and other structures forming that side of the square.

"Along the wall that stood at right angles with the front of the convent small wooden stakes had been driven in the ground. To each a plumed warrior was securely attached at a safe distance from his valiant compeers. Who could have dared to utilize for such a purpose the shade afforded by the wall of the sacred edifice? Another instant and we should have voiced this thought. It is generally a mistake to speak in a hurry. The good old priest had followed us and was now at our side. Pointing a lean brown finger at a very proud looking rooster, he said: 'That is the prince of this lot, though they will all prove themselves splendid fighters, I know! I have not studied the creatures 40 years for nothing!' So! They were his own property! Yes, another five minutes' talk made it plain that the pet hobby of this holy man was cock fighting! We will call him Father F. because it is not necessary to give the name of our kind host. Fairly launched on his favorite topic, he talked away for a full hour and was utterly amazed, not to say somewhat incredulous, when informed that we had never seen a professional tussle between those birds so dear to his heart and purse, and which he loved to see fighting in the ring. 'But you must come with me tomorrow afternoon,' said he; 'the people here all like it, and we enjoy the harmless sport every Sunday afternoon.' He intended no sarcasm.

"Nolens volens, when Sunday afternoon came, our host, having laid aside his sacerdotal robes after celebrating high mass, piloted us to the scene of action. The pit was in the interior courtyard of a private house. A circular fence of slender sticks surrounded the carefully leveled ground dedicated to the carnage. Chairs surrounded it, and a shed, thatched with palm leaves, sheltered the spot from the scorching rays of the sun. In gay attire the most respected matrons and maidens of the place were there, the performance being countenanced and partly provided by the priest. A lively conversation was kept up, all present being acquainted. The roosters had been shorn of their feathers, save those of the wings and tail. Each bird was weighed; then curved steel spurs were secured to the stumps of those provided by nature, but which had been cut off. Quite suddenly conversation ceases. Two birds are in the ring. The struggle commences. Heads lowered, eyes glaring, quivering with rage, the heroes fly at each other.

"Calculating that his opponent has jumped too high, the other one crouches, avoids the blow and turns upon his foe, who stands firm. Both rise in the air, breast striking against breast, each striving to deal his adversary a mortal blow. One is stabbed—he staggers. Profiting by this weakness, his adversary follows up the attack, but the wounded one keeps an eye on his enemy, and not being ready for him dodges, regains his position and inflicts a wound. Both now have difficulty in keeping on their feet, though neither will yield. More wounds are dealt. Both fall exhausted. One recovers, sees his foe prostrate, so does not attack, but shakes his lowered head and claws the ground in his fury. Impatiently he thirsts for the life of his opponent, who, no less savage, regains his feet, and with glaring eyes watches every move of his adversary.

"The enthusiasm of their owners and backers increases as the wounds become more numerous—the excitement is intense, and bets run high. The creatures engaged in deadly strife keep cooler than the audience. A moment arrives when all the backers talk at once. 'Five dollars more on the white!' 'Ten on the canelo!' (cinnamon color). The stakes do not exceed $50. At last one warrior falls. Dead silence follows, so great is the suspense. Will he rise once more? Victor examines victim very distrustfully, makes sure he is dead, then mounting on the prostrate form draws himself up with an exultant cry of victory, just like some gladiator of olden times.

"All through the long summer afternoon one battle succeeded another. The birds that survived were taken home to be carefully tended until restored enough to fight again. Even those that had lost one or both eyes would fight if an opportunity was given to them, for these birds are so ferociously brave that unless wanted to fight they have to be kept out of each other's reach.

"At the 5 o'clock dinner in the convent our reverend host talked of nothing but his triumphant roosters and called [illegible]

Very little if any shock threshing yet remains to be done, and the work of stack threshing is well begun. The fall work is very well advanced for this season of the year.

W. S. Taylor has resigned his position of secretary of the Red River Lumber Co., to accept a position with the New York Insurance Co., as agent for Northern Minnesota. Mr. Taylor has been in the employ of T. B. Walker for the past 13 years.

Michael Murphy shot and killed a man named Link at Grand Forks, on Thursday. The man had been proven guilty of assaulting Mr. Murphy's little six year old daughter and was being conducted to jail at the time. Public opinion is strongly with Mr. Murphy and the general verdict is that he did just the proper thing. Link was a painter by trade, a comparative stranger in Grand Forks.

Our reporter took a pair of shoes to M. Lefebvre to have their soles attended to, and he made a new pair out of them in short order. The shoes had been previously consigned to the waste basket as n. g., will now do service as good as new. MORAL. Before you throw away an old pair of boots or shoes let Lefebvre see them and perhaps they can be made as good as new again at trifling expense.

G. W. McCann, of Duluth, returned to his home in that city last week, after a ten days visit in this city and vicinity. This was his first visit here and he told a JOURNAL man that he had heard a great deal about Polk county, but never had any adequate idea of what it was really until he came and saw for himself. He is very enthusiastic over what he has seen, says it is the finest country he ever saw and says he can see no reason why it should not be in the future one of the greatest countries on earth.

This elegant fall weather has been a good thing for the fall's work—threshing and plowing.

George McLean has harvested his crop of potatoes on Jerome's Addition. These potatoes he planted upon some vacant lots he owned over there and they will pay the interest and taxes besides a good profit on his labor. The yield was something like 300 bushels per acre. The Fisher Bulletin says: That Tom Erwin has gone to British Columbia, called there by the death of his brother which occurred recently.

The social at the congregational parsonage on Friday evening was well attended and highly enjoyed. It was worth a quarter to hear people tell what they didn't know about the World's Fair.

Twelve gold-bearing reefs have been discovered in Itasca county, this state, near the Lake of the Woods and men are now at work developing them. It is thought that Northern Minnesota is as rich in gold mines as in iron. Should this prove true the future of this country will be bright beyond the wildest predictions.

About nine o'clock on Wednesday of last week, the department was called out to attend to a fire in the Opland house near the Carman bridge, on Broadway. The fire was practically out when they arrived but they laid two lines of hose which settled the balance in short order. One of the lines got away from the boys and the nozzle poured a stream into the crowd that had gathered, which dispersed the crowd too quick.

Speaking of the gold-find in Northern Minnesota, the Minneapolis Evening Journal says: "It is not surprising that the fact of the existence of gold in this state should be re-affirmed. Minnesota is going to develop into one of the richest mineral regions on earth within this decade. The northen counties will be densely populated within 20 years. A great future is before us. Minneapolis will hold her own as the metropolis and emporium of a second Pennsylvania."

St. Hilaire Spectator: "The sudden death of Mrs. K. O. Gigstad last Friday evening was a shock to all who knew her. She had been sick for about a week but all thought she was recovering. Mr. Gigstad is left with five small children to mourn the loss of wife and mother, and the sympathy of all is extended to them in their bereavement. Mrs. Gigstad has been a resident here for the past eleven years and had won the esteem of a large circle of friends who followed all that was mortal to the grave last Monday. The interment was made in the Swedish Lutheran Cemetery."

Koch, Seaman & Schnagel is the name of the firm that last week acquired possession of the brewery by purchase from Mrs. A. Walters. Our reporter found Mr. Seaman at the office who told him that in a short time the firm would be in shape to buy barley, all that is offered that is fit for their use, and they would have been ready for market by November 15th. Mr. Seaman said that he found the plant the best one in the state north of St. Paul and that no changes were needed except in the office which will be located elsewhere in the building as soon as they get at it. Each member of the firm is a practical brewer, capable of making beer with the best of them, and they will no doubt keep the reputation up to the point made by Mr. Walters. They expect to ship beer to St. Paul and Minneapolis when they get fairly to work.

John C. Wells came up last week and secured the services of E. M. McCaslin to run his large farm at Edna, for the ensuing year. Mr. McCaslin came to Polk county a few years since and has been renting farms, with a view to purchasing a farm when he became acquainted with the country, provided he was suited. He has not depended solely on wheat but has diversified and was so well pleased with results that he intended to have bought a farm of his own this fall, but Mr. Wells persuaded him to abandon that idea and go down and run his farm one year. Mr. McCaslin had worked up a big butter trade, having a line of customers who paid him 25 cents a pound on delivery all the year round, (and he could just as easily have had 30 cents per pound by the year, for the kind of butter he makes if he had asked it, for his butter is gilt-edged in every particular, and his customers would take no other as long as he could supply him—would prefer to pay 30 cents for it than take chances on the market) and he also made a good thing in eggs and poultry of which he only kept the choicest. Mr. Wells has made a very sagacious move in securing the service of such a man as Mr. McCaslin and while we are sorry to lose Mac from our midst we congratulate Mr. Wells on his acquisition and wish both [illegible]

A Good Thing to Keep at Hand.

From the Troy (Kansas) Chief.

Some years ago we were very much subject to severe spells of cholera morbus; and now when we feel any of the symptoms that usually precede that ailment, such as sickness at the stomach, diarrhœa etc., we become scary. We have found Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy the very thing to straighten one out in such cases, and always keep it about. We are not writing this for a pay testimonial, but to let our readers know what is a good thing to keep handy in the house. For sale by S. A. WALLACE, Crookston, Minn.

A little boy of Mrs. McDonald's, living near here, fell against a red hot stove and was fearfully burned. The pain was terrible, and it was thought the burn was so severe as to scar the child for life. I took the lady a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which after greasing the sore she applied. It soon removed all the fire and eased the pain, and in ten days the boy was well, no trace of the scar remaining. J. D. McLaren, Keysport, Clinton county, Ill. For sale by S. A. WALLACE, Crookston, Minn.

Opening of the Normal College.

The new Normal college was opened Tuesday by an entertainment in the college rooms in the McKinnon block in the evening. Notwithstanding that the drizzling rain fell steadily from 7 to 8 p. m. the hall was well filled. The musical part of the entertainment consisted of a mixed quartette, "Italia," by Mrs. Van Arnam, Mrs. Slocum, Dr. W. A. Robertson and Prof. Mayne, an octette, "Skalden" by the Scandinavian Glee club; a selection by the choir of the united Lutheran church; a vocal solo "Bedowin Love Song" by Prof. Mayne; a piano and guitar duet Beethoven's "Le. Deser" by Miss Huggard and Dr. Robertson; and a male quartette, "Annie Laurie" by Messrs. Roberton, Mayne, Sisson and Mix.

Short adddresses were made by Prof. Moore, Rev. J. G. Smith, Rev. McClure, M. L. Tuve and Prof. Mayne.

As a representative of the public schools, Mr. Moore welcomed the new institution to the city and thought that instead of being a hindrance it would be a help to our public schools.

Mr. Smith spoke of the moral effect of such an institution, thought that education was a help to religion, as the mind of a thoughtful student could be more easily directed to think of a higher life.

Mr. Tuve, the principal of the college, thought that the large number who braved the elements to attend the entertainment betokened a sympathy on the part of the public with the institution, and he was confident the school would be a success. Before winter he hoped to have 100 students in the college, and he gave figures to show the benefit of such an institution to the city.

Rev. McClure, who spoke in place of E. M. Stanton, who was unavoidably absent, gave a scholarly address. He is a fluent easy speaker and has a good command of language.

Prof. Mayne outlined the work which he proposed to do in the musical department, and the entertainment closed with the singing of a dedication hymn, composed by Martin Havdale of Frankfort, Tenn., a former classmate of Messrs. Tuve and Christensen.

The college starts out under favorable conditions, and with the substantial aid contributed by the citizens, a competent corps of teachers, and a commodious school-room, the college should be a success.

In Full Blast.

Prof. Strawbridge's school—the Crookston Normal School and Business College—opened last Monday for the fall and winter term, with a fair attendance. Mr. Strawbridge has added seven rooms to his school by leasing the flat adjoining his rooms over the Fair store. This gives him two extra class rooms, a music room, and four rooms for students. It also gives him an entrance to his school from Main street and makes it much more convenient than formerly. He has added a lot of desks and seats for students and is now prepared to accommodate a large number of knowledge seekers. He has added to the faculty of the school by engaging two more teachers—a principal and a teacher of penmanship—both coming well recommended. He has also made arrangements to provide students with board and rooms at minimum cost. Those wishing a collegiate or a commercial education can find in this school just what they want.

How's This Judge?

The Grand Forks Plaindealer has the following on the Sanders case before Judge Benson last Saturday: He had just returned from Crookston where he was on trial before the county Judge, his sanity being the subject in question. He came into Judge Dwyer's court room, the same room in which he had been given the first hearing, the continuation of which at Crookston had resulted in a guardian being appointed for him. He was to all intents and practical purposes a sane man, but his wife, daughter and sons thought differently. The judge asked him how he came to be beaten at Crookston after making such a successful fight before. He replied, "Well judge, don't you see I am an Englishman, and talk English as it should be spoken and I was tried before a Norwegian judge. When I heard my wife and children swear against me in the way they did, it made me mad, and I talked a great deal and very fast. In fact I talked so much and that fast that the Norwegian judge decided against me simply because he cannot understand good English."

This unique exhibit has been installed by the De La Vergne Refrigerating Machine Co. of New York City, and shows that in addition to refrigerating and ice making, skating rinks and amusements of this character can be produced by this system—direct expansion.

Midsummer sleighing on real snow is delightful, refreshing and exhilarating. The Ice Railway furnishes all this, and is a most pleasing and attractive novelty. It is located in the Midway Plaisance directly south of the great Ferris Wheel.

Thirty Days More.

Did you ever give a note for thirty days? If so, you have a distinct idea of how short a time a month is. And that is all the time you will have to see the greatest exhibition ever given of the world's progress in art, science and manufactures, for the great Columbian Exposition at Chicago will end on the 31st day of the present month. In fact you will not have quite thirty days from the time you read this. It is not possible in these limits, to tell you of all (or even part) that you can see there—but if you would realize something about it, ask your neighbors who have been there. You will find that the only regret they have is that they cannot go again. Is there any better commendation than that? Never again (probably) in the lifetime of persons now twenty years old, will there be such an exhibition held in America. No one who can spare the time and money, should think of staying away. As to how to get there—well, you cannot do better than to buy your ticket to Chicago and return over the "Burlington Route," and ask your home agent, or any agent of the Burlington for further particulars, or write to W. MUSIC HATH CHARMS.

TUNES OF LONG AGO BY FIDDLERS WHO "PLAY BY EAR."

Indian Summer Celebration at the Great Exposition—North Dakota Wonders. Minnesota's Thirty-fifth Anniversary. Rhode Island and Mexico Days.

WORLD'S FAIR, Oct. 4.—[Special.]—Of all the clubs here none have excited more enthusiasm than the Old Fiddlers' club of Indiana, and now that it is gone the state building seems a melancholy place. The club is so thoroughly Hoosier that it is a subject of state pride. When the new or scientific school of music began to crowd out the old, and all the fiddlers who "played by ear and didn't know one note from another," especially those who played for "hoedowns" (dance parties where no numbers were arranged and no exact style observed), began to be spoken of as "low," a few men resolved that the old tunes should be preserved. The wild enthusiasm which greeted their rendition here proved that for nine-tenths of the people there is still more music in the old fiddle tunes than in all that science can produce.

Popular Old Tunes.

So far as I know, most of the tunes so popular in my boyhood have never been put in sheet music, and even the few so arranged are not as the old fiddlers played them. Among them I recall "Possum Up a Gum Stump," "Natchez Under the Hill," "The Rye Straw," "Fisher's Hornpipe," "Sally Good'n," "Forked Deer," "Chicken Pie" and a few others. Many a time and oft I have heard these tuneful airs resounding from the rafters and wooden walls of the old cabins. If it was at a "party," the rattle of heavy boots and of slightly more delicate woman's shoes sounded from the floor as stalwart men whirled scarcely less stalwart partners in the dance. If it was only a family party or a few friends met together, still the feet would go tapping, tapping in unison with the music, and every dancer would thrill with longing to be on the floor with his "best girl."

As the fun at a regular "hoedown" grew fast and furious and the fiddler warmed to his work he sometimes threw himself completely away and became "mashed on his own music." He laid back and played; he leaned forward; he beat time with his foot; he threw himself into every possible position of musical abandon, never once missing a note. And as the club played in the Indiana building all the old enthusiasm revived. The hearers laughed, they almost cried, they beat time with their feet, a few enthusiastic ones joined in an impromptu dance, and on all sides were heard such expressions as "Ah, that brings back the old times!" "That's the kind for me!" "No music like the old fiddle tunes!" etc. The club has restored and mastered over 100 old tunes, and those who have made a study of the subject say that many of these are as old as music. The plain truth is, very few of our people really like scientific music. The old jolly, rollicking tunes are what stir their blood.

Renewed Activity For the Future.

Indiana, the Odd Fellows and the Irish did so well that all those arranging for future days have been stirred to increased activity despite the many cold days of late. Mexico is having quite an interesting series of official and social affairs at this time. Mexico is not extensively represented here either by officials or structures, but some of her exhibits in the main buildings are surprising, especially in the Palace of Arts. She has 13 fine pieces of sculpture, 82 oil paintings and 15 minor pictures, and has appropriately selected her finest pictures on American historical subjects to send here. There are busts and statues of her principal presidents and generals, paintings of noted scenes and incidents of the conquest and settlement of the country, and some remarkably fine views of old cities, forts and prominent natural objects. Two points I observe with some surprise—there are only five distinctively religious pictures, while there are many which illustrate political clemency and many more giving honor to the Aztecs. Her celebration is almost entirely of a social character.

On the 5th Rhode Island will celebrate. All citizens of the state who are here—and Commissioner Wyman tells me with much regret that he thinks they will not be many—will march from the state building to Music hall escorted by the Newport artillery and a band. There will be an address of welcome by Governor Brown, an oration by Professor Alonzo Williams, short addresses by Dr. E. B. Andrews, president of Brown university, and some of the commissioners, and a card reception at the state building in the evening. On the 6th the carriage makers will have a display, and on the 7th the Poles will celebrate in a small way, but no programmes are made out. The 9th is of course the great day, Chicago's, and on the 10th North Dakota will undoubtedly make a very fine display.

A Very Interesting State.

I regard North Dakota as in many respects the most remarkable state in the Union—not the least so in politics, for after being almost unanimously Republican she suddenly distinguished herself last year by dividing her electoral vote equally among three candidates. It seems but a little while ago—though it was in 1859—that I stood at the northwest corner of settled Minnesota and was told I could go no farther, as for 1,000 miles westward all was Indian land, and even in 1872 I went 100 miles west of Jamestown without seeing a cultivated farm. Yet in one year recently she sold $40,000,000 worth of wheat, being over $200 for every white person in the state. She now has 4,000,000 acres under cultivation, 1,100,000 head of live stock and a wheat crop in the neighborhood of 100,000,000 bushels, and when the foreign commissioners, representing 28 nations, made their recent tour to the northwest they saw 48 self binders at work in one wheatfield near Larimore in Grand Forks county. In winter she cuts clean ice 4 feet thick and in summer harvests two tons of hay per acre and other things in proportion. Verily, my fellow citizens, we live in a great country.

On her day there will be an address by Governor E. C. D. Shortridge, a response by Ex-Governor Andrew H. Burke and a reception to the governor from 2 to 5 p. m. at the state building. Minnesota will also celebrate on the anniversary of her admission day, which was Oct. 13, 1858. There will be one or two militia regiments, the usual speeches and a reception to Governor Knute Nelson and staff. Both these states have their principal displays in the Agricultural building, but they are among the very first in educational exhibits, and their magnificent endowments of lands, set aside at their organization as territories, insures them long school terms with little or no tax. North Dakota is eminent among new commonwealths for the excellence of her public institutions, especially her asylum for the insane, where the nonrestraint system has been carried out so successfully that alienists come from Europe to investigate it.

Appreciative.

A housekeeper who has been employing a colored washerwoman for several months was surprised to see her appear last week in a hat trimmed heavily with crape.

"Why, Julia," she asked, "is any of your family dead?"

"No, no," was the reply, "but one of my best customers gave me this hat, and I didn't want her to think I don't 'preciate nothin."—New York Times.

Caution Needed.

A tourist had visited a small historic town. He was shown the massive wall that surrounded it and the immense town gates.

"You need to be very careful," he said gravely to the official who was his escort.

"Why so?"

"Sometime when these gates are open the village may get lost."—Youth's Companion.

Birds Enjoy a Shower Bath.

A friend reports a pretty incident. During the hot, dry weather the birds about her house were apparently much in need of bathing places, and the lady discovered that every day when she went out to water her flowers a little bird hovered about as if he wanted something. Presently he revealed what he did want by getting under the sprinkling of the water pot or beneath the dripping plants, and fluffing his feathers in this shower bath just as he would in a pool, and plainly enjoying it in the highest degree. He began to watch for the daily coming of the lady to water her plants and gave himself up to his bath with gay abandon.—Boston Transcript.

They Only Knew Agassiz.

In 1858 a party consisting of Lowell, Emerson, Agassiz, Judge Hoar, W. J. Stillman and several others spent a few weeks of the summer in the Adirondacks.

The journey of the company gave rise to an incident which has often been incorrectly told, and which, as a curious comment upon human fame, deserves to be told again. The coming of the party was of course made known along the track it would follow, and at Keeseville, where the common roads then ended, the town was agog to see the "philosophers," as they were at once collectively called. But neither Emerson nor Lowell was known, Agassiz being the only celebrity to that world, owing to his having recently refused the offer by the emperor of France of the keepership of the Jardin des Plantes at Paris and a senatorship with a large salary, he preferring to devote himself to science and America.

The selectmen of the town waited on the visitors early in the morning after their arrival to pay their respects, they said, but really to see a man who had no regard for money and distinction. They were received formally, the spokesman bringing a copy of a periodical which contained a portrait of Agassiz, which he produced and carefully compared with the lineaments of the professor until he had satisfied himself of the authenticity of the individual, when he addressed his followers with, "Yes, it's him!" And they then proceeded to shake hands with him, the rest of the party being ignored.—W. J. Stillman in Century.

How Did the Dollar Mark Originate?

Below I give five theories of the origin of the dollar mark ($), they being selected from about 20 seemingly plausible solutions:

That it is a combination of the "U. S.," the initials of United States.

That it is a modification of the figure 8, the dollar being formerly called a "piece of eight."

That it is derived from a representation of the Pillars of Hercules, consisting of two needlelike towers or pillars connected with a scroll. The old Spanish coins marked with the pillar device were frequently referred to as "pillar dollars."

That it is a combination of "H. S.," the ancient Roman mark of money unit.

That it is a combination of P. and S. from peso duro, signifying "hard dollar." In Spanish accounts peso is contracted by writing the S. over the P., and placing it over the sum.

According to one writer the symbol of the dollar is a monogram of the letters "V" "S" and "J," the dollar being originally a "thaler" coined in the valley of Sant Joachim, Bohemia, and known as "Joachim thaler," and the monogram the initials of the words, "Valley Sant Joachim."—St. Louis Republic.

THE INTERSTELLAR ETHER.

Ethereal Waves Which Affect the Eye and the Photographic Plate.

Our eye does not act by detecting heat; in other words, it is not affected by the whole range of ethereal quiverings, but only by a very minute and apparently insignificant portion. It wholly ignores the ether waves whose frequency is comparable with that of sound, and for 30 or 40 octaves above this nothing about us responds; but high up in a range of vibration of the inconceivably high pitch of four to seven hundred million per second—a range which extremely few accessible bodies are able to emit, and which it requires some knowledge and skill artificially to produce—to those waves the eye is acutely, surpassingly and most intelligently sensitive.

This little fragment of total radiation is in itself trival and negligible. Were it not for men and glowworms and a few other forms of life, hardly any of it would ever occur on such a moderate sized lump of matter as the earth. Except for an occasional volcano or a flash of lightning, only gigantic bodies like the sun and stars have energy enough to produce these higher flutelike notes, and they do it by sheer main force and violence—the violence of their gravitative energy—producing not only these, but every other kind of radiation also. Glowworms, so far as I know, alone have learned the secret of emitting the physiologically useful waves, and none other.

Why these waves are physiologically useful, why they are what is called "light," while other kinds of radiation are "dark," are questions to be asked, but at present only tentatively answered. The answer must ultimately be given by the physiologist, for the distinction between light and nonlight can only be stated in terms of the eye and its peculiar specialized sensitiveness, but a hint may be given him by the physicist.

The etheral waves which affect the eye and the photographic plate are of a size not wholly incomparable with that of atoms of matter. When a physical phenomenon is concerned with the ultimate atoms of matter, it is relegated at present to the vaguer group of knowledge summarized under the head of chemistry. Sight is probably a chemical sense. In the retina may be complex aggregations of atoms, shaken asunder by the incident light vibrations, and rapidly built up again by the living tissues in which they live, the nerve endings meanwhile appreciating them in their temporarily dissociated condition—a vague speculation, not to be further countenanced except as a working hypothesis leading to examination of fact, but nevertheless the direction in which the thoughts of some physicists are tending—a direction toward which many recently discovered experimental facts point.—Professor Lodge in Fortnightly Review.

The Turkish Harem.

In a recent lecture on "Turkey," Mr. Oscar F. Straus, ex-minister of the United States to that country, threw some interesting light upon a most interesting phase of Turkish life—the harem. The lecturer admitted that his knowledge came entirely from hearsay. He had never been in one and had never known a diplomat who had. He pronounced the institution not altogether unattractive. Turkish women are not secluded in the harem as in a prison. They are absolute mistresses of that side of the house and free to exercise their rights indisputably. A Turkish husband would not dare to enter his wife's apartments when it is not her pleasure that he should, and she has only to place her slippers outside the door to indicate such desire for seclusion. In many ways the oriental wife makes her caprices felt, and her spouse can only submit with what grace he may, like his occidental brother.

The right to divorce is vested with the husband, but the divorcee retires with all her property to her family and may marry again at once. And this right to hold property separately from their husbands which English and American women have only lately acquired has been the privilege of the Turkish wife for a thousand years.

A One Volume Man.

A curious example of generous obstinacy was a stout countryman who inquired for a nice book to read—"one with a story in." On several being placed before him, he examined them attentively and picked out the middle volume of a "three decker" with the remark, "This 'ere's my sort. What's the price?"

"Oh," was the reply, "this is only the second volume. The story goes through three. The set is half a crown."

"Hauve a crown! Well, I'll gie ye that for that one book. It's a pretty un enough."

"But won't you have the other two as well? You'd better!"

"Naw! I don't like th' beginnin of a story; I can't get forrud wi' it. An I don't like th' endin; I don't knew as 'ow it's comed about. But in th' middle un I'm into t' thick of it right off. No, I'll only tak' th' middle un; it'll set me up for a month." And, cramming the book into his pocket he put down his half crown and disappeared with a "good night" before the other volumes could be given to him.—Chambers' Journal.

The Prince Consort's Will.

One of the morning papers, in a somewhat high flown notice of the late Sir Arnold White, states that the "mysteries" connected with the will of the prince consort "were locked in his faithful bosom." There were no "mysteries" in connection with the prince consort's will except that the queen, to whom the whole of the prince's property was bequeathed, would not allow the will to be proved in the ordinary form, nor has it ever been deposited at Somerset House.—London Truth.

SEARCHING AFTER TRUTH.

The Realization Was In Weird Discord to the Anticipation.

"Truth lies at the bottom of a well," so the people of the world told her.

She was young and fair, and she searched for Truth, but her frequent visits to the well brought no discovery: only the reflection of her beautiful face in the water.

One night a knock came at her door, and she sprang up and opened it.

There on the threshold stood a bundle of rags, which moved as if breathing. She shuddered as she asked, "Who are you?" Then came the answer:

"I am Truth."

"I would see your face," she cried.

"Nay, innocent one, my face is not fair to look upon, but I am Truth."

The cold wind was blowing and crying, and she closed the door. The Truth she sought was pure and beautiful, not loathsome, and with the conviction of youth she was satisfied with herself for having refused this grewsome thing admittance. From that day, however, strange visitors knocked at her door, and each called himself Truth.

First came a gay party of dancers, whose graceful figures swaying to and fro captivated her fancy; their musical voices held her as in their thrall. Their visit was like a delightful dream, and she asked, "Pray tell me who you are?" And they answered, "We are Truth." So she believed for days; then she realized her mistake, and that they were not Truth, but pleasure. Again she went to the well, but there found nothing.

A day dawned brightly, and there came another knock.

On her threshold stood a lovely child Its hair was garlanded with flowers, and its garb was spotless white.

When it entered, it was as if a portion of the pure light of the sun had stolen into the room.

The child's arms were soon intwined about the neck of the seeker after Truth.

The odor of the blossoms intoxicated her; her heart beat with wild delight; a tender kiss was stamped on her brow, and with a gentle whisper, "I am Truth," the child was gone, and at her feet buds blossomed—the room was lighter than it had been for years.

The memory of that vision remained with her a long time, but at last it fled, and then she knew it was Love, not Truth.

Again she went to the well, yet found nothing.

Years after another knock came. Her heart beat fast as the figure of a man entered. His manner was flattering and full of grace—his face seemed honest.

She had never felt the influence of other visitors exerted over her with the power of this one.

She dared not ask his name, but as he left he said, pressing her hand, "I am Truth."

For years she believed it; then came doubt, and she saw what had been her ideal of Truth was only Policy.

The next visitor was a long bearded, bent old man, whose face was furrowed and whose hands were palsied.

From his feeble lips came the words, "I am Truth." His stay was short, but she remembered that visitor, and oft when the days were drear she saw before her the trembling hands, the thin, snow white locks, the bent form and the quivering lips, and she believed she had found Truth.

But she was growing older now, and something told her that Sorrow was not Truth. Then she went to the well, and it was dry. But there, far down in its depths, she saw a toad. "Who are you?" she cried, and a hollow voice replied, "I am Tradition." So she turned her face toward home and knew that the whole world lied and was deceived.

That same night came a knock at her door. She rose slowly and opened it. There stood the strange creature covered with rags—her first visitor.

"What would you? Who are you?"

Then came the answer, "I am Truth."

"I would see your face," she murmured.

"Nay, experienced one, my face is not fair to see, but I am Truth."

"Yet would I see it," she made answer, "for well know I now that Truth is not what we would have it, nor is it fair."

Then the figure threw off its rag covering, and before her stood a skeleton.

Now she knew her life search was ended and that she had at last found Truth.—Henry Russell Wray in Philadelphia Ledger.

Peacocks' Feathers.

Peacocks' feathers have been handed down to us from the ancient days of mythology as emblematical of treachery, evil and misfortune. The origin of this strange superstition is founded upon the following classical story: Osiris, king of Egypt, upon starting on his Indian expedition, left his queen, Isis, regent, with Argus, his minister, as her chief adviser. Argus, with his hundred eyes, or rather his spies, soon made himself so formidable and powerful that he seized the queen regent, shut her up in a strong castle and proclaimed himself king of Egypt. Mercury was sent against him with a strong army, took him captive and cut off his head, whereupon Juno metamorphosed him into a peacock and set his spies in his tail. From this legend and the various additions made to it from time to time the belief has arisen that it is unlucky to have peacocks' feathers inside a house.—Brooklyn Eagle.

THE MIDSPOT OF OUR PLANET.

Many Places Which Contest the Honor. Their Claims.

For several centuries different cities of the orient have contested with each other for the honor of being recognized as the midspot of our planet. In 1838 a London geographer issued an elaborate work, in which he tried to prove the British metropolis to be the center of the landed surface of the globe. Jerusalem and Delphi, notwithstanding that neither is situated on or very near the equator, have for ages been the two main contestants in this great central city controversy.

William Simpson of the London Society For the Exploration of Palestine tells us that Herr Schick has sent home drawings of the spot in Jerusalem which is supposed by some to be the exact center of our world. This interesting place is in the Greek church, nine feet to the right of the reliquary containing what purports to be the crown of thorns worn by our Saviour, the first nail that was driven through his right hand and the blood which he shed on that memorable occasion.

It is written in the Psalms, "God is my king of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth."

This can only refer to the scenes of the passion and of the holy sepulcher. The midst or spot of the earth must, therefore, be sought in that vicinity. The belief that the center of the earth is at Jerusalem is very ancient, for it is alluded to by St. Ephrem in his reference to Noah's prayer over the bones of Adam. St. Ephrem says, "And Noah buried Adam's bones in the middle of the earth." A certain round stone in the temple of Delphi is also spoken of by the ancient writers as being the "navel or center of the earth."

Orestes takes refuge there when pursued by Euminides. Pindar also makes mention of the exact location of the center of the world, and Pensanius, like Herr Schick, also had the pleasure of beholding the only genuine central hub of our planet. He, however, locates it at Delphi instead of at Jerusalem. "It is made," he said, "of white stone, smooth and polished, and is no doubt the middle point of the world."—Philadelphia Press.

A Mean Trick.

A lawyer defending a promissory note went to lunch, leaving his books and citations on the table in the courtroom. The opposing counsel sneaked back into the room and changed the places of all his bookmarks. In the afternoon the lawyer, taking up his books, referred the court to his authorities. His lordship noted every volume and page carefully and took the case under consideration. In rendering his opinion he said:

"I was inclined after hearing argument of counsel for defendant to nonsuit plaintiff, but I find, after referring to the authorities quoted by counsel, none of them bear on this case, and I am led to think that the gentleman has been willfully trying to insult the court. He has referred me to an action of an Irishman who sued the proprietor of a monkey for damages for biting him to a case of arson, one of burglary, two of petty larceny and three divorce cases, none of which bears on an action to recover on a promissory note. Perhaps the grossest insult to the court is referring to 'Duckworth versus Boozyman,' an action charging defendant with breach of promise. Judgment for plaintiff with costs."

The lawyer never knew what the matter was and to this day thinks the judge was out of his mind.—Pearson's Weekly.

Fined a Dead Man.

Down in southwestern Texas, just about midway between Houston in the east and El Paso in the west, and very near to the Rio Grande, the Southern Pacific railway has built over the Pecos river the highest bridge in the United States. Just before this bridge was finished one of the workmen fell from it and was of course killed.

The county judge was brought from Langtry, the town nearest to the bridge, to hold a "crowner's 'quest." The judge arrived with a great concourse of people, all anxious to serve on the jury. Proceedings were begun by examining the body of the dead man. Upon this were found a loaded revolver and $40 in cash. Perceiving this, the judge said:

"There ain't nothing to do about this case, gentlemen of the jury. The man's dead, and it's perfectly plain how he met his death. But what I want to know is, what was he doing with that gun? That's against the laws of Texas. He ain't here to explain, but because a man takes it into his head to put on wings and mount to the skies is no reason why the great state of Texas should be defrauded. Law is law and justice is justice. I fine him $40 for carrying a deadly weapon."

It is needless to say that the fine was paid.—Harper's Magazine.

The Gallows Plant.

During the middle ages the botanists, or old "herbalists," gave currency to many curious stories concerning the growth, form, etc., of mandrake or May apple, which finally resulted in its being given the name of "gallows plant." The pseudo scientists of that time declared that mandrake would grow in no other place except upon which some terrible crime had been committed. The roots were formerly supposed to bear a strong resemblance to the human form and are figured in the old "Herbals" which lie before me as I write, even distinguished as to sex, the female of the plant having long hair; the male, heavy beard.—St. Louis Republic.

Older Than He Was.

"I say, boy," remarked a tourist to a youngster, "what's the name of that hill yonder?"

"Dunno," replied the lad briefly.

"Don't know? Lived here all your life, I'll warrant, and don't know the name of that little hill? Well, I am surprised," continued the pilgrim.

"No, I dunno its name," replied the lad, stung by the criticism. "Anyhow," he continued, "the hill was here before I com'd."—New York Herald.

HOW TO SEE THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Suggestions as to the Most Convenient and Economical Method

When you go to the World's Fair do not take a trunk with you if you can possibly get along without it, but pack your few necessary traveling articles in a hand bag or grip and carry it along with you. You will never know what a lot of annoyance you have been spared in this way. Then get your tickets from Crookston to Chicago and the greatest Fair the world has ever seen, reading via St. Paul, and thence via "The Northwestern Line" to Chicago. The Northwestern line runs three superbly equipped trains from St. Paul to Chicago, leaving St. Paul at 8:00 a. m. daily, 6:25 p. m. daily except Sunday, 8:00 p. m. daily, making quicker time to Chicago than by any other line. Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, ontana Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmondton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

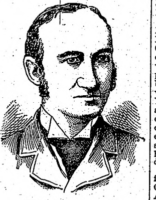
THE SUPREME BENCH.

THE HIGHEST POSITION TO WHICH LAWYERS MAY ASPIRE.

The Attainment Is Usually Accompanied by Pecuniary Sacrifices—Functions of the Federal Supreme Court—The Newly Appointed Justice.

Not many people aside from those whose studies or duties have led them to a thorough investigation of the subject realize in its entirety the significance of the provisions of the national constitution creating the supreme court of the United States. Prior to its creation history had furnished no example of a court independent of all other branches of government, superior to legislation, beyond the reach of executive power, with a jurisdiction above the law it administers, and charged not only with the administration of public justice, but with the limitation of the powers of government and the adjustment of conflicting claims of sovereign states. After its establishment similar courts arose in many of the states, clothed with similar authority for all local purposes, but it was the prototype of them all.

The principal function of the federal supreme court is the construction, preservation and enforcement of the provisions of the constitution. It is charged with the limitation of many other departments of governmental authority, but its chief usefulness has always been found in the administration of the fundamental law upon which our system of government depends, and in that field it has confronted the most dangerous emergencies. Its construction of the constitution or of the compatibility of legislative enactments with the constitution settles the matter for all time, unless indeed, as it sometimes has done, it should at some future period reverse its own decision.



WILLIAM B. HORNBLOWER.

Foreign jurists and writers of eminence have sometimes made the mistake of supposing that this unique authority vested in the court was of a despotic nature and dangerous as tending to defeat the will of the people as expressed by their representatives. But this view looks at the power as one that may be exercised by way of supervision, determining the constitutionality of an enactment in advance of its being contested. This would make of the supreme court a virtual third house of congress, and no such authority would be tolerated in the United States. The powers of the judicial department are as sharply defined as those of the other co-ordinate branches of the government, and the unconstitutionality of an act cannot be pronounced except for the determination of litigation. This is the American way of securing to the people the perpetual reign of law free from the sway of arbitrary power.

And the American people have learned to have faith and pride in the court. They feel that it is indeed the bulwark of their liberties. The names of Jay, Marshall, Cushing, Taney, Livingston, Story, Chase, Hunt, Thompson and a score of others lend luster to American jurisprudence, and now that the transient passions of their times have passed furnish standards by which to measure aspirants to the bench they filled and honored.

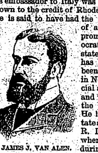
To be worthy of a place amid this brilliant galaxy is to be illustrious indeed, and to fall short of it is to court oblivion. The standard is rigorously applied with each recurring appointment, and it is matter of congratulation that during the 103 years of the court's existence the result of the test has been unfavorable to so few. None but the most eminent jurists and lawyers are accorded the honor of an appointment, and it often requires great monetary sacrifices on the part of successful practitioners to accept the dignity, for the salary of the associate justices is but $10,000 a year, and great lawyers often receive more than that amount as a retainer in a single suit.

President Cleveland's most recent appointment to the bench, William B. Hornblower of New York, is a good illustration of this. As a practicing lawyer, engaged in the most important sort of litigations, his income averages $40,000 a year, and this of course must be entirely resigned when he takes his seat upon the bench. The aggregate of the amount thus surrendered will be greater than usual in his case, for he is but 42 years old and might reasonably expect to largely augment his fortune before reaching the average age at which supreme court justices are appointed. No other judge but Story was ever appointed at a younger age, and if Mr. Hornblower attains as great an eminence as that famous justiciary and equals the years of his service upon the bench of the highest court in the land he will probably feel amply repaid for any pecuniary sacrifices his position may have cost him. Such a distinction, in the nature of things, can be attained by few men in a generation, and the ambition to live in history among the famous judges of one's time is certainly far nobler than that which leads merely to the accumulation of wealth.

LOOKS LIKE ALBERT EDWARD.

James J. Van Alen Enjoys That Distinction.

The appointment of James J. Van Alen as embassador to Italy was officially set down to the credit of Rhode Island, and he is said to have had the indorsement of all the most prominent Democrats of that state, though he has for years been prominent in New York social and club life and was born in the metropolis. He has a fine estate at Newport, R. I., however, where he lives during most of the time he spends in this country, and no valid objection can be urged against his claiming citizenship there. His winters are generally spent in England, where his children are being educated, and where he is noted, as at Newport, for the lavishness of his hospitality.



JAMES J. VAN ALEN.

His Newport place is called Wakehurst. It contains about 14 acres, inclosed, in the English fashion, by a stone wall, and a handsome Elizabethan mansion modeled after a well known English country house. Mr. Van Alen is there every year from the beginning of June to the end of September and takes a prominent part in the social affairs of the summer capital, as he generally does also during the winter season at his house in London.

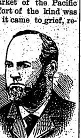
Mr. Van Alen is a very wealthy man. His father, the late General Van Alen of New York, left him upward of $4,000,000, most of it safely invested in productive real estate, which has risen in value till a moderate estimate places his present fortune at $12,000,000. He has been a widower for about 11 years. His wife was the eldest daughter of the late William Astor and died about six years after their marriage, leaving three children. She and her husband spent much of their married life abroad, returning every summer, however, for the Newport season, and Mr. Van Alen has conducted his life on similar lines since his wife's death.

It is not strange that he should be fond of England, for he was educated at Oxford, but he takes an interest in American public affairs and is a warm admirer of President Cleveland. He is devoted to athletics, particularly tennis and boxing, is a member of most of the swell New York clubs and a director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He is about 47 years of age and greatly resembles the Prince of Wales.

TONNAGE CONTROLS WHEAT.

That Is the Secret of McNear's Corner In California Grain.

Another attempt has been made to corner the wheat market of the Pacific coast. The last effort of the kind was made in 1882, and it came to grief, resulting in losses of millions of dollars to its projectors and almost swamping the Nevada bank. George W. McNear of San Francisco, who is said to have dropped $1,000,000 in that deal, kept right along in the grain business after the collapse and has for years been known as the grain king of California. He is the man who engineered the recent corner, though he denies the corner and denies even that he speculates, claiming that he is engaged in an entirely legitimate business.



GEORGE W. M'NEAR.

Be that as it may, he certainly managed to charter three-fourths of the vessels available during the season for the shipment of grain from California, and thus made himself practically the dictator of the price at which farmers must sell their wheat. Nobody wants to buy wheat that cannot be shipped, and in San Francisco the man who controls the shipping controls the price. The financial stringency and the low price of wheat elsewhere helped McNear out. Farmers could not borrow enough money on their wheat to buy bags to ship it in. McNear saw all this, and knowing the whereabouts and engagements of wheat ships understood that tonnage would control wheat; hence the corner.

Mr. McNear is by birth a Scotchman. He is short, sturdy and red faced, with a solid looking head and square shoulders. He began life as a small commission merchant in Petaluma, Cal., handling farm produce. Along in the sixties he started in the grain business in San Francisco, and despite some heavy losses made a great deal of money. He is not a brilliant operator, working very cautiously and with great secretiveness. Nobody is ever aware of what he is about until his schemes are consummated.

An Exposition at Lyons.

An exposition will be held at Lyons, France, next year. The fair is to be opened on April 26. The principal building is to be polygonal in shape with a lofty central dome, which will rise to a height upon the interior of some 180 feet. It rises in a graceful curve, the structure being strengthened by means of the airy lateral supports which resemble the flying buttress of a Gothic cathedral. The building will be 765 feet in diameter and will cover a space of nearly 500,000 square feet. The total weight of the entire structure will be only about 2,480 tons.

Hebrew Colony In Palestine.

Baron Edmund de Rothschild's colony in Palestine shows such promise of success that he has purchased more land. In accordance with the baron's request the colonists have all abandoned the use of Yiddish and now speak nothing but Hebrew.

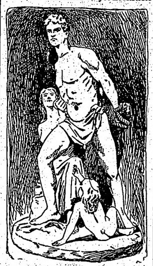
Tribute to the Sea.

The annual loss of shipping and cargo is estimated at $99,100,000.

"THE STRUGGLE FOR LIBERTY."

A Statue That Provoked the Displeasure of the Czar.

Julius Didericksen, the Danish sculptor, would have gained immortality with his group, "The Struggle For Liberty," if he had never done anything else worthy to survive. It is of the sort that marks an epoch in the history of art and a culminating point in the genius of the artist. It is the antithesis of the "Laocoon," of which it is inherently suggestive, and from an art standpoint is worthy to take its place beside that ancient masterpiece. One hardly knows whether to be glad or sorry that it was not placed on exhibition at the World's fair. Surrounded, as it must have been there, by other works that might have distracted some of the attention it deserves, the conviction is yet irresistible that it is masterful enough to have maintained its pre-eminence in any artistic company.



THE STRUGGLE FOR LIBERTY.

It was the sculptor's intention to have it exhibited at the exposition, and he shipped it to this country for that purpose. But it arrived too late and for some time lay hidden away in a New York warehouse. Now, however, it has been placed on exhibition, and the people of the metropolis have an opportunity to see what genius can do with a block of white marble.

There is a story behind the statue that ought to be true. It is said that King Christian, accompanied by his son-in-law, the czar of Russia, paid a visit to Didericksen's studio while the artist was putting the finishing touches to the group, and that the czar was so forcibly struck by the suggestiveness of the subject and its spirited treatment that he wished the work destroyed. King Christian could not accommodate so far as that, but he secured the sculptor's promise to send the group to France or the United States, where it was supposed its influence would be less hurtful to monarchial institutions.

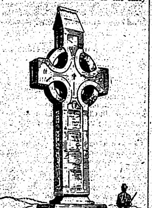
CALIFORNIA'S PLYMOUTH ROCK.

It Is to Be Marked by a Memorial Monument.

California also has her Plymouth rock. It is the spot where the first recorded church service was held on the Pacific slope more than three centuries ago, and it is to be marked by a memorial cross, the gift of George W. Childs of Philadelphia. The memorial is to be placed about three-quarters of a mile from the lighthouse on Point Reyes peninsula and will have the following inscription:

> Consecrated October 25, 1893, by the Church Missionary Council, as a memorial of the service held on the shore of Drake's bay about St. John Baptist's Day, June 24, A. D. 1579, by Francis Fletcher, Priest of the Church of England, Chaplain of Sir Francis Drake; Chronicler of the Service.

The design is a copy of an ancient Celtic cross, and the stem is to be richly carved after the manner of the early Celtic Christians. The principal device above the arms on the face of the cross will be the "Book of Common Prayer." On the reverse will be the arms of the Episcopalian diocese of California and three inscriptions reciting that it is a memorial of the first Christian service on the coast, of the first use of the "Book of Common Prayer" in the country and of one of the first recorded missionary prayers on the continent.



CALIFORNIA'S MEMORIAL CROSS.

The subbase will be 7 feet high and ornamented with runic designs, each facade presenting a cross like that of the main shaft above it.

Icemaking Machines.

The icemaking machine was first put into operation in 1860. At the present day every brewery, every passenger steamer and not a few restaurants and hotels make their own ice.

ORPHANS IN AUSTRIA

THE STIGMA OF PAUPERISM NEVER CROWNS ITS HELPLESS TOTS.

It Is the Only Country In the World Where Foundlings Are Debarred From the Workhouse—Their Care Intrusted to the Refined and Wealthy.

There is only one country in the world where orphan children and foundlings are debarred from admission to the workhouse. It is in Austria, which maintains that to place the stigma of pauperism upon the poor little things is to handicap them later on in the race for life and bread, and thus to lessen their chance of ever becoming self supporting and self respecting citizens. That their reasoning is just is shown by the results. Whereas in Paris, London and Berlin the majority of children born in workhouses return years afterward to die there. In Vienna it is a most unusual occurrence for a foundling or an orphan dependent upon public charity to become in old age a charge upon the community.

In Austrian cities children of this class are boarded out in the families of workmen living in the suburbs at the expense of the municipality. But their care is intrusted, not to the workhouse authorities, but to gentlemen and ladies of leisure, fortune and respectability, who practically become the guardians of the little ones.

Their charge is a purely honorary one, and they are chosen as a rule by the burgomaster of the city or town from among the nobility, the retired magistrates, the half pay officers, the rich childless widows and wealthy old maids. They bear the title of orphan fathers and orphan mothers, and so honorable is the position regarded by the population that the mayor never experiences any difficulty in securing the services of a sufficient number of such official parents.

During the early youth of their wards the duties of these orphan parents are confined to visiting them at unexpected times and to keeping the people with whom they board up to the mark by showing them that the children have powerful protectors. Upon the official parent devolves the responsibility of deciding the special calling in life for which the youngsters show the most aptitude, the only stipulation made by the municipal authorities being that the boys should be taught some skilled labor or profession calculated to give them later on a chance of being able to support a wife and family and to lay by provision for old age. When these lads go out into the world, it is to their official parents that they turn for a character, and if evil days come to them they appeal to their official protectors for help.

It is an incalculable benefit for a boy who is just starting out in life to have a man of position to stand by him and to speak to the world in his favor, nor is there anything in connection between the two to ruffle the independence of the younger, for when once launched in life the elder stands to him simply in the relation of an old and tried friend, whose advice he may follow or not as he pleases.

With regard to the orphan or foundling girls, they are mostly trained for domestic service, which, however, they are not permitted to enter before the age of 14, and then it becomes the orphan mother's duty to investigate the character of the persons who propose to employ her, to see that she is well treated and eventually, when she marries, to find out about the man's reputation and as to whether he has the means of keeping a wife.

Usually it is from her own house that the marriage takes place, and at every turn the girl is made to feel the advantage of having a lady of rank to whom she can always appeal, who is bound to protect her, to defend her when wrongfully accused and to guard her as far as possible from evil.

Thanks to these orphan parents, hereditary pauperism in Austria has been practically stamped out, and there is much in the system that may commend itself to people on this side of the Atlantic. The condition of the pauper orphans and of the foundlings now dependent upon the public charity of this great metropolis would certainly be vastly improved and the future prospects of the little unfortunates rendered more promising were our leading citizens and their wives to follow the example of the people in similar standing in Austria, and to add a new and useful interest to their lives by assuming the honorary and honorable office of orphan parents.—New York Tribune.

A Stilt Race In France.

A French scientific journal gives particulars of a stilt race (course d'echassiers) at Bordeaux, in which Aime Martin, a young man under 20, beat the record by covering 440 kilometers (about 275 miles) in 76 hours and 35 minutes. His stilts were about 6 feet long and weighed over 16 pounds. His bare feet were not injured by the friction, and he suffered no inconvenience. Another race of portanieres—that is, women who carry burdens on their heads—was won by Margaret Pujol, 36 years of age. Her burden consisted of a basket laden with 45 pounds, and the course was 9 kilometers (about 5⅝ miles), which she covered in 1 hour and 5 minutes.—Exchange.

Vowel Sounds Photographed.

Professor Herrmann has succeeded in photographing the vowel sounds by speaking them into a phonograph, which reproduced them slowly. The vibrations were recorded by a microtelephone, which had a small mirror in the vibrating drum. A ray of light reflected from the mirror recorded its vibrations—that is to say, the vibrations of the vowel sounds—on a traveling band of sensitized paper.—Chicago Herald.

COULDN'T FOOL THE ROOSTER.

The Farmer Tried to Stop His Crowing, but It Didn't Work.

When Charlie Trifles went out into the country for his health, he put up at Farmer Ellery Cranberrymarsh's place. Farmer Ellery was something of a poultry fancier and had one of those big, melodious, gamy cockerels of Buff Cochin extraction, with a voice that was a cross between the blowing of a geyser and the sound of a three tined whistle on a boiler factory. About 3 o'clock every morning the rooster would arise on his perch, and standing on his tiptoes make all the hens sick by letting go his voice like the sound of many waters.

It also broke up Charlie Trifles' slumbers, and he was unable to woo them back by cigarettes or philosophy. He made considerable complaint to Uncle Ellery, and the old gentleman hunted over his poultrybook and read as follows:

"There is one simple device by which a rooster can be reduced to complete and acceptable silence. The bird cannot crow unless he is able to stand erect and raise his head to the fullest extent. Now if a plank, or even a lath, be placed above his perch so that he cannot gain an upright position, he cannot possibly lift up his voice."

Here was the solution, and Uncle Ellery arranged laths above all the perches. In the early dawn before milking time Uncle Ellery crept out to the hennery to see how the device worked. The cock had just awakened and was trying to get up to turn his lungs loose in his usual matutinal vociferation, but he was unable to raise his head. A hen opened one eye, and seeing his dilemma smiled and dropped off to sleep again. Uncle Ellery chuckled.

But the rooster was not to be foiled. Recognizing his dilemma, he dropped off the perch to the floor, got a good grip on an adjacent crack in the boards so as to take up the recoil of the crow, raised himself up on tiptoe and let out his lungs in a way that pulled Charlie Trifles out of bed and drove him to cigarettes. Then after a satisfied "cut, cut, cor-r-r-r-r," the rooster kicked a hen or two off the roost and dropped off into a contented slumber.—Minneapolis Journal.

An Escape In the Sky.

Once in awhile a meteor plunging into the atmosphere of the earth is neither consumed by the heat developed through friction nor precipitated upon the surface of the globe, but pursues its way out into open space again.

Its brief career within human ken may be compared to that of a comet traveling in a parabolic orbit, which, as if yielding to a headlong curiosity, almost plunges into the sun and then hastens away again, never to return.

In July, 1892, one of these escaping meteors was seen in Austria and Italy. Careful computations based upon the observations which were made in various places have shown that it was visible along a track in the upper air about 680 miles in length. When at its nearest point to the earth, it was elevated 42 miles above the surface.

From this point it receded from the earth, its elevation when last seen being no less than 98 miles.

Although the resistance of the atmosphere was not sufficient to destroy the motion of this strange visitor, which contented itself with so brief a glimpse of our globe, yet it carried the effects of that resistance out into space with it and can never shake them off.

No matter what its previous course may have been, the retardation that it suffered during its passage through the air sufficed to turn it into a different direction and to send it along another path than that which it had been following.—Youth's Companion.

Instantaneous Photography.

A recent improvement in photography enables the artist to overcome to a considerable extent the difficulty of preserving the natural expression of the sitter during the necessary period of exposure. It seems that, notwithstanding this period has been greatly shortened in various ways, particularly by the adoption to such an extent of the magnesium light, with its unique advantages, nervousness is so prevalent among those who sit before the camera that the operator has still found the interval too prolonged for the perfect accomplishment of his work.

Herr Haag of Stuttgart claims to meet and overcome the trouble in question by means of a change in the management of the magnesium light, making for this purpose what are called lightning cartridges, which cause a tremendous development of luminosity and are set alight in one-tenth of a second by means of electricity. The so called natural photographs taken by this process are said to preserve the mental expression and momentary play of the features with extraordinary clearness and exactitude, but the operation requires so much skill and practice that it is said to be carried on only by a single photographer in Berlin.—Berlin Letter.

The Vanity of Sparrows.

A correspondent informs the London Spectator that his daughter writes to him from Bangalore that she is "obliged to cover up her looking glass with a towel, for the sparrows come in, sit on the frame and tap at themselves, making on both glass and dressing table a horrid mess. At first the towel kept them away, but they were always on the watch, and if any one threw back the towel they would be there in a minute. But now they hold back the towel with one claw, hold themselves on with the other and peck away at their images."

Men In Petticoats.

It will probably be a matter of surprise to the general reader to learn that the petticoat was first worn exclusively by men. In the reign of King Henry VII the dress of the English was so fantastic and absurd that it was difficult to distinguish one sex from the other. In the inventory of Henry V appears a "petticoat of red damask, with open sleeves." There is no mention of a woman's petticoat before the Tudor period.—Exchange.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

THE republicans in the Senate stand solid for repeal. The wiggling comes from the other fellows.

CROOKSTON is now the seat of two high-grade institutions of learning, which have been opened to the public this week.

THE president lays down the law to the senate intimating very plainly that he will not have anything short of absolute repeal of the Sherman law.

THE Minneapolis Exposition though a pretty good show is not up to former years. Hard times and the World's Fair have trenched upon what would have otherwise been a grand display.

THE probabilities are that the appoinment of Allen, of Illinois, for agent at White Earth, will be defeated in the senate. Ha an experienced Minnesota democrat been named no objection would have been raised.

IT is rumored that congress has drawn so heavily upon its grey matter since it convened in extra session that its members are tired and the body will adjourn for a two weeks recess. The country has been "tired" by their dilatory actions and will gladly welcome any kind of a change.

THE brilliant democratic administration manifests its ideas of reform in the appointment of an Illnois man, a man totally unacquainted with management of Indians, to succeed Maj. C. A. Ruffee as agent at White Earth. Senator C. K. Davis very properly objected to confirming the appointment in the senate.

THE affairs of the defunct Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company have opened the eyes of some Minneapolitans to the significance of having their names used as directors in a concern in which they claim to have no interest. Innocent outsiders someway get the impression that they are responsible parties and the question will be tested.

THE Board of Regent of the State university, still persist in their design to use Ohio stone in the construction of the new library building in spite of the protest of the press and the people. It seems to be another case of "the public be hanged" or words to to that effect. The board richly deserves to be fired bodily.

THE Globe seems to have let up on its attacks on Mayor Wright and we don't hear so much about that "globe detective bureau" as we did. In its selection of newspaper comments on the situation, the Globe did not seem to see the many favorable comments make on Mayor Wright, but seemed to get every one of the other kind—and more too.

THE Republican State central committee met at St. Paul on Monday, to elect a man to fill the place made vacant by the resignation of Chairman Jamison. The committee made an extremely wise choice in selecting Tams Bixby, the efficient secretary of the board, for the position. Mr. Bixby has an extensive acquaintance in the State and this appointment will give universal satisfaction.

THE genial Pat Russell has been appointed to fill the clerkship in the land office made vacant by the resignation of P. J. McGuire. This is a worthy appointment and we are now looking for his nomination for governor of Minnesota. All of Pat's relatives in Massachusetts are governors, and gubernatorial nominees and why shouldn't Pat follow suit in the natural order of things?

THE Weyerhausers seem to be quietly buying up timber lands on the Red Lake reservation, and it is said, that if Little Falls gets the railroad she contemplates to the north-west the Weyerhausers will build their contemplated big saw-mills at Little Falls instead of Minneapolis. The Minneapolis Lumberman combats this idea on the ground that Little Falls is not enough of a railroad center.

THE Minnesota grain exhibit at the World's Fair is infested with the weevil and the work of that destructive bug is almost the first thing one sees in the wheat exhibit. So destructive are the ravages of the pest that the Superintendent, Gardner Stevens, told the writer that he would have to destroy the entire exhibit, after the show. The grains on exhibition are worth a big sum and it was the intention to give them to farmers who want to get choice seed but this can not be done. The weevil that causes the havoc was imported from a foreign country and is not a product of America.

Haller's Barb Wire Liniment for all cuts on cattle and horses; it is the best on earth. For sale by F. L. Durand.

There can be no health for either mind or body so long as the blood is vitiated. Cleanse the vital current from all impurities by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine recruits the wasted energies, strengthens the nerves, and restores health to the debilitated system.

Spots on Growing Plants.

The pale, round spots, about as large in circumference as a tackhead, that one sees on cigars now and then are said to be caused by dewdrops and raindrops that act as burning glasses when the sun shines through them on the green tobacco leaf. Be that as it may, the florists declare that palms are often burned by knobs and corrugations in the glass roofs of their greenhouses, as those irregularities tend to focus the sun's rays. The effect of this strong heat on the palm leaf—which is as sensitive to heat as it is to cold—is to cause a rusty brown spot to appear on the green. Sometimes the apparent motion of the sun in passing westward will trace a line of scorch across the leaf. Other plants are less susceptible to sun rays.—New York Sun.

Strange Act of a Chicago Tramp.

There is a tramp in Chicago who should be given a pension. He broke into a house in order to reach a bathroom and give himself a first class scrubbing. With no other alternative save the Chicago river it looks as though the tramp were justified.—Detroit Free Press.

An English View of America.

The announcement that an influential syndicate has been formed in Brixton to send an expeditionary force of pickpockets to the World's fair is a little belated. Gratifying to national pride it will be no doubt as showing that English spirit of enterprise still springs fresh and vigorous in the Brixtonian breast. But from the point of view of commercial speculation it is to be feared that the syndicate has been as completely whipped by American firms as have all previous exhibitions by the White City. Considering that the ashes of Christopher Columbus were all but stolen on the very opening day, and that the czar of Russia's jewels and the queen of Italy's lace have disappeared outright, we gravely doubt whether English competition will have much chance. Obviously native talent has every advantage of local knowledge, and though we could see the adventurers cross the Atlantic without a sigh we should advise them in their own interest to confine their operations to the narrower sphere of Brixton.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Art Instruction.

An artist had sold a picture for an exorbitant price and the purchaser sued to recover. The attorney for the purchaser was making the artist uncomfortable by his questions.

"Now, sir," he said in that pleasant, ingratiating manner of lawyers with a witness, "do you think anybody could see beauty in that picture?"

"Some persons certainly could," replied the artist.

"You think the initiated in technical matters might have no difficulty in understanding your work?"

"I am sure they would not."

"Do you think you could make me see any beauty in that picture?" this most superciliously.

"Probably not now, sir"—and the artist was most humble—"but once I could have done so easily."

"Now, sir, how is that? I don't understand you. Explain, if you please."

"That's quite easy, sir. I could have done it simply by employing you as my counsel in this case."—Detroit Free Press.

Courtesy Among the Swedes.

The Swedes are a quiet, taciturn people. There is no jostling even among the lowest classes. When a train leaves a platform or a steamboat a pier, the lookers on lift their hats to the departing passengers and bow to them, a compliment which is returned by the passengers. You are expected to lift your hat to the shabbiest person you meet in the street, and to enter a shop, office or bank with the hat on is considered a bad breach of good manners. In retiring from a restaurant you are expected to bow to the occupants. Bowing and hat lifting is so common that the people seem to move around more slowly than elsewhere, in order to observe the courtesy.—F. H. Stauffer in Kate Field's Washington.

Adam's Staff.

The Talmudic writers tell us that "the blessed God gave to the first man in paradise a staff which had been created between the stars. Adam gave it to Enoch; Enoch to Noah; Noah to Shem; Shem to Abraham; Abraham to Isaac; Isaac to Jacob. Jacob carried it into Egypt and gave it to his son Joseph. When Joseph died his household goods were taken to the house of Pharaoh. Pharaoh took the staff of Adam, which had descended to Joseph from the first man, and put it among his special treasures."—St. Louis

MEN WHO HAD LUCK.

STORIES CIRCULATED IN A GROUP OF TACOMA SPORTS.

Most of Them Were Told by Professional Gamblers and May or May Not Be True, but an Affidavit Is Required For the Yarn About the Gold Seeker.

"Well, that was luck."

The speaker was one of a group of half a dozen men who were standing on Pacific avenue puffing away at Havanas and talking just to pass time away and to clear their throats. The conversation had been about the livery stable man, Martin, of this city, who had fallen heir to $350,000 three years ago and didn't find it out until a few days ago.

"Talk about luck," said one of the group, who was a gambler, "we see plenty of it. Do you know that one day last week a man entered one of our gambling houses with a nickel and won out $400 in three hours? He had gone clean busted the night before and found the nickel in an out of the way corner in his room the next morning.

"That blokie went to the gambling house with the intention of placing his 5 cent piece on the number 5. He got into the room when the roulette ball was whizzing around on its tour of numbers. He rushed to the table and got down his nickel on the five just as the game runner shouted 'All down!' In a few seconds the ball started on its 'rear end' bouncing, and in a few seconds more the man shouted 'Five!' That gave the man with the nickel $1.75 for his 5 cents. Then he put $1 on No. 17, and that number came up, giving him $35 more. He continued to play with varying luck until in three hours he had won $400. And the next day he was broke again. He borrowed a nickel and tried the game again, but it didn't go."

"I can tell a story of a man who was lucky," said a business man. "In the early days of the gold excitement in California, there came into San Diego a man who was ragged and sick almost to death. He was taken in hand and fed and fixed up. Then he told a story of a wonderful find of gold he had made. It was only a few days off, he said, and he would take a party to the place if they would outfit.

"Several men who heard the story of the great gold in the mountains that was theirs to go after got up a party of 50. The start was made with that man as leader. After a few days' travel it became evident that the man had forgotten the way. They traveled on, trusting to luck, however. Indians were hostile at the time, and they started in to mow the gold hunters. They picked off one after another with their bullets. A score were thus taken off. Then a fever struck the party, and 11 more went the way of death.

"By this time the 19 survivors were crazy with rage. They had been 14 days out and were traveling in the most arid country. Food was growing less and less, and death faced everybody. On the afternoon of the fourteenth day the leader, who had caused so much misery, was given three days more to find his gold 'find.' If he was not successful by that time, he was to hang.

"Well, the three days had almost passed, and still there was no sign of the find. The last hour was almost up. It seemed that the man must hang. There were only five minutes more, now two minutes, now one minute, now a half minute—then came his luck. Just as the time was up for the hanging that man dropped dead."

"I don't see how he was lucky," put in the gambler who had told the first story.

"Why," said the business man, "he was lucky because if he hadn't died he would have been hanged."

Another gambler told how a few days ago a green Swede who knew nothing about the game, but determined to try his luck, had won nearly $1,000. He had been an onlooker once or twice and seen big winnings. He went to the roulette wheel with $20, and in a few hours he had won out $800. It seemed that no matter what number he put chips on—and he played recklessly, as all new players do—it came up every time. That was pure luck. The man played no combinations or "arrangements," because he was as green as grass and knew nothing about the game.

"I have a friend," spoke up one of the group, who is connected with the city government, "who by the merest luck made a discovery that is netting him millions. His name is Perkins, and a few years ago back in Minnesota he made his discovery. He was a traveling man for a grocery firm, and while walking to a train to go from one country town to another one day he whittled a stick.

"He had whittled the stick in a triangular shape. On the train the idea struck him that the shape would be just what was wanted for railroad spikes. The square spikes in vogue were not the right thing because they split the grain of the green ties when driven into them, and when dry the wood shrank away from them. The triangle shaped spike would not split the grain, and subsequent shrinkage would be done away with. Perkins submitted his discovery to Pullman, and now the spikes are being made by millions at Pullman, Ills., making millions for Perkins and Pullman."

Another gambler here chimed in with the statement that during the past week a gambler from Seattle had won $2,800 at faro in Tacoma rooms in two sittings. Both sittings occupied 13 hours, and the first sitting resulted in the winning of $1,800 and the second $1,000. During the latter game the man was out nearly the whole $1,800 he had won at sitting No. 1, but he picked up and won big money. "I suppose he has gone back to Seattle with his dough," said the gambler, "as I have not seen him for some days."—Tacoma News.

Kind Indeed.

Collector (angrily)—Do you intend to pay this bill next week or never, sir?

Trotter—Well, since you offer me a choice, I say never. Really very kind of you. Good day.—Truth.

"Ayer's Pills are the best medicine I ever tried; and, in my judgment, no better general remedy could be devised. I have used them in my family and recommended them to my friends and employes for more than twenty years. To my certain knowledge, many cases of the following complaints have been completely and

SHELLED ON SUNDAY.

Rebel Fleet at Rio Janeiro Again Bombards the City.

LONDON, Oct. 2.—A private cable message received in this city says that the rebel fleet at Rio de Janeiro reopened fire upon the Brazilian capital Sunday morning, and that the bombardment was continued throughout the day.

The same cable announces that though the foreign ministers at Rio, backed up by the commanders of the foreign war vessels at Rio have for a long time done everything possible to avert further hostilities between insurgents and the government forces, and that in spite of the fact that these friendly efforts have been directed continuously towards both sides in the dispute, a failure to induce the opposing factions to come to an agreement has resulted in more damage to Rio from the rebel guns and in loss of life.

The cable message received here does not give an account of the damage done by the bombardment of Rio, nor does it state how many people were killed ashore or afloat; but it is presumed here, from the fact that the rebels shelled the city all day Sunday, that the loss of life must have been considerable, and that both sides must have suffered.

The telegram referred to, however, confirms the statements previously made in these dispatches to the effect that provisions at Rio de Janerio are getting so scarce that, to use the exact words of the message, "famine prices prevail," and the Brazilian capital in spite of the untiring efforts made by the government to secure food in the neighborhood of the capital and from the adjoining states of Minash-Geraes, Sao Paulo and Guyoz, but these efforts do not seem to have been successful.

Bismarck's Return Postponed.

BERLIN, Oct. 2.—Prince Bismarck's return to Fredrichsruhe has been postponed until next week, as he still lacks the endurance for such a long journey. The Hamburger Nachrichten, his newspaper organ, expresses the hope that in consideration of his extreme weakness, he be spared all public demonstrations during his journey home. The sooner Bismarck leaves Kissengen, says The Nachrichten, the greater must be the efforts of his family and friends to guard against everything likely to excite him.

AWFUL CALAMITY.

MICHIGAMME RIVER FLOODS THE MANSFIELD MINE.

Twenty-eight Men Instantly Killed by the Rushing Water—River Channel Must Be Changed Before the Bodies Can Be Recovered and Work Resumed.

CRYSTAL FALLS, Mich., Sept. 30.—With a roar and a rush the waters of the Michigamme river broke through the Mansfield mine drowning 28 of the miners at work directly under the stream. The 18 men who escaped were employed in the lower levels. None of the bodies have been recovered and it is believed it will be necessary to divert the channel of the river before they can be secured.

The Mansfield mine is situated on the banks of the Michigamme river, about six miles east of Crystal Falls, the county seat of Iron county. It has been working between three and four years and has shipped about 60,000 tons of Bessemer ore. There has been much trouble with water and predictions have not been wanting that the river would some day break through the roof of the mine. The night shift had gone down, and though some one noticed that more water than usual was coming into the mine, no special alarm was felt as the pumps seemed to be able to keep the drifts free. Habituated to danger, the miners went to their work as usual, intent only upon the accomplishment of the daily task that brought food and shelter for themselves and families. So the work went on in its usual course until after 9 o'clock. Then there was

A Roar and a Rush of Water.

So fast came the flood that it is doubtful if the men in the upper levels were able to reach the shaft all. The scenes of horror and death in the upper levels can only be imagined, for no one escaped to tell the tale. Had the men been able to reach the shaft death would still be certain, for the No. 1 shaft, the only direct means of reaching the upper levels, collapsed and caved in, cutting off all escape that way. Had there been time the men might have descended by some means to the lower levels and crossed over to No. 2 shaft, but the in-rushing flood came too fast. There was heartrending scenes about the mine and a wild cry of alarm through the little hamlet about the mine. Men, women and children gathered with horror-drawn faces to see 18 men come forth from the hideous depths and to behold the Michigamme river plunging with a sullen roar into the chasm in its bed. The men who escaped were almost all from the two lowest levels. Warned by the roar of the waters they fled wildly toward the shaft and managed to escape from the pit of danger. There was no lack of volunteers to descend the only available shaft, but the self-sacrificing courage of the hardy miners was all in vain.

The Dark Angry Waters

rapidly rushed into the shaft and proved even to the courage of despair that human aid was without avail there. The 20 men in the pit were strangled corpses now. Not until after daylight did the river complete its work and resume its normal course. The mine workings had been filled to the river level and the fatal stream began to crawl down its dry bed once more. The death of 28 men marked the end of the Mansfield mine, for unless the river can be forced to seek another channel this rich deposit of iron ore can never be worked again. Eight of the victims leave families of children fatherless, and about half of the remaining 20 were the support of parents. The news was slow in reaching the outside world. The nearest telegraph office is at Crystal Falls, six miles away, and though a railroad track runs into the mine it was only used to haul out ore and haul in supplies. In the number of lives lost this is believed to have been the worst disaster that ever occurred in the Lake Superior iron region. What measures, if any, can be taken to rescue the bodies of the dead are yet undetermined. A careful survey of the ground by competent engineers have to be made, for the first towards getting into the flooded workings must be to divert temporarily or permanently the course of the Michigamme river and pump out the mines. The money loss will be $600,000.

TO KILL CARNOT.

A Number of Italians Said to Have Conspired to Take His Life.

PARIS, Oct. 2.—It is rumored that President Carnot's decision not to visit Toulon to receive the Russian fleet in person was caused by the discovery of a plot against his life. According to these rumors a number of Italians had formed a conspiracy to kill President Carnot, either on the journey to Toulon or while M. Carnot was at the place. The police say there is no truth in the story.

Final Settlement Concluded.

BANGKOK, Oct. 2.—The final settlement of the questions in dispute between France and Siam have been concluded. The covenant will be signed on Tuesday morning, and in the afternoon Le Myre de Vilos, France's special envoy, will leave the city probably for Saigon.

Bedouins Capture Caravans.

FEZ, Oct. 2.—Two large caravans, one conveying a large consignment of clothes for the troops and the other conveying a party of merchants, have been attacked and all the animals and goods have been stolen.

CONGRESSIONAL.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26.—The senate spent most of the day discussing President Cleveland. Mr. Stewart continued his attack of the previous day, and Messrs. Morgan and Voorhees defended the president.

In the house the Tucker election repeal bill was taken up. Mr. Tucker spoke for the bill and Mr. Brosius against it.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27.—An acrimonious debate was indulged in by Senators Wolcott and Gorman. Wolcott accused Republican and Democratic repeal men of forming a combination to force a vote on the repeal bill by compelling the senate to sit longer hours.

Mr. Gorman accused Mr. Wolcott of eavesdropping or of using information of eavesdroppers. The debate continued at considerable length.

Two speeches on the election repeal bill were made in the house. Neither was of particular interest.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28.—An acrimonious debate on the federal election bill occupied the day in the house, enlivened by what came near a personal encounter between Messrs. Morse and Fithian. Mr. Black and Mr. Breckinridge were the principal speakers on the election bill.

In the senate Mr. Peffer's speech occupied most of the day.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—Entire day in senate was devoted to debate on the repeal bill. The speakers were Harris (Dem., Tenn.) and Morgan (Dem., Ala.)

In the house the day was taken up on the federal elections bill.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—Two speeches on the repeal bill were made in the senate today, Camden of West Virginia in its favor, and Peffer of Kansas in opposition.

In the house the federal election bill was taken up and debated by Patterson of Tennessee, McCall of Massachusetts, McNagny of Indiana, Warner of New York and Richards of Ohio.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2.—Speeches on the repeal bill were made in the senate by Messrs. Kyle, Dubois, McMillan and Teller.

In the house debate on the election repeal bill was continued by Messrs. Dinsmore of Arkansas, Denson of Alabama, Cooper of Florida and Clark of Missouri.

THE NEW TARIFF BILL.

It Is Said to Be in No Sense a Free Trade Document.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 27.—The latest rumor about the new tariff bill to be promulgated by the house ways and means committee is that Chairman Wilson has already a rough draft of the measure. It is claimed that the measure now drafted has incorporated in it the views of President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle. It is said that Chairman Wilson has not the intention of reporting the bill to the house for six weeks or two months. He certainly will not report it until the election repeal and Sherman acts are disposed of. Those who claim to have inside information declare that the bill drafted does not make any radical cuts in schedules now in operation and is in no case a free trade document.

UNCONDITIONAL REPEAL.

It Is Conceded to Be Impossible and There Will Be a Compromise.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3.—The capital was full of rumors during the day regarding a compromise. It is now said a proposition is being considered which involves tariff revision. The proposition to compromise by amending the repeal bill so it will not take effect until 1895 is unsatisfactory to Republican repealers, who declare that they will not support such an amendment or vote for the bill with such poviso. Unconditional repeal is almost universally conceded to be impossible and there is no doubt but the Democratic leaders of the repeal movement, with Mr. Cleveland's consent, are engaged in an effort to arrive at some sort of compromise.

WHERE IS MENAGE.

A Reward May Be Offered for the Swindler.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 2.—The town is still talking about the gigantic swindling operations of Louis F. Menage, and wonders if the grand jury, which reconvenes on Tuesday, will secure sufficient evidence to indict others connected with the Northwestern Guaranty Loan company. There is talk that the city will offer a reward for Menage. The impression still prevails that the big operator on other people's money has not left the country. The report that Menage is hiding in the mountains of Chili does not wash with the business community, neither does the story that he had only $2,000 when he left Minneapolis.

Grover May Close the Fair.

CHICAGO, Oct. 3.—Director General George B. Davis has returned from Washington, and, while he had no conversation with President Cleveland on the subject, he gave it as his opinion that if the president could so shape his executive and private business he would be in Chicago to officially close the fair. An invitation to the president to do this will probably be extended by means of a special committee of world's fair officials within a short time.

Woolley Talks Back.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 2. — John G. Woolley, the temperance advocate and the founder of the Rest Island retreat, addressed a large audience at Plymouth Congregational church upon the charges of diverting the funds of the institution and of loose methods in connection with the management therewith. He made a very exhaustive statement, giving a history of the retreat and his connection therewith.

Russell Renominated.

BOSTON, Sept. 27.—John E. Russell was nominated for governor by the Democratic convention. For lieutenant governor, James B. Carroll was named. Both nominations were made by acclamation.

OVER A SCORE DEAD

TERRIBLE STORM RAGES ALONG THE LOWER MISSISSIPPI.

At Least Twenty-four People Killed In Plaquemine Parish, La.—Atlantic Coast Also Visited, Great Damage Being Done at Mobile, Ala., and Elsewhere.

NEW YORK, Oct. 3.—The Sun's special from New Orleans says: A terrible storm struck New Orleans late Sunday night, coming from the northeast, and raged here all night and part of Monday, sweeping to the south from here, along the line of the Mississippi river, through the parish of Plaquemine to the gulf. The storm was one of the worst which ever visited this part of the country, and as far as can be learned 24 or more persons were killed, and probably three times as many were wounded, some of them fatally.

ATLANTIC GALES.

Southern Coast Again Visited by a Severe Storm.

MOBILE, Ala., Oct. 3.—A southeast gale broke here about 4 a. m. and the wind has been increasing in velocity ever since until at this hour (1 p. m.) it blowing at least 50 miles an hour. The barometer is still falling. The wind has blown the water in from the gulf until the river has reached Royal street, which is four blocks from the river and at an elevation of about 15 feet from mean river height. There is no possible chance of estimating the money damage. All the wholesale and a great portion of the retail district of the city is some four feet under water and thousands of dollars worth of goods have been damaged. The pilot boat Ida Low has been driven on the wharf at the foot of St. Francis street. The bay boat Heroine was driven on the Mobile and Ohio wharf and Almost Totally Wrecked.

The Crescent City, another bay boat, left Point Clear at the same time the Heroine did and has not since been heard from.

It is repprted that three dredges working in the channel have been lost. It is also reported here that some 50 miles of the Louisville and Nashville road along the coast is also under water and that the Biloxi bridge has been swept away. Nothing has been heard of the gardeners in the marshes east of the city, and the worst is feared. Telegraphic communication is cut off in every direction. In this city houses have been unroofed, trees blown down one cotton warehouse has Succumbed to the Fury of the Gale.

All the smokestacks of the manufacturing industries have been blown down. Street car traffic has been totally suspended because of the damage to the electric wires, and the city will, no doubt, be in darkness, as the waves are fast encroaching on the electric light works, which may be under water in another hour. The busiest thoroughfares of the city are being navigated in boats and people are wading up to their armpits in an effort to save goods. It is the worst storm that has ever visited Mobile. The southern part of the city presents such a scene of wreckage that it looks as if it had been bombarded. The towers on the court house and Christ church are tottering. Dredge No. 5 was turned over near the lighthouse and a man was drowned. An unknown white man lost his footing while wading from the Union depot and was swept under a bridge and drowned.

YELLOW JACK RAGING.

The Epidemic at Brunswick, Ga., Continues on the Increase.

BRUNSWICK, Ga., Oct. 2.—Twelve new cases of yellow fever were reported Sunday, 10 white and two colored. Sixty-five patients are now under treatment. Surgeon Murray arrived at 10 o'clock from Jesup and reports that the autopsy on C. J. Warren, the deputy sheriff who died there Sunday, proved beyond question that he had yellow fever. It is stated that Warren had not been in any infected district within the past few weeks, and if this be true, the theory that it requires only 10 days' incubation for the fever to develop will be proved unreliable. The idea that negroes are by nature exempt from the disease is also dissipated. The negroes to date have been the greatest sufferers from the epidemic, and so have developed among them that scientists are investigating. No cheering words are truthfully written on the situation. The scourge is sure to stay till frost. Four-fifths of the people here will have the fever before the frost. This is no idle statement, but the result of careful consultation with the physicians. Surgeon Murray is working day and night. Saturday afternoon he visited Miss Orilla Dart on Simmons' Island and found her much improved. He returned at midnight and left on a special train for Jesup, held an autopsy there and returned to Brunswick at 11 o'clock.

Many Fatal Cases

Treasurer Washburn Failing.

BOSTON, Oct. 2.—The mental condition of ex-Treasurer John M. Washburn of the Old Colony Railroad company, is exciting much alarm among his friends and acquaintances. Ever since his recent reverses and his financial entanglements he has been rapidly failing. Dr. Conrad Wesselhoeft, the attending physician, considers his condition serious.

A Mountain Disintegrates.

TACOMA, Wash., Sept. 27.—Two thousand feet of the north peak of Mount Tacoma has fallen away. Scientists are at a loss to explain the cause.

THE MAJORITY RULE.

VICE PRESIDENT STEVENSON'S TIMIDITY AND HILL'S AUDACITY.

Senator Gorman's Masterful Patience and Voorhees' Hot Headed Denunciations. Interesting Sketches From the Senate Gallery—The Compromise Question.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 4.—[Special.]—Many inquiries have been received here as to why the majority of the senate has not long before this settled the repeal fight by forcing a vote. The people who make these inquiries cannot have read the newspapers very closely, because it has been made very plain in Washington dispatches for the last two or three weeks that under the rules of the senate a majority has no power to force a vote upon an unwilling minority. The situation which has prevailed in the senate for five or six weeks has brought one result in its train, and this is that sooner or later the traditional practice of the senate will have to be radically changed and absolute power given the majority to rule. As has already been pointed out in these dispatches, the majority could obtain control under the rules as they now stand were the presiding officer willing to be the instrument of the majority for this purpose. There was much talk last week that Vice President Stevenson would be willing to play this role; and it is true that he did have such a proposition under consideration. But the project was abandoned after a few days' consultation among the leaders. Vice President Stevenson did indeed listen to the propositions that were made to him in this direction by the repeal managers, but he ultimately reached the conclusion that any attempt on his part to coerce the minority would seal his own political fate

Many Presidential Aspirations.

It is well known in Washington that the vice president hopes to go up higher; not, indeed, through the death of President Cleveland, but by being nominated and elected as his successor in 1896. The vice president is quietly and carefully playing all his cards with a view to the coming presidential campaign. His policy is essentially one of caution, almost of negation. Mr. Stevenson was never a positive man and has always believed rather in the efficacy of neutrality. Some of his most intimate friends think he is making a great mistake in this matter. They think he had an opportunity which, had it been improved by a display of courage and determination, would have made him the foremost man of the Democratic party, excepting, of course, Mr. Cleveland. One of these friends of the vice president, an Illinois congressman, said to your correspondent:

"I urged General Stevenson to take the bull by the horns in the senate and to make himself forever famous. I pointed out that an opportunity had occurred to him which few men in this world enjoy. I showed him that reform in the parliamentary methods of the senate was inevitable; that the people, irrespective of party and of views on particular questions, were demanding it, and that if he were to be the pioneer of this reform it would surely work to his political advantage. But Mr. Stevenson could not see it. Naturally timid, he has been almost afraid to call his soul his own since he became the presiding officer of the senate. The policy of neutrality may be a good thing on some occasions, but I do not believe a man can win the presidency of the United States by a display of colorlessness, purposelessness and timidity. I say it is with regret, for Mr. Stevenson is one of my warmest friends, and nothing in the world could give me greater pleasure than to see him succeed to the presidency."

Senator Hill Only Wanted a Chance.

Several other presidential aspirants have had connection with this repeal bill struggle. One of them is Senator Hill. Mr. Hill has been exceedingly nervous and impatient all through the contest. Though not very much in love with Mr. Cleveland and far from being a supporter of the administration, Senator Hill has done everything in his power to urge the repeal bill through. Many times has he said to his intimate friends that he would give all the money he had in the world if he might be vice president of the United States and presiding officer of the senate for the space of a few weeks. The opportunity of which General Stevenson does not care to avail himself, although urged to do so, Senator Hill would embrace with great eagerness. "If I had been in Stevenson's place," Senator Hill says, "this bill would have passed the senate weeks ago, and there would never more be doubt as to the ability of the majority to rule in this body."

Senator Gorman's Masterfulness.

Men are made of various materials. Vice President Stevenson is neutral. Senator Hill is audacious and positive. Senator Gorman is quietly masterful. For several weeks Senator Gorman has not appeared on the surface except when he had his tilt with Mr. Wolcott. So far as the ordinary observer could see, he was doing nothing. He seemed to be on good terms with both sides, but it is not in Mr. Gorman's nature to be either neutral or idle. He has been at work, and successfully, too, as the champion of compromise, having for his argument the threatened disruption of the Democratic party in case one side or the other of this battle should lose its all. While Mr. Gorman does not show his hand until the time comes, he is always alert, active and full of purpose.

That moment is now here, and Mr. Gorman is at the front. Passage of a bill that will be on the whole satisfactory to the country, and at the same time make some concession to the silver producing states and avert the disaster which hangs over them, will be a great triumph for the leadership of Mr. Gorman in the Democratic party. His friends think it will make him the Democratic nominee three years hence.

Vigorous Senator Voorhees.

One reason why the plan to use the vice president in forcing a vote never amounted to anything was the fierce opposition thereto of Senator Voorhees, the repeal leader. Mr. Voorhees denounced the plan in language that was more picturesque than that which he usually employs. "No one but a miserable whelp of a plutocrat would ever think of such a thing," said Mr. Voorhees. "No one but a besotten, selfish moneybags would ever propose that the vice president of the United States purge himself and override the traditions and liberties of the senate. No one but an infernal gold worshiping scoundrel would ever propose that honorable senators should become party to such a villainous scheme."

When it comes to using English language in a declamatory or denunciatory sense, Mr. Voorhees is without a rival in the senate. When asked a few days ago how long he was willing to continue the battle for unconditional repeal, he replied: "You may say that we are ready to stay here all the fall, all winter and all next summer in order to pass this bill, and if that does not continue the story long enough—why, you may say that we will stay here until the angel Gabriel blows his trumpet."

What a Young Man Did.

A college graduate had hardly received his diploma before he was compelled to face poverty and family disgrace. His father, who had been reputed to be wealthy, was an embezzler and a fugitive from justice. His mother and sisters were entirely dependent upon his modest earnings in a broker's office.

He had planned taking an advanced course of professional study in architecture. His ideal occupation had to be abandoned. He was in love with a charming girl, but ceased to visit her since marriage was out of the question. An opportunity for a year's travel in Europe at a friend's expense was given up.

Year after year he maintained a hard, bitter struggle to make a living at uncongenial employment for his mother and sisters, to support his father abroad and to overcome prejudice caused by the family disgrace. He became a successful business man, but was prematurely gray at 40. His life was haunted by the ghosts of his youthful hopes.

Such lives do not furnish material for exciting stories. They are dull and prosaic, but are nevertheless heroic. To give up all that is dear to youth and to be loyal to family obligations sometimes is a crowning triumph of unselfishness.—Youth's Companion.

Many Ministers Present.

Ex-Secretary Lincoln, while United States minister to England, wished to get into Westminster on the occasion of a special service there. Archdeacon Farrar had told Mr. Lincoln to go to the east door of the cathedral to avoid the crowd and to inform the usher that he was the American minister, so that he could be conducted at once to the archdeacon's pew. When Mr. Lincoln sent in his name and title, the usher came out and said, with surprise, "For gracious' sake, how many American ministers are there?" It seems that several gentlemen of the cloth had each deftly made his way into the church by informing the usher that he was an American minister.—San Francisco Argonaut.

What Could He, Indeed?

A group of women in China got hold of a fashion magazine from the United States. After examining it carefully for some moments one of the number said to a missionary who had been talking to them against "foot binding:" "China women pinch foot. You say China woman velly bad. Melican woman not pinch foot. Melican woman pinch here," laying her hand on her waist. "Life here, life not in foot. Melican woman velly much more bad than China woman." What could the missionary say?—Louisville Recorder.

Five Years' Bank of England Paid Notes.

The stock of paid notes for five years in the Bank of England is about 77,745,000 in number, and they fill 13,400 boxes, which if placed side by side would reach 2¼ miles. If the notes were placed in a pile they would reach to a height of 5¼ miles, or if joined end to end would form a ribbon 12,455 miles long. Their superficial area is rather less than that of Hyde park. Their original value was over £1,750,626,600 and their weight over 90¼ tons.—London Tit-Bits.

Followed Plenty of Advice.

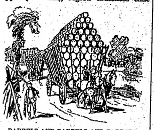
THE APPLE HARVEST.

HOW THE LUSCIOUS FRUIT IS GROWN AND GATHERED.

The Raising of Apples Does Not Reward the Grower as It Once Did—Barrels In Great Piles—The Apple Picker and His Work.

Barrels and barrels and barrels and barrels. Barrels piled on barrels. Barrels in big loads and barrels in little loads—not great clumsy painted barrels for the reception of oil or whisky or pork or lard, but light, graceful barrels shortly to be filled with what is, all things considered, the most delicious fruit in the world.

The passage of loads of apple barrels along the highways and byways of an apple producing region indicates that the time for picking is at hand. "One of the liveliest, drivingist times they is in the hull year," as an apple grower, who is proud of his success as such, described the apple harvest the other day. Apples grow in most parts of the United States north of a certain line, but there are some regions where they are a staple crop, and there you may see such rows of trim, well kept apple trees, such wide extending orchards, as, if you are a newcomer, will make you open your eyes for pure wonder.



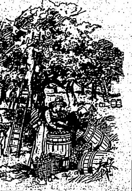
BARRELS AND BARRELS AND BARRELS.

It is a question in my mind which presents the most attractive sight—an apple orchard all white with blossoms under the blue of an early summer sky that is relieved here and there with the snowy fleeces of summer clouds, or the same orchard in the autumn when its boughs are bending under the weight of a full crop of red and russet and green fruit. I shall never forget the first time I saw the orchards that lie between the famous ridge road and Lake Ontario in level western New York. Orchards were not an unfamiliar sight to me, but such orchards I had never dreamed of. It was in June. The air was heavy with perfume and vibrant with the notes of song birds, for it was before the ugly English sparrow had come to America and driven the native feathered musicians from their own. My boyish eyes had always been used to picturesque irregularities of hill and valley, but the everywhere extending fruit farms of this, to me, new region more than made up for lack of diversity in the landscape.

The orchards I had known usually consisted of 25 or at most 50 trees which stood near the farmhouses and were regarded more as a luxury than as a means for adding to the income of the farmers. The orchards I now beheld were acres and acres in extent, and whole sections of 1,000 trees would be devoted to one variety of apples. Baldwins and Greenings and Seek-No-Furthers and Russets and Northern Spies and others of good marketable quality were cultivated systematically and scientifically.

The harvest apples that had been so much of a feature in the little orchards I knew best were prominent, I was told, in these big orchards only by their absence. To be sure, once in awhile a farmer would allow one or two trees to be grafted with early sweet stock just to furnish eating or cooking apples for the summer and early fall, but the raising of apples was not here an incidental matter, it was business throughout. There were practically no ungrafted trees, bearing only knotty, gnarled natural fruit. There were no isolated fence corner trees. There were no unpruned trees and no unskilled pruning, for in such a fruit land as I had now become a resident of there was enough of that work to bring into existence a careful study of pruning as an exact science, and whenever a man put his knife to a tree in one of those magnificent orchards he knew just what he was to cut off and just why he was to do it.

At the time of which I write the raising of apples was at its best as a profitable business. Two, three and even four dollars a barrel were obtained for the fruit every fall, and every year the acreage of the orchards was largely increased. Fortunes, as money was there and then counted, were being made by apple raisers, and year by year the crop was greater in quantity and finer in quality. Peaches, which had before this time been one of the standbys, were being abandoned as the peach orchards passed beyond the limit of full bearing age, and the trees were uprooted to make way for the victorious apple.



ROSY CHEEKED APPLES AND ROSY CHEEKED GIRLS.

Here and there throughout the region were long, low sheds, under which men worked from early spring until near the end of the harvest making barrels for the crop, and where coopers choruses more genuine than that in the opera "Boccaccio" were to be heard every day. The apple buyer was a factor, and a most important one, in every community, and his trips of investigation among the orchards at various periods of the season were subjects of animated discussion at the informal and incidental evening meetings of the farmers at the stores and postoffice.

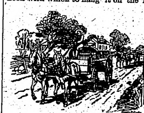
In September and October the harvesting of the apples went forward, and the weeks given up thereto made up a period of strenuous exertion, which is another way of repeating my farmer friend's asservation that apple picking is the "drivingest time in the hull year."

The winelike air of midautumn invigorated every worker, and no doubt the influence of the ever present fresh, wholesome fruit contributed to this. Added to these incentives were the consciousness on the part of the farmer that the work must be finished before the coming of the heavy frosts if crops were to be secured in good condition and what was considered big wages on the part of the laborer.

To be a good apple picker a man had to know just how to put up long ladders quickly and securely. He had to know just how and where to place his ladder so that he could clear a tree without having to take time to move oftener than was absolutely necessary. If he could tell almost instinctively what apples were marketable and what were not, so as to leave the latter to be shaken off for cider making later, he was just so much more valuable to his employer, for the time of the packer was valuable, and the fewer apples he had to throw out in putting them into the barrel the more he could put up in a day.

None but the most skillful was intrusted with this work of packing. Usually the farmer himself attended to this, for if his fruit were this year found to contain wormy or bruised apples next year the prices he could command would be below the highest figures. Each grower had to stencil his barrels with his name, and complaints made in the cities by the consumers would surely react on the packer along a chain of which the retail grocer, the commission merchant and the country apple buyer were the links.

Before I was big enough to earn money at the end of a ladder myself I used to watch Farmer Judson by the hour at his work of stowing the clean, sweet smelling fruit away in the equally clean, sweet smelling barrels. And when two or three years later it was decided that I might be intrusted with a three peck handbasket and a double iron hook with which to hang it on the ladder rungs while I used both hands to gather apples, I took extra pains to allow none but firm, sound apples to get into my basket.



AWAY TO MARKET.

Sometimes the farmer's wife or his pretty grown up daughters attended to the barreling of the apples, and then there was a chance for a comparison between the red of the apples and the rosy cheeks of the girls. After the picking and sorting and barreling was finished came the hauling away to market, and then seemingly endless processions of farm wagons laden with barrels of apples became a feature of the country roads. It was all of intense interest to me the first year I lived in the apple country, and I wish I could get time to put in a couple of weeks there this year

I have used the past tense in what I have had to say about apples and apple picking, but the orchards are still there, and so are the apples and the barrels, and doubtless plenty of pretty girls help in barreling the apples these later years, the same as they used to. But the big prices and large profits of the business of apple raising are no more, and unfortunately for the farmers this hard year the crop is a light one in many sections.

There is only one thing for a boy in the apple region of western New York to regret, and that is that apples are too plenty to make it worth while or even possible to "hook" them, and this fact quite does away with one of the chief pleasures of boyhood in many localities.

Apparatus to Prevent Collisions.

An apparatus for preventing collisions between trains has been invented by Professor Pellat. It consists essentially of a band of traveling paper impregnated with iodide of potassium. A platinum stylus moves over the paper, and when a current of electricity passes through the stylus and the paper the iodide is decomposed, leaving a blue mark as in the Bain chemical telegraph. The current is supplied by the moving train in the following manner: The wheels press down levers placed at intervals along the rails and complete the circuit of a battery connected with the platinum stylus and paper of the apparatus, which is situated in the signal cabin. The marks thus made on the paper indicate the position of the train and enable the signal man to trace its course along the line. Having this guide as well as absolute control over the signals, he is in a position to reduce the chances of collision to a minimum, if not to render it impossible.

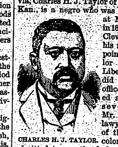
Value of Charcoal Filters.

The English claim that filters of sponge, sand or loose charcoal are only partial in their results. They prefer a porous block of pure (animal) charcoal, combining the highest known chemical with the greatest possible mechanical or straining capacity. Every soldier in hot climates is provided with one of these blocks as a part of his outfit.

A COLORED DIPLOMATIST.

Charles H. J. Taylor Has Been Honored by the Cleveland Administration.

The newly appointed minister to Bolivia, Charles H. J. Taylor of Kansas City, Kan., is a negro who was born a slave at Marion, Ala., in 1856. President Cleveland during his first term appointed Mr. Taylor minister to Liberia, but he did not like the office and resigned after serving seven months. Mr. Taylor is a lawyer and is one of the only four colored men ever admitted to practice before the United States supreme court. He is also editor of The American Citizen of Kansas City, and one of the leaders of the National Democratic league, which has its headquarters at Washington.



CHARLES H. J. TAYLOR.

He has considerable reputation as a Democratic orator. He stumped South Carolina for Wade Hampton in 1876 and matriculated at Oberlin college, of which he is a graduate, in the fall of the same year. He studied law at the University of Michigan.

In 1885, after his removal to Kansas, he was a candidate for district judge, but failed of election, though he was subsequently elected city attorney of Kansas City, Kan. He was a delegate to the Democratic national convention at St. Louis in 1888 and is proud of the fact that he was the first colored man so honored. Speaking of his appointment, Mr. Taylor said recently, "The worst they have said of me is that I am very black and have made a lot of Democratic speeches." He is reputed to be worth $50,000. The salary of the minister to Bolivia is $5,000 a year.

Some doubt has been expressed as to whether Mr. Taylor's appointment will be acceptable to Bolivians. The post has always been filled by a white man, and the white people of the country pride themselves on their pure Castilian blood, though men of mixed Indian descent now have considerable influence in the affairs of the nation and occupy many important government positions. La Paz, the capital, is among the mountains 12,000 feet above sea level. It is cold, and fuel is scarce, but the town is not otherwise a bad place to live in. The people wrap themselves up in ponchas or go to bed to keep warm, and make the most of every ray of sunshine.

A POSTAL PIONEER.

S. F. Covington Originated the Idea of Sorting Mail Matter In Transit.

Nearly everybody realizes that the importance of the railway mail service has increased wonderfully of late years, though comparatively few know that the larger part of the work of sorting mail matter is now done on the great postal trains while traveling at lightning speed. Postmasters and postoffices outside of the large cities are but incidental features of the modern system of mail delivery, of which the trunk line mail trains are by far the most important arteries.

The regular railway mail service was instituted in 1864, and credit for much of the immense improvement that has been made since then must be given to Colonel George B. Armstrong, who was placed at the head of the service in 1869. But the honor of originating the idea of sorting letters en route between cities belongs to another man and another period. The man was Samuel F. Covington and the period was 1846, when he was postmaster at Rising Sun, Ind.

S. F. COVINGTON.

Mr. Covington was editor, justice of the peace and member of the legislature and was in a position to know that the people of Rising Sun did not like their postal service. The mails came up the Ohio river by the steamboats plying between Cincinnati and Louisville, which did not stop at Rising Sun, and the mails for that place were carried past to Madison, whence they were sent back the following day. Mr. Covington thought that if the letters could be sorted on the boat it would not take long to drop the bag for Rising Sun ashore, and much vexatious delay might be saved. He wrote to President Polk's postmaster general suggesting the idea. Postmaster General Johnson adopted the suggestion placing what was then called a "traveling postmaster" on the boats to do just such work as is now done by the railway postal clerks.

The postmaster general also appointed Mr. Covington to the postmastership of Rising Sun, a position in which he displayed energy and acumen of an uncommon order, to the great edification of the citizens of Rising Sun. Mr. Covington afterward made for himself an enviable reputation among the business men of Cincinnati, and though his scheme for the sorting of mail matter in transit was abandoned after awhile its resuscitation and adoption on so huge a scale as that now in use proves how far ahead of his times he was.

ONE CURE FOR INSOMNIA.

A Man From New York State Took a Little Active Exercise on Horseback.

"I once was a sufferer from insomnia," said a dentist who lives in one of the small villages of the state, as he sat talking with other men in the sitting room of an up town hotel, "but I got rid of the trouble."

"What did you take for it?"

"Bucking pony."

"Tell us about that, please."

"Well, you see, there was nothing the matter with me only I couldn't sleep. The doctor looked me over and said I wasn't suffering from any disease that he could detect, but all the same I could get only a few catnaps every night, and I felt that I would go crazy if such a condition of affairs continued much longer. A wise friend of mine advised me to try horseback exercise. Just at that time a man had brought to the village a string of ponies from the west. As the ponies were wild they were offered for sale cheap. I bought one. He was such a sleepy looking animal that we called him Rip Van Winkle. After we knew him better we dropped part of the name and called him plain Rip. The first ride I took on him furnished excitement for the whole village. Two men helped me to saddle and mount him in the stable. When the door was opened he shot out into the street like a streak of lightning.

"He ran full against the fence opposite the stable and broke several pickets. Then he reared up on his hind legs and came near throwing me over backward. Next he tried to stand on his head, but I yanked him back on his feet and drove the spurs into him. He started to run then, and I let him go as fast as he could leg it until we got to the Methodist church at the end of the street. A temperance meeting was being held in the church and the door was open. Before I could stop the pony we were in the church and half way up the aisle. Women screamed and fainted.

"Some of the men led Rip back into the street. I didn't dare to get off his back. When the men let go of the bridle he began to buck, and for a few minutes I thought my neck would be broken. He would go at a gallop when he went at all, but he would stop now and then to indulge in some bucking. Presently he changed his tactics and went from one street to another, across lots, jumping fences, turning up flower beds, damaging gardens and keeping me busy dodging the branches of fruit trees. The next street led to a turnpike, along which I spurred him for miles until he was covered with foam and nearly tired out.

"He seemed to be docile when I got him back to the stable. Next day, however, he was nearly as bad as when I first rode him, and every day for a fortnight I was obliged to race him along the turnpike several miles. My! my! How he did buck! I was so lame at the end of two weeks that I could scarcely walk to my office, but I could sleep. A few minutes after I got into bed at night I was sleeping soundly, and I awoke every morning thoroughly refreshed."

"Do you still ride the pony?"

"No. By the time I was cured of sleeplessness I had broken Rip to ride, and I sold him for double the sum I had paid for him. My advice to anybody who is suffering from insomnia is to get a bucking pony and ride as fast as he can. If no necks are broken, both man and pony will be benefited by the treatment."—New York Tribune.

THE BOY IN THE MOW.

There glides through the barn's mammoth door
A sweet scented hilltop of hay;
An athlete, with strength bubbling o'er,
Now flings it in forkfuls away.
Another is stowing it back,
With white pearls of toil on his brow,
And, treading the hay in his track,
Looms faintly the boy in the mow.

Through crevices often can he
View, past the old barn wall of brown,
A river that leads to the sea,
A railway that drives to the town.
"Oh, when shall my fortune make hay
In yon fields of splendor, and how?
'Twill wait for full many a day:
I'm only a boy in a mow."

A cloud like a flag from the sky
Is splendidly spread and unrolled;
The sun reaches down from on high
To fringe it with silver and gold.
"Oh, when will heaven's mercy my name
As bright as those colors allow?
But earth has no glory or fame
To waste on a boy in the mow."

A cloud in the west, like a pall,
Creeps upward and hangs in the light;
It carries a gloom over all,
It looks like a part of the night.
With clamor the thunderbolts swarm,
And trees bend in agony now:
"'Tis thus, too, that poverty's storm
Would conquer the boy in the mow!"

The clouds have flown into a dream,
The birds are discoursing in glee,
The smile of the sun is agleam
On river and hilltop and tree.
Look up to the heavens, little lad,
And then to your earth duties bow,
And some day both worlds may be glad
To honor the boy from the mow!

A Newsdealer Pays For a Libel.

A libel case somewhat similar to that which Messrs. W. H. Smith successfully defended the other day has just come before one of the correctional courts in Paris. M. de Sesmaisons, a former minister plenipotentiary of the French republic at Hayti, at present residing in Paris, was annoyed at some comments upon his conduct while in America that appeared in the New York Tribune. The article spoke vaguely of his having acquired a certain notoriety and of his being irresponsible for his actions in the eye of the law.

As the New York Tribune has no property in France, M. de Sesmaisons judged it was useless to proceed against that paper, but he decided to indict M. Brontano, the proprietor of the Anglo-American library in the Avenue de l'Opera, where copies of the offending number were sold. The plaintiff asked for 50,000 francs damages.

Without admitting so extravagant a claim, the court condemned the unfortunate news agent, who quite possibly cannot read English, to pay 5,000 francs to the plaintiff, as well as a fine of 100 francs, and to insert the terms of the judgment in any 10 newspapers M. de Sesmaisons may select.—London News.

An Aluminium Bicycle.

In a window on Fulton street there is hung up for the inspection of the passerby a bicycle. It is suspended from a set of scales and the indicator registers the weight of the wheel as 18¼ pounds. This is by far the lightest bicycle which has been put on the market, and it marks another step in the evolution of the old velocipede toward the perfect bicycle. It is made of aluminium, the metal which has so lately become quite general in its use. The cost of the wheel is considerably more than that of the steel ones now in use, but after the novelty has worn off the price will probably be reduced to that of the high grade wheels of today.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Blue Monday.

A great many people have what they call blue Monday—that is, they do not fell so well then as on other days of the week. The cause is found in overeating on Sunday. A good dinner is provided and eaten, and then, instead of taking the customary exercise, the man sits about the house and reads or sleeps. Of course he feels badly the next day. If the same amount of exercise and kind of diet were taken on Sunday as all other days, there would be no such thing as a blue Monday.—Philadelphia Record.

Effect of Paris Life on American Students.

An American artist of considerable reputation, while speaking the other day with reference to the easy going Bohemian habits so common among men in his profession, said: "It is not a pleasant thing to say, but I believe it is true that a period of two or three years of student life in Paris practically ruins about as many young artists as it benefits. Student life in Europe, and especially in Paris, is full of allurements and temptations which only those capable of great self control are able to resist. It is in its social aspects a delightfully free and easy sort of life, which appeals almost irresistibly to the average young man. It develops the habit of indolence with frightful rapidity, and from indolence it is but a short step to indifference, dissipation and reckless self neglect. Convivial associations and the gay company of a colony made of kindred spirits as bright and magnetic as himself too often put his ambitions to sleep, and he drifts on and on until he becomes a spendthrift and a lounger, if nothing worse. At the end of two or three years he returns to America, his money spent, his health frequently shattered and himself so thoroughly bohemianized that he finds it difficult if not impossible ever to regain anything of the orderly, methodical habit of industry upon which his professional success depends."—New York Herald.

Mr. Labouchere's Fish Story.

If Mr. Henry Labouchere has a habit of getting into trouble, he has also a happy knack of getting out of it. For instance, the other day, after he had printed an important piece of news about the proper way to cook crawfish and a humane reader of Truth expostulated with him about his advice to the cook to cut the live fish in halves, he retorted merrily by expressing the opinion that it is ridiculous sentiment to treat creatures of low or rudimentary organizations as if they had the same susceptibility to pain as a human being, and settled the question finally by telling an anecdote about an angling friend of his who once "caught a perch foul."

The hook pierced the fish's eye. My friend felt that he had not caught the perch according to the rules of the game, so, to compensate him for losing his eye, he put him back into the water. He then baited his hook with the eye and went to work again. Within three minutes he caught that same perch again with his own eye.

This is a capital fish story. We have not heard a better tale in a long while. It is a lie of course, but all fish stories are, and it has the merits of originality and humor. We like Mr. Labouchere the better for such harmless fibs.—New York Times.

Like the Belt of the Summer Girl.

The ancient girdle was used for other material or actual purposes besides that of a receptacle for money. At it were hung the thousand and one odds and ends needed and utilized in every day affairs. The scrivener had his inkhorn and pen attached to it, the scholar his book or books, the monk his crucifix and rosary, the innkeeper his tallies, and everybody his knife. So many and so various were the articles attached to it that the flippant began to poke fun. In an old play there is mention of a merchant who had hanging at his girdle a pouch, a spectacle case, a "punniard," a pen and inkhorn and "a handkercher, with many other trinkets besides, which a merry companion seeing said it was like a haberdasher's shop of small wares." In another early play a lady says to her maid: "Give me my girdle and see that all the furniture be at it. Look that cizars, pincers, the penknife, the knife to close letters with, the bodkin, the earpicker and the scale be in the case."—Chambers' Journal.

A Handle to His Name.

"I understand," said a pompous employer to one of his clerks, "that you are in the habit of speaking of me by my Christian name?"

"It is possible that I have done so, sir," answered the clerk humbly.

"In future you will use the prefix 'Mr.' when alluding to me. I am 'George' only to my friends. Do not forget hereafter that I have a handle to my name."

"I will try to remember," said the clerk. "I know we always say George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Tom Palmer, but these are distinguished men, not everyday people, George—excuse me—Mr. Smythe," and the clerk retired to write out his resignation.—Detroit Free Press.

Pigeons Do Not Fly by Sight.

The numerous experiments made by balloonists have proved that pigeons are incapable of flying at any great height. Birds thrown out at 6,000 meters fell like dead, and even at the moderate height of 800 meters pigeons liberated by the balloonist Gaston Tissandier approached the earth in a spiral course. It is evident, hence, that they are not guided wholly by sight. To bring a point 800 miles distant within the range of vision it would be necessary to ascend nearly 20,000 meters. The carrier pigeon, starting on such a journey, must consequently start with faith in the unseen.—Philadelphia Press.

The Fickle and Raging Missouri.

The current of the Mississippi river averages from 2½ to 4 miles an hour in velocity, but a steamboatman on the Missouri would be pretty apt to call this still water, as that stream bowls along under ordinary circumstances at the rate of 8 and 10 miles an hour, and on state occasions it develops the speed of an avalanche. Engineers consider bridging the Missouri a difficult accomplishment, as the swift current is so versatile in its course and ruinous in its velocity that it is impossible to predict where the channel is liable to drift.—Alton Sentinel.

The Term Spinster.

Among our industrial and frugal English forefathers it was a maxim that a young woman should never be married until she had spun herself a set of body, table and bed linen. From this custom all unmarried women were termed spinsters, an appellation they still retain in all our law proceedings.—San Francisco Argonaut.

'Round Home.

August George returned from the Fair on Tuesday morning.

Alvah Newland, the day clerk at the Commercial, returned Tuesday from a business trip to Wisconsin.

Paul Carpenter went out to Fosston to help in Larsen, Carpenter & Co's branch house out there for a month.

O. J. Barnes has accepted the position of book-keeper for A. C. Rhinehart and has gone to Beltrami to enter upon his new duties.

Mrs. Israel Laframboise was committed to the insane asylum at St. Peter last Saturday and Chief Gonyea left on the evening train with her in charge.

Tuesday morning opened out bright and cheerful, with the first display of sunshine visible for some days. It begins to look like a spell of weather now.

Thos. Sanders of Grand Forks town was brought before Judge Benson last week, who, after the medical examination authorized the appointment of a guardian.

H. N. Wells, our jolly old "Bert," has assumed the management of the Hotel Northern, at Grand Forks, recently owned and run by the late Col. Ingalls. His many Crookston friends wish him abundant success.

Kyle and Twedten ran in a tough on Monday night that required all their nerve to handle—but they got there just the same. The amount of abuse our policemen will take and keep their temper is wonderful.

Rev. R. H. Battey and family, returned from a two weeks visit at the White city on Tuesday morning. Mr. Battey is quite enthusiastic over the big show and will, no doubt give the readers of the Message a vivid description of the whole business.

A. A. Austin and wife, of Plainville, Ohio, were visiting with Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Pierce last week. They had been over to North Dakota, where Mr. Austin is interested in real estate. He is also interested in the Wichita country—for which he is duly sorry.

A tramp crawled into a box car at Carman on Tuesday morning, built a fire in one corner and curled down down to warm himself and went to sleep beside it. Fortunately an elevator man soon after went to see that the car was ready to load and discovered the position of affairs in time to save the car, and, probably, the elevator, it was standing near. A good sized hole was burned in the floor of the car and pretty soon the tramp would have been warmed plenty.

E. M. Stanton received a telegram Saturday saying that his mother—who lives in Wisconsin—was not expected to live, and Mr. Stanton left on the evening train.

He had been hanging around Carman a few days going into people's houses and demanding food of the women folks, terrorizing them into compliance with his demand. One day last week one of E. D. Childs' men missed an overcoat and later on found it in the possession of Higgins. In the altercation that ensued Higgins was knocked down a flight of stairs. Later he was taken to the hospital where he died.

Mr. W. Gregory, of Minneapolis, the northwestern agent for the Advance Thresher Co., was in the city last week, accompanied by two gentlemen—one a member of a firm of Buenos Ayres capitalists who purchase American machinery and sell it to retailers, and the other was the New York representative of the firm. These gentlemen were brought here to see an Advance separator—with all the latest improvements—in operation, and Mr. Carpenter, of the firm of Larsen, Carpenter & Co., took the party out to see one of the machines which this firm sold here this fall. They were well pleased with the machine, and will no doubt make a large purchase from the Advance Co. This Buenos Ayres firm has a capital of $11,000,000 and pay cash for all goods upon their shipment at New York.

On Saturday last, Hon. H. Steenerson filed a complaint with the railroad and warehouse commission stating that the rates charged by the Great Northern for the transportation of grain and millstuffs from Crookston, Fisher and East Grand Forks to Minneapolis and Duluth were exorbitant, and asking that they be reduced to 12 cents per hundred to the terminal points named. The present rate on these products is 16½ cents from Crookston and 17 cents from Fisher and East Grand Forks. Steenerson sets forth in his complaint that the price of grain has declined 50 per cent in the past three years, during which time the present rates have been, in effect, and that the price of labor has decreased correspondingly. He also ventures the opinion that the cost of operating the road has decreased from 25 to 40 per cent, and that the cost of equipment has decreased 20 per cent. The officers of the company have been notified, and unless they decide to make a reduction a hearing will be arranged later.

"That "Skipped by the Light of the Moon" is one of the most amusing of comedies, all who have ever seen it will surely attest. This famous piece which will set the town laughing next Tuesday night, is a roaring vaudeville, abounding in bright and fresh repartee and laughable situations, and the company presenting it is the original Fowler and Warmington Co., which is famous throughout the country for the excellence of its presentations.

The low price of wheat this fall has not tempted many farmers to sell, and as a result none have sold except those who had no other means of raising money to pay harvesting and other pressing bills. "Skipped by the Light of the Moon," the funniest of all funny play, is coming.

When the hair begins to come out in combing, it shows a weakness of the scalp that calls for immediate attention. The best preparation to arrest further loss of hair and restore the scalp to a healthy condition is Ayer's Hair Vigor.

When catarrh attacks a person of scrofulous diathesis, the disease is almost sure to become chronic. The only efficacious cure, therefore, is Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which expels scrofula from the system and the catarrh soon follows suit. Local treatment is only a waste of time.

THE FOSSTON FAIR.

Wet Weather Seriously Interferes With the Success of the Fair.

Last Thursday over 100 Crookston people went out to Fosston to see the Thirteen Towns Fair. When they arrived it was found that there had been so much rain on Wednesday and Thursday morning as to prevent the people getting in from country, and the race track was in such a condition as to prevent any of the races being put on. So the visitors put in the time getting acquainted with the Fosstonites, and viewing the display in the Exhibition building. The grain and vegetable exhibit was splendid and everyone was surprised at the wonderful vegetables raised in the Thirteen Towns. Among the grains was a sample of white hulless barley which was particularly admired. There were huge pumpkins, mammoth cabbages, large watermelons, nice musk melons, cucumbers, tomatoes, beets, carrots, parsnips, mangolds, several varieties of potatoes, five or six kinds of beans, lots of nice juicy onions, those shown by Ellek Beaulieu being particularly noticeable. The display of corn was a pleasing feature of the exhibition, and shows that the farmers are giving more attention to the growing of corn, which means they will feed more cattle hereafter. The flint and dent corn shown was as good as that raised in corn growing states; there were also nice samples of sweet corn and pop corn.

An exhibit that created much comment was a bunch of peanuts, grown by M. Elliott, near Mentor. They seem to be matured and as good as the Tennesse product.

The ladies department was well represented and many were the specimens of fancy needlework shown. The stock exhibit was better than last year, but many of the exhibits promised did not arrive on account of the wet weather.

An exciting 100 yards foot race took place on the track between Mayor Stephens and H. F. Brown for $10 a side. The mayor surprised his friends and distanced his competitor.

Those of our citizens who attended the matinee given in the afternoon by the Columbia Theatre Co., of Grand Forks, expressed themselves as delighted with the performance. The play was a new production just out, entitled "The Drunkard's Home or Ten Nights in a Bar Room." Louis Gonyea and T. G. Thompson escaped after the second act, "just to get a smoke," they said.

The fair was continued till Saturday evening and the races were run on Saturday.

The case of Nels P. Johnson vs. Alfred Urion, Caleb W. Palmer, Frederick Sweatt and Steenerson Bros. was taken up Tuesday morning This is an action on a foreclosure of mortgage on the se¼ of the sw¼ and lot No. 6, in Sec. 28, Tp. 150, Range 47, the homestead of plaintiff.

The case of Nils P. Johnson vs. C. F. Page and Frederick Sweatt. This action is on the foreclosure of mortgage on the sw¼ of the ne¼ and the e½ of the nw¼ of Sec. 33, Tp. 150, Range 47. This land, as well as the land in the case above, was mortgaged to one Joseph Dunlap, which mortgage was assigned to Caleb W. Palmer, and by him assigned to Frederick Sweatt. Frederick Sweatt had said mortgage foreclosed and the land of plaintiff, the se¼ of sw¼, and lot 6 in Sec. 28, sold, C. F. Page being the purchaser; sale subject to redemption within one year. Rachael Johnson was formerly the wife of plaintiff. The plaintiff claims that Rachael Johnson fully paid Caleb W. Palmer all indebtedness against this land during the time he was owner of said mortgage against the land. Plaintiff asks for judgment against defendants and that said mortgage and sheriff's sale be decreed satisfied. Wm. Watts for plaintiff; A. A. Miller for defendants.

On Wednesday morning the case of Joseph Kelso vs. Carsten Stuhr was taken up. Stuhr has been a tenant on land near Euclid owned by Kelso Plaintiff claims damages resulting from defendant's not living up to contract; the proper care of buildings, plowing, etc. The defendant sets up counter claim larger than plaintiff's claim for damages for hauling plaintiff's share of grain from farm to elevators at Euclid and Buffington. The case will take all the day to finish, and is the last to be tried at this time. Wm. Watts for plaintiff; A. A. Miller for defendant.

A Pioneer Gone.

John Ross died very suddenly at his residence on Broadway at 9 o'clock on Tuesday morning of heart disease. He was taken sick Saturday evening after having partaken heartily of supper and grew steadily worse until the end came. He was born and raised in Scotland where he united with the Presbyterian church. Coming to this country in the early fifties he settled in Indiana. He came to Crookston in the spring of '79 where he lived till the day of his death, highly respected by all who knew him. It has been said of him that he had no enemies and every one who knew him was his friend. He leaves a family of four children, two boys and two girls and a wife to mourn his loss. He was a Mason of many years standing and the funeral will occur today at 2 o'clock under the auspices of the brotherhood. "Uncle John," as he was familiarly called, was for many years the trusted and faithful janitor at the court house and those who served as county officials while he was so employed unite in saying that there never was a man a more faithful official than he was and many is the deserved tribute now paid to his memory. Always kind, courteous and genial no one could have died who would be more missed than Uncle John Ross.

Took Too Much Strychnine.

A. C. Works, a farmer who lived about two miles south of Mentor, was found dead in his bed last Wednesday morning, and the neighbors who lifted the body to prepare it for burial found a bottle of strychnine in the bed. Thinking that the man might have suicided Wesley Morris came to the city Thursday for the Coroner.

Deputy Coroner Wyatt, after investigating the matter, decided that deceased met his death by taking an overdose of strychnine. Mr. Work had been ailing for about two years and had been in the habit of taking strychnine to relieve the pain. On the morning of his death he had taken a small dose, but as it failed to releive him he took another and larger dose, and died from the effects of it.

Deceased was about 60 years of age, and lived with his wife and two sons. He has another son in North Dakota, and a daughter at the hospital here.

As Long as You Live

You will regret it, if you fail to see the World's Fair at Chicago. Every one who has visited it says it is the grandest and most beautiful display of the products of science, art and industry that mankind has ever seen, and beside it all previous "world's fairs" sink into insignificance. It represents an expenditure of two hundred millions of dollars, and we shall not look upon its like again in this generation. Only three short weeks remain in which you will have the opportunity to visit it. To see, even for a week, this World's Fair, is to supplement your education, no matter how good it may have been, with invaluable information. Rates of fare are very low, and you can live in Chicago as cheaply as anywhere in America. You cannot afford to miss the Fair. Get ready to go soon, and then ask your home ticket agent for tickets reading via "The Burlington," the great scenic, vestibuled; compartment car, free reclining chair car and dining car line, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

AGAINST HAWAII.

Blount's Report Said to Be Opposed to the Annexation of the Islands.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 6.—The nature of Mr. Blount's recommendation regarding the annexation question, says a morning paper, is to the effect that no action should be taken by the United States to annex the island or establish a protectorate over it without the full consent of all the natives. The report recommends that all questions involved in annexation and establishment of a protectorate should be submitted to a vote of all natives, as well as foreigners, and upon their decision rests the future policy of the United States respecting the Hawaiian islands. If Mr. Cleveland adopts the recommendations submitted, it practically means that the queen will be restored to power, as she is said to be popular among the natives, each of whose votes is said to be equal to that of a foreigner, and would mean, further, the complete ascendency of Mr. Claus Spreckles, the sugar king.

REWARD FOR MENAGE.

A Price Put Upon the Fleeing Financier's Head.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 6.—The authorities of Hennepin county seem determined to seek out and bring to justice, Louis F. Menage, the alleged swindling head of the defunct Guaranty Loan company. It is the general belief that Menage is somewhere in Chile, and that he has an abundance of ready money with which he hopes to make himself secure. The board of county commissioners has offered a reward of $5,000 for his capture, and it is believed the city authorities and individuals will swell the total to $15,000. It is stated that Eastern parties have agreed to deliver the fleeing financier within 60 days for a proper reward.

Bombardment Ended.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—The most important news concerning the Brazilian revolution since its inception has been received by the secretary of the navy in a cable dispatch from Captain Picking, the commander of the United States cruiser Charleston, at Rio, as follows: "Admiral Mello having been informed that the government would dismount guns in the city, said he would not again fire upon the place." This undoutedly means that the bombardment of Rio Jeneiro has ended.

WEALTHY CHILDREN.

HOW THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF THE RICH ARE BROUGHT UP.

Young People Who Travel All Over the Civilized World Without Interruption to Their Studies—Plain Food and Few Sweetmeats For Most of Them.

There are in the United States about 100 children who, upon arriving at the age of maturity, will come into the possession of very large fortunes. They will each have many millions of dollars. In fact one-sixth of the wealth of the United States is supposed to be in the hands of 20 millionaire families, and each child in each family will some day own the millions that have been accumulated for it by its parents and grandparents.

The parents of the children who will some day own one-sixth of all the wealth in this country are very careful about the training and the education of these fortunate youngsters. They are bringing them up as carefully as ever the children of the royal families of England and Germany were brought up. Their teachers are selected from the best in the world, and they are taught, disciplined and drilled in a wonderful way—a way that many children would consider very hard, strict and tiresome.

These millionaire children must be well trained, because they will control many of the railroads of America, telegraph companies, and gold, silver and oil mines, besides iron interests and other great industries.

As a rule they travel a great deal, and some of them have been over our whole country.

Take the Vanderbilt children for example. They are constantly on the go. In the summer they are at Newport. Later they visit Lenox. Then they go to Europe in a private steam yacht and return just in time to spend Christmas at home. From February until June they travel through the west in a private car.

But during all these trips their studies are uninterrupted. A corps of teachers, governess and private tutors accompany them everywhere. Their studies are no more disturbed by a departure for Mexico than a public school child's studies are disturbed by a hailstorm.

Some time ago Mr. Seward Webb and his wife and children journeyed to the World's fair in a special train. They stopped to visit Mexico, Texas and California first. During all this long trip the Webb children and some little cousins who accompanied them went on with their studies as usual. There was a special car just for that purpose. The car was called the "Idler," and it was gorgeously hung with blue tapestries and fine pictures. It had a blue carpet and blue chairs, and all its furnishings suggested a daintily appointed schoolroom rather than a railroad car.

While on such trips the children are taught geography from observation, and it is easy to see that they get a fine knowledge of the country which they will some day control to a great extent.

When the W. K. Vanderbilt children are at home they are taught in a schoolroom which is beautifully decorated with Mother Goose melodies and nursery rhymes. There are also simple quotations from Shakespeare for the older children. Nothing is spared to make the book education complete.

In their daily lives, their goings and their comings and their play, nearly all of the little American aristocrats are brought up alike. And that is with extreme simplicity. They dress with one-half the elegance of other children, and they eat plainer food. Such children as these wear no jewelry at all. They do not know what it is to have gold rings, bangle bracelets and necklaces. Nor do they carry watches.

Mrs. Paran Stevens, who is a very rich woman, says that her daughter, who is now the wealthy Mrs. Arthur Paget of London and New York, went wild with delight over a simple little ring given to her when she was 18. It was her very first bit of jewelry.

Mrs. Whitney, the wife of ex-Secretary Whitney, used to make it a point to take her lunch at the children's dinner hour, and it was then that she took occasion to teach her little ones by precept and example the little elegances of manner which mark the well bred person. Mrs. Flagler, the wife of the rich Standard Oil man, goes farther and often lunches with her children in their schoolroom and devotes many hours to personal instructions.

But of course the daily life of rich children is not all discipline. Though they do not have candy and jewelry and rich clothes and rich food, they have luxuries which other children do not have. They own beautiful horses and fine dogs, all of the best breeds. A millionaire boy has his saddle horse and often his tandem team when at his country home, and some of these boys have a four in hand. When one of these boys wants a new horse, he buys one or selects one from his father's stables. He has a kennel of dogs, besides rare birds and other pets. And if he wants to own a collection of stamps or stones or butterflies or any other one thing, his father gives him money to buy the best that can be bought.

When young William Astor Chanler, who is now exploring the heart of Africa, was spending his summers at Lake George not many years ago, he was seized with a fancy for owning boats of all kinds. He wanted canoes, duck boats, yachts and launches.

And he got them all. But the children of the neighborhood used to say that "poor Willie Chanler" was never allowed to buy soda water or candy. One day the temptation to buy candy became too strong for the boy millionaire, and he marched boldly into a candy store with a company of Lake George boys at his heels.

"Give me 50 cents worth of candy," said he, "and charge it to William A."—New York Press.

HOW TO SEE THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Suggestions as to the Most Convenient and Economical Method.

When you go to the World's Fair do not take a trunk with you if you can possibly get along without it, but pack your few necessary traveling articles in a hand bag or grip and carry it along with you. You will never know what a lot of annoyance you have been spared in this way. Then get your tickets from Crookston to Chicago and the greatest Fair the world has ever seen, reading via St. Paul, and thence via "The Northwestern Line" to Chicago. The Northwestern line runs three superbly equipped trains from St. Paul to Chicago, leaving St. Paul at 8:00 a. m. daily, 6:25 p. m. daily except Sunday, 8:00 p. m. daily, making quicker time to Chicago than by any other line. When you arrive in Chicago you will find World's Fair omnibuses at the Northwestern line depot which will take you to the Van Buren street station of the Illinois Central road, where trains for the Fair leave every three minutes, and where World's Fair steamers can be taken for the Fair every ten minutes, or you can take a steam ferry from the depot of the Northwestern line direct to the same place via the Chicago river and making connections with the famous whaleback steamer Christopher Columbus for the Fair for 25 cents. When you arrive at the Fair you will find a number of first-class hotels within a stone's throw of the main entrance and dozens of good restaurants where meals can be had to accommodate the most modest purse.

By following these simple directions your trip is bound to be a pleasant one. See that your ticket from St. Paul reads via the Northwestern line, and remember that by this route you will obtain the best service, the greatest luxury, the most complete comfort. Be sure and buy your tickets at starting point.

For Cash.

You can buy a half section of land handy to the city, about 300 acres in crop and looking nicely, at $20 per acre; or if you do not have all cash we will give you figures on application at the JOURNAL office. Owner desires to engage in other business and is prepared to give a great bargain. [14-tf]

Free Homesteads.

Thousands of people are rushing into the Beautiful Saskatchewan Valley and taking up homesteads there. From Dakota, Minnesota, Michigan, and in fact from nearly every state in the union farmers are leaving in considerable numbers for the Canadian Northwest where they can find splendid land with plenty of wood for fuel and building purposes, and also good water. Only $10.00 is charged for filing and this sum comprises all a settler has to pay, nothing being charged for proving up. The farmers in the Edmonton and Prince Albert districts have been getting 65 cents per bushel for wheat all winter. Cattle sell much higher than they do here in Minnesota, and in almost every particular the farmer is better off there than he is here.

There are good railway facilities, oceans of hay and the climate is good. For particulars apply to

CURES RISING BREAST.

"MOTHER'S FRIEND" is the greatest blessing ever offered child-bearing woman. I have been a mid-wife for many years, and in each case where "Mother's Friend" had been used it has accomplished wonders and relieved much suffering. It is the best remedy for rising of the breast known, and worth the price for that alone.
